CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

VOLUME XIV.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1882.

VOLUME XIV, PART IV.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX,

FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will observe that under this proviso an amendment, when offered by a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter—for example, the Committee on Military Affairs—need only have the effect of retrenching expenditures in any manner whatever. But the Chair is not advised that this subject of the sale of public property of the United States of this nature was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Upon this point a distinction is always to be drawn. The rules intended to allow a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter to go farther than the Appropriations Committee. The latter committee is limited to propositions which are germane and which reduce expenditures in any of the three methods named. With this explanation the Chair will hear further the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] if he desires.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It will be strictly in reference to the point of order. Does not the amendment proposed reduce the appropriation from $40,000 to $30,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposes that not as an effect, but as a part of it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Chair does not consider it as an entirety but as two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not observe the rule. It provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

That is to say, the amendment must retrench expenditures ex proprio vigori, as the lawyers say. It must retrench by its own force.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask whether the amendment offered by the committee does not operate as an entirety, and whether it does not positively reduce the appropriation from $40,000 to $30,000, without saying anything of the saving hereafter to the Treasury in the maintenance of the arsenals it is proposed here to dispense with?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman fails to observe the language of the rule, namely: It must be an effect of the amendment objected to that reduces the amount covered by the bill; for otherwise any amendment would be in order when you added to it a reduction of $1, as an independent clause, and there would be no distinction between the proposition of the proviso and the proposition in the main body of the rule. It is not enough that some part of the amendment retrenches expenditure in a general way. The new legislation must do it in a special way. The Chair will keep close to the rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds in and around Washington:
For the improvement and care of public grounds, as follows:
For improving grounds south of the Executive Mansion, $15,000.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move in line 726 to strike out "15" and insert "10," and I propose that amendment for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what improvements south of the Executive Mansion call for the expenditure of $15,000? I hope he will inform this House what improvements under this appropriation were contemplated for the grounds south of the Executive Mansion? I can not imagine any required there unless it be to drain them and put them into grass. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will inform us what improvement is proposed under this appropriation to those grounds.

Mr. HISCOCK. The grounds south of the Executive Mansion are those in the direction of the river and the Potomac flats. These improvements have been going on for years, and we are told they are necessary for the health, if you please, of the people in that part of the city, as well as for the health of those who reside in the Executive Mansion.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Certainly the explanation of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is not a very clear or satisfactory one. He says these improvements have been going on for years, and that to my mind, Mr. Chairman, is one of the strongest reasons why we should now know exactly how this money is expended, so as to judge whether there is any necessity for this appropriation.

Certainly, looking at the grounds south of the Executive Mansion I would not suppose there were over a hundred acres to be improved. The appropriation here is at the rate of $150 an acre, assuming there are one hundred acres. That ought to reduce that ground to as perfect a condition, so far as vegetable decomposition and putrefaction are concerned and from which disease could arise, as would be necessary. I could take $150 an acre and put this ground in such condition there would be no fear of vegetable decomposition or putrefaction or anything deleterious to disturb the health of the people. While I am not sufficiently informed either by the answer of the chairman of the committee or what I know of my knowledge on this subject, I nevertheless insist on my amendment and will modify it so as to strike out the whole paragraph.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 41.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the country to the fact how few men are here present voting away the money of the country without proper explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. No, I will withdraw the point.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamplighters, gas-fitters, plumbers, plumbing, lamps, lamp-posts, matches, and repairs of all kinds; fuel and lights for office, stables, watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses at the nursery, $15,000: Provided, That for each 6-foot burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $22 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping in repair the lamps, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and in case a contract can not be made at that rate the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds is hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material in the lamps on the public grounds, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided further, That said officer shall not be authorized to make any contract for gas or other illuminating material, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, for any longer period than one year.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the words "$22 shall be paid per lamp," for the purpose of inquiring whether this is the same amount per lamp provided in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the city.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is precisely the same amount.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I should like to ask a question. It seems to me the language in line 779 does not read the same as we left it in the other bill. On the criticism of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] it was changed somewhat, so that in case a contract could not be made at that rate the commissioners might substitute other illuminating material.

Mr. HISCOCK. The idea of the committee on that subject was this: that for the purpose of illuminating the public grounds around the Executive Mansion and around this Capitol, it was scarcely worth while for the Government to undertake the experiment of electric light or anything of that kind. It would be on too small a scale, and therefore we did not put anything into this bill which would authorize anything of that sort in the grounds about the Capitol and the Executive Mansion until something had been done by the commissioners in the first place in the city.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think that is very wise, indeed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the building of the State, War, and Navy Departments: For clearing the site, laying foundations, building walls of the lower stories, and continuing the preparation of cut granite for the west and center wings, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, $500,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the following amendment: after the word "same," in line 806, insert the words "including the rent of necessary office room." The reason of that is that the officer who has charge of this building, or rather who is in control of its erection, has no office room in the old navy building; and it is necessary to tear that down to put in this new wing. Consequently his office room is destroyed; and this is to provide room for him during the time this work is going on.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of the Washington Monument: For marble, granite, iron frame-work, machinery, tools, labor, office expenses, and for each and every purpose connected with the completion of the monument, $150,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I had designed offering an amendment in line 808 to strike out the word "completion" and insert "for continuing," but I will leave it as it is.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think that will be better.

Mr. HISCOCK. The word "completion" has been used in this work from the beginning of the work up to this time. "For the completion" not for the final termination of it, which is a consummation most devoutly to be wished.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is always usual to put that word in when it is intended to exclude any contract beyond the mere wording of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am under the necessity of objecting to the amendment, and for this reason: that this work has been continually carried on under the heading we here find in the bill "for the completion of the Washington Monument." That has been the heading always; all of the accounts have been made under that heading. The estimates are, I think, for $50,000 or $100,000 more than we have given here. Now, if you will read further in the paragraph you will discover that provision is made—

For marble, granite, iron frame-work, machinery, tools, labor, office expenses, and for each and every purpose connected with the completion of the monument, $150,000.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is pending, as the Chair understands, and this debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 810, after the word "expenses," insert the words "including the rent of necessary office-rooms."

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, Mr. Chairman, while this amendment is pending, to ask the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill if he can inform the committee at what time in the future, near or remote, this monument is likely to be finished? The American people are getting a little anxious to get this thing done, and they want to know when that consummation is to be reached. I hope the gentleman has estimates of such a character as will enable him to give us the information we seek and let us into the secret as to when this thing is to be finished?

Mr. HISCOCK. My understanding is that it will be finished or completed in two years from the 1st of next July.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I am prepared to give the gentleman from Illinois the most positive assurance on this point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have investigated the subject with a great deal of care, and I can give the gentleman this information without the least doubt in the world as to its accuracy.

Mr. SPRINGER. That information is very satisfactory to me and will be, I am sure, to the country. [Laughter.] And I am glad to know that there is a time to which we may look forward with the hope of seeing this monument completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS.

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at military posts, as follows: At Fort Colville, Washington Territory, $50,000; for the establishment of reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000; at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, $52,000; at Fort Grant, Arizona, $60,000; at Atlanta, including purchase of necessary ground, $75,000; at Fort Douglas, Utah, $12,000; in all, $324,000.

Mr. VALENTINE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 817, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Fort Niobrara, Nebraska, $25,000."

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, the estimate made by the Secretary of War and forwarded to the Committee on Appropriations for the continuance of the building at this fort is $63,000. The total amount asked for by the Secretary of War for all of these fortifications was something over one and one-half millions of dollars; but the committee have for some reason seen proper to reduce it to less than one-half a million dollars, leaving out entirely any appropriation for this fort.

Now, Fort Niobrara is located on the extreme northern boundary of Nebraska, on the line between the settlements in the northern part of the State and the large reservation in the Territory of Dakota, where there are more than 25,000 Indians. It is the only means of defense of the settlers in that part of the State of Nebraska in case of an outbreak of these Indians. I know it is a part of the programme of the commanding officer of that department, as well as the Lieutenant-General and General of the Army, to consolidate these posts as far as possible, and do away with a large number of them altogether. But they have selected Fort Niobrara to be continued as the only post in that region, and made an estimate in accordance with that determination. It is absolutely necessary that this should be completed, and I hope therefore that there will be no objection to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 21.

So (there being no further count demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the word "five," in line 821; and I do this that I may ask the chairman of the committee whether this clause is evidence of a policy to be adopted by the Government in the expenditure of these large sums of money at these posts? Or, in other words, whether these expenditures provided for in this bill are the first that have been made at these posts?

Mr. HISCOCK. In part, yes; and in part, no. At Fort Colville, in Washington Territory, which is upon our extreme northwestern border, there has been an old fort of that name, and it is not intended to expend any of this money upon the old fort. It has been, I think, absolutely abandoned. It is a point, however, where the Government deems it absolutely necessary to keep a certain number of troops.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask if it is not the purpose of the Military Committee to offer an amendment providing for the sale of property no longer required for the purposes of these forts?

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has closed his remarks, it seems to me the Government in this bill is appropriating large sums of money at these different posts and that these are but the beginnings of expenditures that will not fail to be very large. What may be to-day a desirable and eligible military post out on the frontier may not ten years from now be a desirable military post, and the making of these expenditures in the way of temporary perishable buildings is a policy the wisdom of which may be very well questioned.

Now, $50,000 is a very large sum to be appropriated for improvements at a post practically abandoned and practically outside of the range of military headquarters. We have here $324,000 appropriated, not for the construction of forts but simply for improvements about forts, some of which are substantially abandoned and which will soon become useless to the Government. There ought to be something fixed in the character of these points at which so much money is expended.

Take for instance the Department of Dakota, embracing the Territory of Dakota and the State of Minnesota largely. There are permanent works at Fort Snelling—very properly; and these are to be of the like kind, and these appropriations are looking to the same end touching these other places. Now if these other places are as well selected and as well fixed by nature as Fort Snelling, in the Department of Dakota, very well. I would like to hear the gentleman from New York give something of a military statement touching these positions and the part they play in the grand arrangement.

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is any subject in the world in reference to which I feel I am entirely competent to speak, learnedly and exhaustively, it is on this subject of the location of military forts. [Laughter.]

The Secretary of War and the General of the Army submitted to the Committee on Appropriations estimates amounting in the aggregate to $1,700,000 in round numbers. They said the purpose was, in these days of railroads, to locate military posts at railroad centers or where they could be reached by railroads in the West and on the extreme northwestern boundary with Canada, and at other points, so that the troops could be concentrated at those points. They said they believed that to a large extent the day of Indian hostilities had passed and the troops were to be concentrated at these points, always to be within call, but not to be scattered or maintained in the scattered condition in which they are now. They submitted to us a list of fortifications, barracks, or forts—call them by whatever name you please—for the construction of which they asked an appropriation of $1,700,000. After repeated interviews with these gentlemen we finally picked out these military posts indicated in this paragraph, at a cost of something near $350,000, and concluded to appropriate the money for them.

Thoroughly convinced that upon this theory of theirs, which we believed to be a proper and wise theory, of the concentration of troops at a given point, from which they could be sent in case of an emergency to the scene of hostilities—convinced that this was a wise policy, we concluded to adopt the scheme to the extent of giving the money for these posts. Now, take this one on the northwestern frontier. They say this of it:

From Fort Assinaboine, on the upper sources of Milk River, a tributary of the Missouri, to Puget Sound—a distance of more than a thousand miles—we have no fort or military establishment on the northern frontier. One such is deemed all-important, both to prevent Indian complications as well as trouble with lawless white men, who always exist on the national borders, who commit depredations on one side and escape to the other. We always hold the authorities of the Canadian Dominion to a prompt account for the depredations of their Indian and half-breed marauders, and should, in fairness, be prepared to keep reasonably good order on our side. The building of our Northern Pacific Railroad has filled that region with a lawless class, who will surely compromise our Government unless we are prepared to repress them promptly. For this purpose we need a military post somewhere between the Flathead agency, in Montana, and Puget Sound, preferably at some point near old Fort Colville. We succeeded to that post from the old Hudson Bay Company about 1848, and have patched it up from time to time, but at last it has become simply untenable, the buildings rotting down, and has been abandoned. The purpose is to select a new site near the Dominion border, either at old Fort Colville or some point in that region, before the land is taken up by settlers, who are only too willing to make a homestead entry and thereafter make the United States pay roundly for it. We now propose to select the best site available before it is too late, and thereon erect a post for two companies of cavalry or infantry, to form a nucleus for a larger establishment in the near future. The sum asked for is the minimum possible.

Mr. MCCOOK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MCCOOK. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the report of General Sherman. It furnishes a very distinct and conclusive answer to his suggestions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend in line 820 by inserting the word "Georgia" after the word "Atlanta."

Mr. VALENTINE. That is very much needed down there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCOOK. I desire now to offer a substantial amendment. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the word "dollars," in line 823. I hope before the amendment is read the committee will be in order, as it is quite lengthy and I do not desire to have it read more than once.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

At the end of line 823 add the following:

"That all lands reserved for military purposes which, in the opinion of the President, may be no longer desirable for such purposes, or so much thereof as he may designate, shall be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior to be disposed of: Provided, That said lands shall not be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior until the direction of the President therefor shall have been filed in the Interior Department: Provided also, That said lands shall not be subject to location by warrant or scrip of any description, nor to the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States: And provided further, That said lands sl all not be sold until they shall have been surveyed and platted under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and appraised by three competent men to be appointed by him and their appraisal approved by the President of the United States. And said lands shall be sold at public sale to the highest bidder for cash and shall not be sold at less than their appraised value and in such subdivisions as may be most advantageous to the Government, no subdivision to exceed one hundred and sixty acres."

Mr. VALENTINE. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McCOOK. Let us hear what the point of order is.

Mr. VALENTINE. It changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. McCOOK. Tell us what existing law it changes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does it come from any committee?

Mr. McCOOK. It comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say that this proposition has been fully investigated by the Committee on Appropriations, and I am authorized by that committee to accept it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I still maintain my point of order. If there was only a portion of the proposition offered I should not object to it; but the idea of taking all our military reservations in the West and throwing them open to the people of the whole country is something I object to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire if this subject was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. McCOOK. It was, and this is the unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. VALENTINE. It would seem to be implied from the question asked by the Chair of the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] that if the Committee on Military Affairs have passed upon this proposition it may go on a general appropriation bill, and not be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proviso of the rule which was read not long since.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would be glad to hear it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will observe that the only question under that provision of the rule is whether the proposed amendment retrenches expenditures.

Mr. VALENTINE. I say it does not upon its face retrench expenditures. To be in order the amendment must carry upon its face the fact that it will retrench expenditures.

Mr. McCOOK. I will read on that point the opinion of the former Secretary of War, Mr. Ramsey, of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not know that the opinion of the former Secretary of War has anything to do with the point of order.

Mr. McCOOK. The gentleman asked the question whether it retrenched expenditures. I am going to give him the opinion of a former Secretary of War in regard to that point. Of course I have no personal knowledge of it, and I simply quote the opinion of one who I suppose was competent to give an opinion upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] on that point.

Mr. McCOOK. Secretary Ramsey said:

There are a number of military reservations which are of no further use for military purposes, and every year the number increases. It is the custom of the Secretary of War to report such cases to Congress as soon as they are brought to his notice and ask for authority to transfer the reservations to the custody of the Secretary of the Interior for sale or disposition under the general land laws. As a rule several years elapse before such authority is granted, and in the mean time trespassers come upon the reserves as soon as the troops leave, and when ejected they appeal to the Department to reinstate them in the possession of land to which oftentimes they have no shadow of claim. These claims are a source of constant annoyance; and in addition—

This is what I wish to call attention to—

And in addition there is the expense of an agent——

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the Chair will preserve order so that we can hear the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until the committee comes to order.

Mr. McCOOK. I am simply reading this because the Chair requested me to, not because I believe the committee are listening to me or will listen to me.

I was just coming to the point to which I desired the attention of the Chair. Now, Mr. Chairman, just between us [laughter]—

These claims are a source of constant annoyance; and in addition there is the expense of an agent to take care of each "abandoned" reservation.

I therefore claim that on the face of the amendment, on the face of the proposition to dispose of these abandoned reservations, it is shown that the expense of an agent to take care of each reservation will be got rid of, and therefore it will retrench expenditures.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] provides for the appointment of an appraiser and makes provisions for expenditures in the disposition of these reservations, expenditures quite as large as might be had under the agency system to which he alludes.

Now, I insist that the Chair will be unable to determine whether there will be any retrenchment of expenditures by the adoption of this proposition. I am radically opposed to its adoption; it is all wrong. I wish to be heard for a moment upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. McCOOK. That is just where we want to get you; on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let us confine this debate to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think this amendment is in order. The Chair will recollect that when these rules were adopted the House sought to limit the power of the Committee on Appropriations as such to place legislation upon appropriation bills.

Therefore it provided, in the clause of Rule XXI to which reference has often been made, that legislation to be in order must retrench expenditures in one of three ways. And the Chair has very properly held strictly to the wording of that clause of the rule for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the House in adopting the rule.

Now, as to the proviso to that rule, which permits legislation upon general appropriation bills, upon the report of different committees of the House, the construction of the proviso has always been liberal and not strict. If a proposition is made which fairly upon its face or by fair intendment will retrench expenditures in any way the practice of the Chair has been to hold it in order and allow the Committee of the Whole to vote upon it. To a certain extent, to a very large extent, we are proceeding legitimately under the recommendation of different committees of the House to legislate upon appropriation bills for the public interest.

Now, does this amendment retrench expenditures? It provides for the sale of military reservations which have become useless, which are not productive to the Government, which are an item of expense for their care. To my mind the amendment clearly comes within the proviso of Rule XXI.

Mr. VALENTINE. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment itself indicates that it will increase expenditures. It provides for the appointment of appraisers, for the payment of surveys and many other things which directly tend to increase rather than diminish expenditures. I do not think it allowable for a committee to place upon a general appropriation bill any legislation that it pleases under the clause cited by the Chair. In the first place it must be germane, which in my opinion this certainly is not; and it must reduce the amount of money covered by the bill. That is the language of the rule.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, by the last clause of the third paragraph of Rule XXI it is provided—

That it shall be in order to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

That particular clause goes to the subject of the general reduction of expenditures. The other clauses give the Appropriations Committee power over subject-matters which are not generally committed to them, but which require expenditures in detail. But when an amendment comes from a committee which has appropriate charge of the subject, either by the nature of its general jurisdiction or under a reference by the House, then that rule broadens and embraces every matter which looks generally toward the reduction of expenditures.

Now, the provision to which this amendment is offered is a part of a system entered upon by the military authorities of this Government—the Secretary of War and the commanding general—for the purpose of retrenching expenditures in the maintenance of military posts. A part of the scheme is embraced in the provision of the paragraph itself. Instead of asking appropriations for numerous posts scattered all along the line of our boundaries, it concentrates these posts at railroad centers, where it is intended in the future to mass our troops so that they may be sent out to other points as necessity may require. Thus along the Rio Grande frontier, instead of a dozen subordinate posts we authorize but two posts, one at El Paso, the other at San Antonio—both railroad centers, from which other points may be readily reached. Thus at Atlanta, a high and healthy point in the southern country with a salubrious atmosphere, the troops for the Southern States are according to this plan to be massed so as to be sent out by railroad as occasion may require.

This is a system of general retrenchment of expenditures recommended by the Secretary of War and the commanding general. So far as the Committee on Appropriations had authority they have put it in their bill originally. But it is not complete unless some other committee acts upon it and carries it out. In order to carry out this reduction of expenditures the Military Committee comes in and acting strictly under the rule submits this provision for the sale and disposal of those posts which have been abandoned. It is a part of the general system of reduction, and therefore strictly in order.

I have said that the proposed amendment is strictly in accordance with the rule and with proper legislation. We have done everything that the Committee on Appropriations was authorized to do; that is the initiation of this retrenchment. Now, the Military Committee comes in and adds its appropriate clause, the subject-matter being one over which it has jurisdiction, and carries the plan of retrenchment to its legitimate end; for it can not be denied that it is in the line of retrenchment to consolidate these posts; and when they are consolidated and two-thirds of them abandoned, it can not be denied that it is in the line of retrenchment for the Government to dispose of them properly and under such restrictions as the legislative power may prescribe.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must beg gentlemen now to be brief, as he has already heard the point of order very fully discussed on both sides. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] who has not spoken.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish simply to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] whether, under the rules of the House, either the Appropriations Committee or the Military Committee has any control whatever over the sale of public lands or any other property of the United States. This entire provision, as I understand, is for the sale of the public domain. I wish to inquire whether either of these committees has any control over the sale or disposition of any public property.

Mr. ROBESON. I admit, if the gentleman puts to me that question, that these are lands owned by the United States; but they are not in the general sense the same lands that we call "public lands;" being originally a part of the public lands, or having been purchased from individuals, they have been appropriated by the Government for military purposes. Therefore it is a proper part of the jurisdiction of the Military Committee to recommend to the House the abandonment of them, and if possible their sale.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now rule upon the question, having heard it discussed sufficiently at length.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me just one word? In the decision made by Mr. Speaker Kerr, in the Forty-fourth Congress, it was stated that the Chair would take cognizance of the reports of the various Departments of the Government, of existing laws, and of the rules and proceedings of the House. The gentleman from New York has quoted one of the reports of the Department showing that there would be a retrenchment of expenditures in the discharge of the custodians of this property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the reading of the first part of the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 823, insert:

"That all lands reserved for military purposes, which, in the opinion of the President, may be no longer desirable for such purposes, or so much thereof as he may designate, shall be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior to be disposed of."

The CHAIRMAN. This is the first branch of the amendment, and the first question is whether this is germane to the paragraph of the bill under consideration. That paragraph is headed "military posts," and it provides for several of these posts. The amendment providing for others has already been entertained. The Chair is of the opinion, therefore, that it is germane to the subject-matter of the paragraph.

Further than that, even these stations and posts for which appropriation is made are included within the discretionary power given to the President.

Being germane, the next question is whether it is reported by a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the Chair takes the statement of the gentleman from New York that the subject-matter has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCOOK. What does the Chair mean by that?

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not think the gentleman will say that it has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked whether this had been referred to that committee, and understood the gentleman from New York to say that it had.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think the Chair asked whether it had been under consideration by that committee, and I do not think it was ever referred to that committee under the rule.

Mr. McCOOK. What rule does the gentleman refer to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs again to make inquiry whether he misunderstood the gentleman to say that this subject was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. McCOOK. Referred by whom or in what manner?

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the gentleman to say.

Mr. VALENTINE. Was it referred by bill or resolution?

Mr. McCOOK. There was no bill or resolution so far as I know referring this to the Committee on Military Affairs. But, sir, the President's message time and again has called the attention of Congress to the subject, and the subject-matter is involved in the President's message and the accompanying letter of the Secretary of War, which have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question is have they gone to the Military Committee? Does the chairman of the committee, or any gentleman of that committee, state this subject-matter was before that committee by any paper coming either from the President or the Secretary of War?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; I say so.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs now states the subject-matter was referred to his committee, and the Chair accepts that statement.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the rule before him.

Mr. CONVERSE. The rule says it shall be proposed legislation which is referred to the committee. This is not proposed legislation which has been referred to the Military Committee.

Mr. McCOOK. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the rule before he is through.

Mr. McCOOK. Wait a moment until I can show the subject-matter was before the Military Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not undertake to decide until gentlemen have closed the debate.

Mr. McCOOK. The Chair asked me a question and I have been trying to answer it correctly and intelligently. This subject-matter has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in the ordinary and usual method in which such matters go to committees of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already had the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the subject-matter was referred to that committee, and it desires to hear nothing further on that point.

Mr. McCOOK. If the Chair will pardon me I will read a few words from the President's message transmitted to the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War upon the subject of abandoned military reservations, and renewing his former recommendation for such legislation as may provide for the disposal of military posts which are no longer needed for military purposes.

That is signed by Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now proceed to decide the point of order. The first clause of the amendment as stated is germane. It appears the committee reporting this amendment has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

The remaining question, as to whether it retrenches expenditure, has to be decided. In answer to the point made that other expenses are to be incurred in executing the law, the Chair does not regard that as objectionable. It is proposed to substitute a temporary expenditure for a permanent one, and further it may include the very posts for which appropriations are made in the bill by the terms of the amendment. The Chair therefore thinks it comes fairly within the provision at the end of subdivision 3 of Rule XXI.

Further, the Chair will state the distinction taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized by the Chair as an important one—that the previous clauses of the subdivision are very restrictive of the power of the Committee on Appropriations and are in favor of committees having regular and legitimate jurisdiction of the interests involved. This amendment seems to the Chair to meet the demands of the proviso including retrenchment, as certified by the letter of the Secretary of War, and he is of the opinion that it is in order and so decides.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to be heard for a moment on the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. No action being desired further on the point of order, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL].

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not suppose the Military Committee or the Committee on Appropriations will desire to incorporate into this bill a provision touching these military reservations which will work a hardship to the settlers. The policy of the Government hitherto has been, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, for Congress to pass a special act throwing the military reservation in question open to settlement under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States. You will mark the proviso under discussion is an absolute overthrow of the policy of the Government from time immemorial.

Heretofore whenever a military reservation, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, has been abandoned it has always throughout the entire history of the Government been made by act of Congress a part of the public domain and thrown open to pre-emption and homestead settlement. Now it is proposed to say that those reservations shall no longer be opened to pre-emption and homestead settlement. That is one of the subdivisions of this proviso sought to be incorporated into this bill. But, on the other hand, they are to be appraised and sold as provided here, in opposition to the policy that has long prevailed.

Some of these reservations, as I know, Mr. Chairman, embrace many square miles, hundreds of thousands of acres of land; and upon these reservations settlers have gone—squatters they are called technically—but always in its legislation heretofore Congress has regarded their rights and provided for them in making disposition of such property; and among the very first acts of the Forty-second Congress, after I became a member of Congress, there was passed a bill opening up a military reservation to the homestead and pre-emption settlers. In that bill, at the time I refer to, provision was made that the persons found there who had made settlement under the homestead and pre-emption law, or the squatters upon this reservation, were to be protected in the rights which they had acquired by residence and occupation; and the very bills themselves protected these squatters on these reservations and provided that they were to have the right to perfect their entry and acquire title. The bills making these posts or reservations part of the public domain always so provided. It is here proposed practically in this bill to scoop out of the vast domain of the Republic a large amount of public land, and instead of allowing those lands to be opened, as the spirit of the law requires, to homestead and pre-emption entry, which is the settled policy of this Government, a new proposition is brought forward providing that these lands shall be taken away from the right of settlement and sold under an appraisement ordered to be made, thus depriving these settlers of their acquired rights of occupancy.

Mr. McCOOK. Because they have not acquired any rights.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am for one terribly opposed to a change in our policy in this respect. It is all wrong, and it is open to corrupt practices; it is open to fraud, and it is open to bad government. I trust this committee will not force us into a policy so radically new and so radically different from the homestead and pre-emption principle which we have always followed so steadily in the disposition of our public lands.

Mr. DAWES. Are the lands here referred to settled to any extent?

Mr. DUNNELL. Upon some of these reservations there are old settlers, four, five, and ten years on the lands. They have made settlements upon them and have recognized homes which they have established there. It is now proposed by this amendment to oust them and forfeit their titles. I hope the committee will do nothing of the kind. I hope our public-land policy will not be changed at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. McCOOK. It is proposed to oust them because they are trespassers and have no more right to the lands which they have taken up in this manner than they would have to take possession of my property or any other man's property in any part of the United States.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let me answer that objection of the gentleman from New York. They withdrew these lands as a military reservation and threw them open to these homesteaders and pre-emptioners. They continued on them I think in many instances all the time that it was occupied as a military reservation. But they were finally abandoned as such, and by this amendment you prospose to take the lands which they have acquired in this manner by long settlement and sell them by appraisement.

Mr. McCOOK. For the very reason, as I have said, that they have no right to the land.

Mr. VALENTINE. But they went and settled upon the lands before they were withdrawn for military purposes.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered by the authority of the Committee on Military Affairs will affect thirty-seven of the military reservations of this country, containing in round numbers 600,000 acres of land, which are affected by it should it become a law. Ever since the organization of the Government it has always been the custom of the President of the United States to declare and set aside by proclamation certain parts of the public domain for military reservations; and those acts of the President have time and again been ratified by Congress. A judicial decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 13 Peters, I think, is to the effect that after these reservations have been once declared by the President of the United States they can not be used for any other purpose save that of military reservations, except by an act of Congress surrendering them back to the public domain. That, I think, is a complete answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Minnesota, who allege that the passage of such a law as this will affect the rights, as they choose to call them, of men who have settled upon these military reservations without authority of law.

Many of these posts immediately after they had been abandoned by the military authorities were at once occupied by squatters in the vicinity who have clustered around the posts; because it is not necessary for me to tell the committee that in the progress of this country, as a rule, the military reservations of the country, the Army being the great pioneer, are upon the very best lands in the West; and some of the most populous communities and the richest cities of the West today owe their existence to the fact that originally they were military posts. Large settlements clustered around them, which grew in importance as the country became more thickly settled; so that as soon as these lands were abandoned for military purposes these people settling in the vicinity have taken possession of the land and claimed to hold it under the homestead and pre-emption laws. This was done before these lands by act of Congress had been given back to the public domain. Now they come to Congress and claim the same right as the regularly authorized settlers upon the public lands. According to my views I repeat that they have no more right to do that than they would have to go and locate upon my property, if I had any, in the city of New York, or any other man's property.

Every Secretary of War for the last ten years, so far as I have any knowledge, has recommended the passage of some general law of this kind. The present Secretary of War recommends it; the General of the Army recommends it; and the Military Committee in taking charge of this question has thrown around the sale of this property all of the checks and guards that could possibly be thrown around it so as to prevent combination, so as to prevent men who had squatted upon the property from claiming any right; so that the Government of the United States should have the benefit of the sale of these lands to the highest bidder for cash, in small subdivisions of one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

As has been stated by my colleague on the Military Committee, all Secretaries for many years past have recommended that these lands be turned over to the Land Department to be disposed of. If this bill or this amendment is not passed it goes over another Congress. It is absolutely in the interest of the Government that these abandoned reservations be turned over for settlement and sale.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. With pleasure.

Mr. DUNNELL. Have these Secretaries recommended the manner of the disposition of these lands in addition to the request that they be turned over?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In some instances they have. They have recommended in certain instances that they be devoted to certain school purposes or delivered for certain other purposes. But our committee have acted upon this matter from this standpoint, that these posts are more valuable than common lands. Many of these reservations are wooded, covered with valuable timber in some instances, and having valuable water privileges in some instances. They are the best lands which have been selected in these regions. It is believed by our committee that the best, the most equitable, and the most incorruptible manner of disposing of these lands is to have them properly appraised and sold at public sale.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. DUNNELL. For what purpose does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. HISCOCK. For the purpose of adjourning.

Mr. McCOOK. Does the gentleman propose to rise before having a vote on the pending amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CALKINS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC., BY SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask the gentleman from New York to withhold for a moment the motion to adjourn. I desire to ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for present consideration.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. CONVERSE. The purpose of the resolution is to authorize the loaning of tents for the national soldiers and sailors' reunion at Columbus, Ohio. It is the usual resolution.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that the joint resolution is offered simply for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which will be reported.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution to authorize the loan of tents and the firing of salutes at the soldiers and sailors' national reunion, Columbus, Ohio, in 1883.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War is authorized to deliver to the officers of the Ex-Soldiers and Sailors' Association, at Columbus, Ohio, five hundred hospital tents and equipments or their equivalents for the use of ex-soldiers and sailors during their national reunion at said city in the summer of 1883, the said officers giving security for the safe return in good condition of the said property at the close of said reunion. And he is further authorized to direct the firing of such salutes at Columbus barracks as may be proper and the said officers desire during said reunion.

Mr. STEELE. I object to the present consideration of the resolution unless I am permitted to offer as an amendment a bill which has been reported by the Military Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. CONVERSE. Oh, no; he merely desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to offer as an amendment a bill which has been favorably reported by the Military Committee and is now on the Calendar to loan tents for a soldiers' reunion in Colorado.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be subject to amendment if there is no objection to its present consideration. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection, and the joint resolution (H. Res. 357) was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] now offers an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I suggest it would be better for the gentleman from Indiana to pass his bill as a separate bill. There would be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair it is impossible at this moment to find the bill referred to by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. Then I offer as an amendment that 1,000 tents——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to send up his amendment in writing.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MANNING, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD certain remarks in addition to those he submitted this evening in support of his amendment in reference to the National Board of Health. [See Appendix.]

NATIONAL BANK AT WEST GREENVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. MILLER. While the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is looking for his bill or preparing his amendment there is a bill on the Speaker's table which has passed the Senate that I should like to have taken up.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do you allude to the bonded bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. No, sir. The bill simply strikes the word "West" out of the name of a bank in Pennsylvania. It has passed the Senate, and a similar bill is recommended by the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does it develop American labor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration a Senate bill, which the Clerk will read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2490) to change the name of the First National Bank of West Greenville, Pennsylvania, to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania.

Be it enacted, &c., That the name of the First National Bank of West Greenville, Pennsylvania, shall be changed to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania, whenever the board of directors of such bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, confirmed by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders, and cause a copy of such action duly authenticated to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That such acceptance be made within six months after the passage of this act, and that all expenses incident to the proposed change, including engraving, shall be borne and paid by said bank.

SEC. 2. That all the debts, demands, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the First National Bank of West Greenville shall devolve upon and inure to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania, whenever such change of name is effected.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC., BY THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] to the joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the Grand Army of the Republic, to assemble in the city of Denver in August next, 1,000 tents, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, upon the execution of a sufficient bond for the safe return of the property without expense to the United States for transportation and for the compensation of the Government for any of said property not returned in like good order as when received from the Government.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRENTS: Memorial of the Legislature of Idaho Territory, relative to the services rendered by certain volunteers in the Nez Percé Indian war; also in relation to the construction of a military road—severally to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. G. R. DAVIS: The petition of Hon. W. M. Eagan, C. W. Elphicke, and 30 others, marine underwriters and vessel-owners of Chicago, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine, Life-Saving, and Marine Hospital services to the Navy Department, and also against the establishment of a mercantile bureau in the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HEILMAN: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Indiana, asking an extension of the arrears-of-pension act—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUK: The petition of Alfred Harrison and others, for an appropriation for the improvement of Clinch River in Tennessee—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of C. W. Hall, of Knox County, Tennessee—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HUTCHINS: Two petitions signed by citizens of New York, asking the passage of the resolution to repeal article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States—severally to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LADD: The petition of citizens of Bangor, Maine, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of P. B. S. Pinchback, for allowance of expenses of contest in the Forty-third Congress—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WASHBURN: Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking that the headwaters of the Minnesota River be embraced in the reservoir system—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WEBBER: The petition of merchants, owners, and masters of vessels at Muskegon, Michigan, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the same committee.

The following petitions and other papers relating to tariff legislation were presented, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. BAYNE: The resolutions adopted at a meeting of workingmen of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. ERRETT: The resolutions adopted at a meeting of workingmen, held at Arsenal Park, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. N. J. HAMMOND: Of Mack Gardner and others and of Thomas Spear and others, of Georgia.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Of C. H. Cappellar and 79 others of Farragut, Iowa.

By Mr. MONEY: Of citizens of Noxubee County, Mississippi.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Of John Wannamaker, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 21, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Journal is very long; it is full of details which are printed in the RECORD. Probably no Senator would object to dispensing with the reading.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I do not think we should be ready to do business if the reading should be suspended.

Mr. HOAR. Petitions, &c., can be presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves to dispense with the reading of the Journal. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the reading is dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Patents asking an appropriation of $1,000 to make inquiries concerning the public use or sale of inventions; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWELL presented joint resolutions of the General Assembly of New Jersey relating to the fisheries on the seacoast of that State; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolutions to Congress asking relief and protection to citizens along the seacoast of New Jersey from steam-yacht menhaden fishing with purse-seines.

Whereas the inhabitants along the seashore of New Jersey have been in the habit of catching, in addition to other food-fish, large quantities of menhaden or mossbunkers, used by many for food; and

Whereas the menhaden are naturally inclined to draw toward the beach, and being a principal "feed" for other and better grades of food-fish the latter naturally follow the "feed," thereby affording those residing contiguous to the ocean favorable opportunities for securing the means of subsistence, and also of furnishing the home market, with its increasing demands along the entire coast as well as that of the country and cities, with a very important article of food; and

Whereas the said citizens, residing aforesaid—especially those accustomed to the occupation of fishing in the ocean adjacent to the beach—have been and are being greatly injured in their business by men fishing with steamers and purse-seines from other States and Territories, who operate their machinery within a few hundred yards of the beach, by which means the life-time business and dependence for subsistence of a worthy, useful, and needy class of citizens are being destroyed, the people deprived of a luxury and needed article of food and the eastern section of the State of its natural sources of revenue and income; and while the aforesaid citizens neither ask nor seek any special immunities or franchises they are not willing to concede under similar circumstances to citizens of any other State, and realizing that they have no means of competing with or protecting themselves against so formidable an enemy, they feel compelled to seek relief and protection from the power they believe can render it: Believing, therefore, as we do, that the General Government exercises jurisdiction over the waters of the Atlantic Ocean a sufficient distance from the beach to answer all practicable purposes: Therefore,

1. Be it resolved by the senate and general assembly of the State of New Jersey, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they are hereby, respectfully and urgently requested to use their influence and best endeavors for and urge such action as it may be the prerogative and right of Congress to adopt in order to afford the necessary relief and protection to the aforesaid citizens of New Jersey, by prohibiting the mode and means of fishing referred to for a reasonable distance from the beach, that the natural rights and privileges enjoyed by said citizens for time immemorial may be continued and guaranteed to them.

2. And be it resolved, That his excellency the governor of this State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to transmit to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a certified copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the same resolution of the General Assembly of New Jersey, which I have received, and move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a remonstrance of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, merchants, ship-owners, and a large number of leading citizens, George T. Vaughan, William H. Sire, John H. Broughton, and many others, representing the business interests immediately concerned, remonstrating against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy, and stating their reasons at considerable length. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Zanesville, Ohio, favoring the passage of the Tariff Commission bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the Sherman Grange, No. 1539, of Harrison County, Missouri, and a petition of the Chilly Grove Grange, No. 180, of Schuyler County, Missouri, asking the establishment of a secretary of agriculture; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2485) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point within five miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, to report it without amendment. I will submit a written report to-morrow morning. I have it not at my desk now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave will be granted to the Senator to submit a report to-morrow.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 347) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Godlove S. Orth, have instructed me to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. From the same committee I report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 349) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, of Illinois, without amendment, and with the recommendation that it pass. I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE NEWBURGH CENTENNIAL.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's Headquarters, at Newburgh, New York, have instructed me to report it favorably and without amendment, and I request its immediate consideration.

The committee unanimously reported the resolution. It is in alteration of a resolution passed last July, which appropriated $25,000. So we are not asking for any more money. Ten thousand dollars of it was to be devoted to a monument and the remainder to the purchase of certain ground and the expense of the celebration. The committee of Congress charged with a partial supervision of the matter thought it better to devote the whole $25,000 to the monument and leave the expense of the celebration and the other local matters to the State of New York and the Newburgh local committee. That committee and the Congressional committee in conference with the Secretary of War decided upon this division of the labor. We recommend that the entire sum given last July be devoted to the monument, and New York State and the city of Newburgh will then take care of the local purchases and of the celebration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OATH OF NAVAL RECRUITS.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2486) to authorize the requirement of an oath as to age from recruits for the Navy before enlistment, and in the case of minors, from their parents or guardians, and to empower certain officers of the Navy to administer such oaths, to report it with an amendment. The committee recommend the passage of the bill as amended, and I should like to have it passed now, if possible.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that recruits for the Navy may be required, before enlistment, to make oath or affirmation as to their age, to the best of their knowledge and belief; and, in the case of minors, certificates of consent may be required from parents or guardians, with oath or affirmation as to date and place of birth. These oaths may be taken before any commissioned officer of the Navy authorized to enlist recruits.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was to strike out lines 8 and 9, as follows:

These oaths may be taken before any commissioned officer of the Navy authorized to enlist recruits.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Any commissioned officer of the Navy authorized to enlist recruits is hereby empowered to administer all such oaths or affirmations and certify the same, with the same effect as if administered and certified by a civil magistrate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if it would not be proper to put in a proviso here, that where minors are enlisted in the service contrary to the provisions of the law, without the consent of their parents, they shall be discharged on the application of their parents?

Mr. MILLER, of California. That does not properly come within this bill, because this is merely to authorize a Navy officer to administer the oath, which lays the foundation for the enlistment.

Mr. ANTHONY. A minor enlisted without the consent of his parents is always discharged.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2500) to regulate the sale of grape-sugar and glucose, and to prevent the adulteration of sugar, molasses, and sirup, the product of beets, sorghum, or sugar-cane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2501) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7193) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2490) to change the name of the First National Bank of West Greenville, Pennsylvania, to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania; and Joint resolution (S. R. 137) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. L. B. CASWELL of Wisconsin, Mr. E. JNO. ELLIS of Louisiana, and Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois, managers at the further conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 357) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Soldiers and Sailors' Association at Columbus, Ohio, and to the Grand Army of the Republic at Denver, Colorado; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GARLAND. I offer a resolution, and ask that it be read.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President to examine into the works now in progress for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, and the methods employed in making such improvements, and the contracts touching the same, and the application of the appropriations made by Congress for that purpose.

Also, all matters pertaining to and the feasibility of the outlet system for the improvement of said river.

Also, in the improvement made at the mouth of said river, the system of jetties, and the extent to which the same have facilitated the navigation of the river to the Gulf, their permanency, and the method now employed in the improvement thereof, and into all matters touching said improvement, the methods and effects thereof, and contracts touching the same.

The said committee may hold its sessions during the recess of Congress at such places on said river or elsewhere as may be necessary for full inquiry into the matters above referred to, may send for persons and papers, examine on oath any of the persons employed on the Mississippi River improvement commission, or by the same and others if deemed necessary, including all river men and river residents.

The said committee shall report to the Senate the result of such inquiries at the earliest day practicable of the next session of Congress.

A sum not exceeding $5,000 out of the contingent fund of the Senate may be applied by the Secretary to the payment of the actual expenses of said committee, including clerk and witness fees. But the Secretary is only authorized to pay such expenses on vouchers therefor, duly certified as correct by the chairman of the committee and specifying in detail the items thereof. But the entire expenses of said committee shall not exceed the sum above mentioned and no other expenses shall be incurred.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senate is very thin at this time, and I shall not ask action on the resolution now; but as it will go over it is probably well enough for me to state the views I have about it, so that Senators may look into the subject by the time the resolution is considered to-morrow.

The House of Representatives at the last session appointed a committee of nine of this character, a committee as I am informed by the public prints who have made some examination of the work contemplated in the resolution, but they have made no report, and no legislation has been had in reference to the subject at this session of Congress, and as a matter of course none will now be had. What the scope of the examination of the House Committee was, or what their views of the matters suggested may be, no one knows; at least I do not.

It is important that a committee of this sort should be appointed. It has now become more so in view of the overflow that is about to take place in that country of all that portion of the Mississippi River designated in the resolution between Cairo and the mouth. The expense is limited, possibly it is too much limited, to the sum of $5,000. Perhaps upon reflection that will have to be increased somewhat. For one, I am anxious that an investigation be had, and that legislation take place at the next session of Congress, which will be the regular session, that shall settle this matter in some permanent and practical way. I believe myself there was an error in providing for a commission without some members of Congress being placed upon it. If the original Mississippi River Commission had been composed partly of members of Congress action of this sort would be unnecessary, because their reports when made to Congress could be explained by the members who were on the commission representing the one House or the other. In that way information as to the reports could be had from persons on the floor who knew the facts.

I think there can be no reasonable objection urged to-morrow to the passage of this resolution. Of course I am willing to accept any amendment or any proposition that will reach the same purpose and accomplish the same end. I ask that the resolution may lie over; I shall call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish it printed?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that he put in his resolution the authority to employ a stenographer. It is important that the testimony taken before the committee should be preserved.

Mr. GARLAND. I will do that.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps before it is printed the Senator had better modify it in that way.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well, I shall do so.

CHILI AND PERU.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer a resolution, which I ask may lie over and be printed; I will call it up to-morrow, or as soon as it can be printed.

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession touching an alleged joint agreement between the ministers of the United States, of Great Britain, of France, and of Italy, now serving at Lima, or Peru, to make a joint effort to bring about peace between Chili and Peru, and to inform the Senate whether the minister of the United States has been instructed to invite or accept the mediation of European powers in the settlement of a purely American question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over.

PRINTING OF INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a motion that the revenue bill as passed by the Senate be printed—1,000 copies. Several Senators want a copy, and it will be wanted by members of the House. It will not be printed in the House until it shall be taken up for action. It will be convenient, I think, for both Houses to have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the House to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. I know; but I ask to have 1,000 copies of the bill printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can 1,000 extra copies be printed without referring that question to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; that will not cost $500, nor half of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The printing of the usual number can be ordered without a reference. It is better to print the usual number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSON.

Mr. HOAR. If there is no further morning business I desire to make a motion. I understand that it is desirable to have a very brief executive session at some time to-day, and that it would be more agreeable to the Senator who has charge of the appropriation bill to have it now than to interrupt that bill. I move, therefore, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MAJOR WILLIAM LUDLOW.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 355) to authorize Major William Ludlow, United States Army, to accept a civil position, have directed me to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought not to take up bills and resolutions reported to-day. It is not fair.

Mr. INGALLS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. If gentlemen will allow me to make a brief statement, I think this is a measure to which no possible objection will be made.

The city of Philadelphia is under the absolute necessity of beginning some great improvements in its water-works. Major Ludlow has been for six years on duty around the Delaware River and all about there, in charge of the river and harbor improvements. Philadelphia is unable to find elsewhere the proper man. With extraordinary unanimity on the part of both political parties they have selected Major Ludlow. He is needed immediately. They wish to put him in charge of the new system of works. This resolution will grant him a two years' leave of absence, but it is probable, if he proves acceptable, that he will resign from the Army before that time. It is without pay. His pay ceases the moment he accepts the position. He would be entitled now, if he had the benefits of the leaves of absence he has saved, to some fourteen months' absence. The Secretary of War approves it in a letter which states the facts clearly. The councils of Philadelphia ask it; the citizens ask it; here is a petition to Congress asking it which embraces the strongest names possibly of all parties in that city. It is no injury to the public service. It is particularly needed, and it will be a great benefit to that city. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is undoubtedly a very important matter, but I have reported a good many very important bills which if I could get them up would be disposed of in five minutes; but I can not do it. I propose to take what time there is for the things on the Calendar when we can get at them. This is not fair play.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is in accordance with public justice. It is nothing more than fair to the people of that city. It is fair to the service. It does not interfere with anybody's promotion. He loses his pay from the day he goes on this duty. He is needed now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on the point of the merits of the resolution; I am on the point of doing the important business of the Senate first.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senate had heard the letter of the Secretary of War they would have passed the bill before this time, but if objection is made——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If objected to the resolution has to go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to take up the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not do, as it is now reported.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I withdraw the demand at present, but I shall renew it at the first favorable opportunity.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to postpone the Calendar and all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to postpone the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to take up the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted on as they are reached in the regular reading.

And then, after they are acted on, amendments offered by Senators not on the committee will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). If there be no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Illinois it will be taken.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois is that the amendments offered by the committee shall be taken up and disposed of in the order in which they are reached.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that will be considered the sense of the Senate. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 7, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of the commanding general's office" from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 10, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 16, to insert:

For salaries of one hundred and seventeen civilian clerks, at not exceeding $1,000 each per annum, for the Adjutant-General's Department, at the headquarters of military divisions and departments, $117,000: Provided, That this sum shall be in full for all clerical expense of the Adjutant-General's Department at the headquarters of military divisions and departments: Provided further, That soldiers rendering the clerical services above provided for shall be restored to duty with their respective companies.

Mr. LOGAN. The committee authorize me after a reconsideration of that to substitute for that amendment the following:

For salaries of one hundred and seventeen civilian clerks, namely, ten clerks at not exceeding $1,500, and one hundred and seven clerks at not exceeding $1,200 per annum each, in lieu of the general service men on duty at the headquarters of military divisions and departments, $143,400.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest whether that should not be amended by adding to it the last proviso of the amendment as it originally stood:

Provided further, That soldiers rendering the clerical services above provided for shall be restored to duty with their respective companies.

And that ought to be followed by "or mustered out." Some of these men are what are called general-service men, who really, while enlisted as other soldiers, were enlisted with the understanding that they were to render clerical service, and have never been on duty with their companies. They ought to have an opportunity of being mustered out if they so desire. Some others should be returned to their companies.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to add the last proviso there at the end of the amendment. I think that would be better.

Mr. PLUMB. Then add "or discharged from the service"

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Pay Department," in line 38, before the word "aids-de-camp," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-seven;" after "aids-de-camp," in the same line, insert "in addition to pay in the line;" and after the word "line," in line 39, to strike out:

And on and after the 1st day of July, 1883, the Lieutenant-General may have two aids-de-camp, to be selected from officers of the line below the rank of lieutenant-colonel; that each major-general may have two aids-de-camp, to be selected from the captains or first lieutenants of the line; that each brigadier-general may have one aid-de-camp, to be selected from the first lieutenants of the line: Provided, however, No officer shall remain absent from his regiment on such duty for a longer period than three years: And provided further, That such officers so detailed for staff duty shall not have or receive any additional rank or pay over and above their regular rank and pay by reason of such detail or assignment to such staff duty.

And insert in lieu of the words stricken out:

Provided, That no officer shall remain absent from his regiment on duty at Washington city, or on the staff of a major-general or a brigadier-general, for a longer period than three years at any one time; but this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army.

Mr. BAYARD. That amendment is obnoxious to the provisions of Rule 29. It proposes general legislation, which can not be done on an appropriation bill. The rule is:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

I submit that point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator would only have waited until I made the suggestion that I am authorized by the committee to make, it would have saved him perhaps the trouble.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator tried to interrupt me before I stated my point.

Mr. LOGAN. I wanted to say that is all stricken out by order of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. Are the words in Italics stricken out?

Mr. LOGAN. All is stricken out from line 39 down to and including the word "duty," in line 52, which is the first part of the amendment. I would rather have a vote taken on that first, and then on the insertion of the proviso inserted by the committee, and the Senate will see what it means.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator state how the committee propose to amend the proviso?

Mr. LOGAN. The committee propose to amend it so as to read:

Provided, That no officer shall remain absent from his regiment on duty at Washington city for a longer period than three years at any one time, but this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the Commanding-General of the Army, nor to the officer in charge of the publication of the records of the war of the rebellion, or detailed to work on the Washington Monument.

Mr. HARRIS. I had offered an amendment which I had printed, but I see the committee has covered the point in respect to the war record office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question should be divided. The first question will be on the amendment striking out "twenty" and inserting "thirty-seven" in line 38.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Illinois if it would not be wise—it is a subject which I have not considered in every view—that the Army officers who are detailed and on duty in the Signal Bureau should be excepted from this general provision, it being a specialty that they are peculiarly qualified to fill, and they would have to educate new men if they were sent off to their commands and others detailed for that service.

Mr. LOGAN. I want the Senate first to vote on the proposition of the committee to strike out from line 39 down to and including the word "duty" in line 52. Then that other question will come up.

Mr. MAXEY. I agree with the Senator in charge of the bill that the true policy of the Senate at this stage is to act on striking out the lines proposed to be stricken out as an independent question. Then there are a good many questions about the words in Italics which I should like to be heard upon as well as others.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I propose.

Mr. MAXEY. I think the committee is right in the striking out; I agree with the committee on that, but I disagree about the matter to be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question to be acted on is the amendment in lines 38 and 39. The Secretary will report the amendment distinctly to the Senate.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 38 it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-seven," and in the same line, after "aids-de-camp," to insert "in addition to pay in the line;" so as to read:

Thirty-seven aids-de-camp, in addition to pay in the line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know why it is necessary to raise the number of aids-de-camp.

Mr. LOGAN. I will explain to the Senate in a moment. The House in putting in these words cut off part of the aids-de-camp to general officers.

Mr. MORGAN. Cut off seventeen?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; and by this amendment we restore them. It is necessary to put in "thirty-seven," because that is the number, and it is necessary to insert "in addition to pay in the line" to include the extra pay which was stricken out by the House.

Mr. MORGAN. It leaves the law as it is?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. It leaves the law as it is. That particular provision underwent the supervision of the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee recommended striking it out, so as to leave the law as it is.

Mr. LOGAN. The Committee on Military Affairs instructed me to make this report to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations agreed to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next question is on the amendment to strike out the words beginning on line 39 and ending with line 52.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the question to be taken upon the proposition to strike out and insert?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is to be taken first on striking out.

Mr. LOGAN. If the point of order can be raised on the proviso first, then perhaps the vote had better be taken on striking out and inserting. If the Senator from Delaware proposes to raise the point of order, I do not propose to have the clause stricken out on the point of order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The point of order undoubtedly can be raised.

Mr. BAYARD. It will be.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I would rather have the matter submitted in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question will be on striking out the words indicated by the committee and inserting the proviso from line 53 to line 57, inclusive.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Chair rule that the words in italics are connected with the cancellation above, from line 39 to line 52?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that striking out and inserting comes up as one question.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I raise the point I did before, that the amendment is obnoxious to Rule 29, as it is providing general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator mean the whole amendment, the provision by the House and the proviso proposed by the committee? Does his point go to the provision of the House bill and the amendment of the Senate committee?

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment is an amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to substitute this language in italics for the matter stricken out. I should suppose the two things were separable, that we could concur in striking out and afterward vote on the insertion of the proviso. I ask the Chair, as a matter of parliamentary law, whether the vote is not separable upon the striking out the cancellation of the words from line 39 to line 52?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the rule is insisted upon, a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. BAYARD. My objection is that the effect of striking out these words and inserting the proviso in italics would be to receive an amendment which is obnoxious to the provision of Rule 29. That is the effect of it. That rule prevents a proposition of general legislation to be received on any general appropriation bill.

Mr. MAXEY. The lines stricken out by the committee are general legislation on an appropriation bill. They come from the House, and according to the theory we can not control their rules, and therefore we are bound to keep them on the bill because it is not amenable to our rules; but when we endeavor to correct that and strike that out, and as an amendment insert something different, that is amenable to our rules, and we can not avail ourselves of the benefit of legislating on an appropriation bill although we are bound to take legislation from the House however bad it may be, because we can not control their rules. That is the effect of the point precisely.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware that the amendment shall be perfected according to the sense of the Senate reserving the point of order, and perhaps it may be when the provision is perfected that no member of the Senate may care to make the point of order and the occasion for it may entirely pass away. In the mean time it seems to me that in regard to the matter about which the House has legislated we should not, if we can avoid it, put ourselves in the negative position of simply striking out what they have put in, taking the chance of being obliged to restore it in conference. We ought to perfect it and see if we can not get it in such a shape that the Senate will be willing to agree to it, and, whatever the parliamentary law may be, not resort to the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like Senators to state their objections to this proviso. I think the Senate would generally agree to strike it out if the reason for doing so was stated to them. I do not see any objection to the proviso reported by our committee, but if there are objections I should like them to be stated; and if I can not answer them, then I will agree that it shall be stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator from Illinois, in response to that suggestion, that it seems to me the proviso is subject to this objection: that the result of it will be to order presently back to their regiments the officers on duty in the Signal Corps. Now, without bringing up for discussion here at all—for I do not consider that it is before us—the general question of the present organization of that corps, or the question as to how its organization may be improved, or the broader question whether it should be kept in contact with the War Department at all, I simply suggest that it is there now, and that we ought not in this indirect way to destroy it. We ought to meet the question of its transfer to another bureau or Department of the Government, or the questson of its reorganization upon some permanent basis, with officers of its own, as a distinct issue upon a bill presenting that question. That would be open to amendment, and not subject to the limitations which attach to an appropriation bill coming to us from the House of Representatives.

Now, I am free to admit that some views which I have held upon that subject have undergone modification; but it must be, at least until the next session of Congress, that whatever is done in the way of weather observations and reports during that interval must be done by the Signal Corps as now organized. If, therefore, we are presently to return to their regiments all officers there on detail who have acquired valuable experience in connection with that work, it is practically to uproot and destroy the organization.

I would therefore suggest, if this amendment is to be considered and the point of order withdrawn, that the exception which is made as to the officer in charge of the Monument and as to the officer in charge of the compiling of the records of the rebellion should be extended to the officers on duty here in the Signal Corps, in order that at the next session of Congress, after an investigation that seems to be likely is made, we can reconsider this whole question, and meet the subject of the reorganization of the Signal Corps or its transfer to some other Department in a fair way, when our powers of dealing with it will not be circumscribed.

I say, then, in response to the Senator from Illinois, that as at present advised if this substitue is to be voted upon—and I trust the Senator from Delaware will not insist on the point of order, for it is simply tying our hands to deal with this question—if we are to deal with the subject I think that exception ought to be made for the present. In saying that to the Senate I do not mean at all to commit myself even to views already expressed on the question as to whether there may not be a better organization of this bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware reserve the question of order, or insist on it now?

Mr. BAYARD. I think the whole provision ought to go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A request was made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that the question of order be reserved for the time being.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate then will proceed to consider the amendment, the question of order being reserved.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire whether if the point of order is not insisted upon now it will be available after this proviso has been amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order can be reserved by the Senator from Delaware and he can make it at any future time. The request made by the Senator from Kansas was that the clause should be perfected first in the absence of the point of order. The Senator from Delaware may reserve his point of order until afterward.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know what the rule is here; but if this should be amended or any action taken upon any of its parts, can the point of order then be made against it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order can be made under the rule at any time.

Mr. CONGER. If it could not, I should wish to make the point of order now.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the effect of the whole proceeding is that nothing can be done except what meets the unanimous consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order can be made at any time before the bill gets out of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish in a very few words to state what I think about this proposed legislation. So far as the amendment we have adopted in lines 38 and 39, striking out "twenty" and inserting "thirty-seven," and adding "in addition to pay in the line," is concerned, I voted very cheerfully for that for the reason that it leaves the law precisely as it is; it does not attempt to legislate upon an appropriation bill, but simply makes an appropriation to meet existing law. So far so good, and I think we are just right in voting that way.

I also favored the striking out of the lines from 39 to 52, inclusive, for the same reason, that while they did not come from the Senate they are nevertheless legislation upon an appropriation bill, and usually that kind of legislation is not submitted to the trained and experienced committee having charge of the special matter to which it relates. Hence on such special legislation the Senate can not be so well advised as it would be if it had the benefit and skill of the committee specially charged with that kind of legislation before it came to this body for consideration.

Then we come to the lines from 53 to 57:

Provided, That no officer shall remain absent from his regiment on duty at Washington city or on the staff of a major-general or a brigadier-general for a longer period than three years at any one time, but this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army.

There are two or three objections that I desire in a very few words to present to that proposition.

There is not a Senator on this floor who has had command of large forces of men who is not aware (and no one knows it better than the Senator from Illinois in charge of this bill) that the staff officers of a general are confidential officers, and he ought to have the privilege of selecting them. Every officer in command of troops has his own methods of proceeding. When he trains his staff to understand him and he understands them and has them well prepared to carry out his wishes, it does seem to me that it is a privilege in the interest of the United States, of good order, and military discipline that you should not part that relation between the commanding general and his staff officers by such legislation as this bill proposes. I understand from the Senator from Illinois that so far as that particular point is concerned, in the amendment which he is authorized to make by the Appropriations Committee as a substitute, that difficulty is removed. Unquestionably there is no Senator on this floor who has commanded men in the Army but knows the importance of retaining that privilege. The generals should be left to make their own selection of staff officers, and that relation should not by force be broken up so long as it is satisfactory to the general and his staff officers.

Now, I come to another point. This amendment strikes down and removes and carries back to their regiments the officers who are detailed with the Signal Corps. That is the necessary effect of it. At the last session of Congress a bill was introduced for the purpose of reorganizing the Signal Corps. That bill was reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], and is now pending on the Calendar, reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs. The purpose of that bill is to make a permanent signal corps service and stop all this trouble, and it is a great trouble which necessarily must exist between the Chief of the Signal Service and the General of the Army and the division and brigade commanders and regimental commanders, because a general or colonel who has a first class officer is derelict in duty in my judgment if he will voluntarily give up that first-class officer to anybody if he can keep him. In other words, when you have good men you want to keep them. Equally so the signal officer wants to get the best men that he can get. That is perfectly natural, and he is doing his duty in doing that. There is trouble and collision necessarily between the signal officer, who is seeking the best men, and the division, brigade, and regimental commanders, who seek to retain the best in their own commands.

While that bill is pending, and it is not yet disposed of, there is a temporary provision going on whereby certain officers are assigned to duty in the Signal Corps, and the more experienced those officers are the better for the Signal Service. As a matter of practical fact, my judgment is, and I think I shall be sustained by nearly all Senators here or by most of them at least, that the public demand of this country is that the Signal Service should not be stricken down. You pass this bill as it is and require all these officers who have been away from their commands for three years on duty in Washington city in the Signal Corps to be sent back to their commands, and you strike down instantly the Signal Service. The people of this country do not demand that; but in every way that information can come, I happen to know—no one knows it better than the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], and myself, for it became our duty as a sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate all this vast volume of testimony in regard to the Signal Corps, coming from every portion of this country—that the people of this country want that corps upheld and maintained. That is my judgment about it. But we can not act upon that bill at this session of Congress, because the time now allotted to other questions will not allow. So we have temporarily to leave the Signal Corps where we find it, with a general in command of the Signal Corps and five or six lieutenants at the foot end of the service with the rest of the detailed officers taken from various portions of the Army.

If they are sent back you strip that corps of all its vitality; you take from it all its energy; it at once becomes a helpless machine if you bring in new men who have no experience in the Signal Service and place them there between the Chief Signal Officer and the lieutenants. I believe none of the men in that corps proper are above the rank of second-lieutenant. Take out those who are detailed and send them back to their regiments and take new men and place them there, and you at once destroy the efficiency of the Signal Corps, and you do a thing which the American people do not want done, and which in my judgment would be a grievous blow at the best interests of our country, commercially and agriculturally, as well as at the interest of having proper signal service and signal stations along our great frontier and in the Indian Territory and everywhere else where the service is now operating so beneficially.

Nothing, in my judgment, could show the evil of legislation on appropriation bills more than hasty action of that kind, when the Senate has charged a committee with the investigation of that business and that committee charged a sub-committee with it, and that sub-committee, as I know, has worked for weeks and months in trying to perfect a bill and bring it here which would save the Signal Service, and present it in such a way as to meet the approbation of the Senate and House and of the country; and while that is pending we want simply to let the corps go on as it is with those officers detailed doing duty, and if this proviso is adopted you send these officers back to their commands and you destroy the Signal Corps.

Mr. LOGAN. There is nothing that demonstrates more fully to my mind than the arguments which have been made here this morning that nothing can ever be done to improve anything connected with the Army, no matter what efforts may be made. I notice in reference to the tariff bill and in reference to every other bill that comes before the Senate that if Senators object to any provision of a bill they try to make it better, if it is a proper provision; but if any provision appears in the Army bill which in the slightest degree affects any corps or individual of the Army the provision is always attacked without attempting to substitute anything that makes it better.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illinois will allow me to state that I ought to have given notice that on the 6th of February I proposed an amendment at the end of line 57, after the word "Army," to insert the words "nor to officers of the Army on duty with the Signal Corps;" so as to read:

But this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the commanding general of the Army, nor to officers of the Army on duty with the Signal Corps.

At the proper time I propose to offer that amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose it has gone all over the country that I am attacking the Signal Corps. You would think from the arguments here this morning that my intention is to destroy the Signal Corps. I have no desire to do that; I have never attempted to do it, and I will offer a proposition here before I sit down, and I want to see whether Senators who are so interested in not having this corps touched at all think it fair or not.

Now, I say to the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Indiana that I understand the Signal Service to be like any other service, except in this: The officers learn signaling, and that signaling taught in the Signal Corps applies to the whole Army, and every officer in the Army ought to have an opportunity to learn it. The Senator from Texas is an old Army officer, and I ask him if that is not true? Is it not a fact that the signaling for the Army is a service that ought to be taught to all the Army?

Mr. MAXEY. I so regard it. I do not wish to take up the Senator's time, but the Signal Corps does an immense amount of work of importance to commerce and agriculture.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that; I understand that it does an immense amount of service outside of what it was intended for. For instance, there has been a report referred here to the Committee on Printing on the entomology of Alaska made by the Signal Corps. What has it got to do with that, will you tell me? What part of its service is it performing when it is doing that at the expense of the Government, when other bureaus are authorized by law to perform that service? Will you tell me what right it has to give the destruction and overflows, &c., of the Mississippi and other rivers after they have gone by, when we have a commission for that purpose? And yet it does it. It expends the Government money in reaching out and extending beyond the duties that are given to it under the law, as the Senate well knows.

I introduced a bill in the early stages of this session to divide the Signal Corps; that is, to leave the Signal Service to perform its duties as Signal Service officers, and the civil department of that corps to be assigned to a civil department to perform its duties in the civil department where it belongs. But the very moment I did that I was attacked in the newspapers all over this country. I was astonished at it, for I could not understand it. I was astonished to find editorials in leading newspapers in the country attacking me, saying that I was trying to destroy the Signal Service; but I will say to the Senator from Texas that afterward I found these editorials all inclosed to me in a letter. After I had read them, a letter was written to me stating that these editorials were written in the Signal Office.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. I ask if he thinks that a new detail of officers would be able to write just as good editorials—if he does not think that kind of work can be better done by men who have been there seventeen or eighteen years?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator.

The Signal Service, I do believe, if properly managed is a good service to the country; I do not wish to destroy it, but I wish the officers of the Army to have an equal chance in learning that which belongs to it if it is valuable to the Army; and if it does not belong to the Army, let it go where it does belong. If the examination that I have referred to of the entomology of Alaska belongs to the Army, well enough; but it does not, as all know. If the duties they perform belong to the civil department, not to the Army, why shall they be performed by the Army? If they are necessary, why not give the general officers of the Army a chance to understand these things? Is it to be a secret locked up in the breast of a few men? Is that the object? If the object is because you detail an officer of the Army to this service and after he is detailed and has learned it then he must stay there as long as he lives, because you say he is more efficient than anybody else you can detail at this time, then why put it upon an establishment; why not make it an establishment of itself, and make the officers permanent and not take them from the Army? Let them belong, then, to a permanent establishment; let them belong to a civil establishment; and do not detail men from the Army to a position to perform duties in the Army and keep them there for life. You have officers in the Signal Service to-day who have been there twelve years, detailed from the Army.

Mr. PLUMB. Eighteen years.

Mr. LOGAN. I say, and the Senator well knows it, that no officer of the Army should be detailed on certain duties for eighteen years, depriving others of his service, when others can perform it just as well.

Now, I propose to offer this amendment before I sit down, that of these officers, I think twelve in number, three shall be returned to their regiments within the year 1883, and others detailed in their places; that three shall be returned to their regiments in 1884, and three shall be returned to their regiments in 1885, and others detailed in their places. Will not that give time enough for others to learn signaling? Is that trying to destroy the Signal Corps, or is it an attempt to give officers of the Army an opportunity of learning this service so that it may be taught elsewhere? I intend to make that proposition, or change "three" to "four," in order to get the twelve back to their proper positions in three years. I will insert "four," so as to have one-third go out each year, leaving four of them there for two years, so that others may learn it. Take the ones who have been here the longest and send them to their regiments; others who have been here eight or nine years are certainly sufficiently proficient to perform their duty.

It will not do for Senators to stand on the floor here at the dictation of a circular letter that has been sent around to them by the chief of that service telling them these officers ought not to be sent back because they are necessary here. There is no man who ever has been in the Army but knows that the statement is false that it is necessary to keep a man fifteen or eighteen years away from his command because nobody else can learn the duties he is performing, and therefore you must keep him here for life. Suppose they should all die with cholera, what would become of the Signal Service? Nobody could be detailed; no man would know anything about it. This argument that is made here in the Senate Chamber time and again in reference to men performing duties here that nobody else can perform is absurd. A lieutenant was kept in the War Department for eighteen years away from his command, and finally he became so necessary to the Government, the Government could not run without him, that the Senate and House passed a bill making him a major. What were his duties? To examine accounts. Nobody could do it but him. No man had the capacity to examine accounts and see whether they were correct but him. He had sufficient influence with the Congress of the United States to keep him there eighteen years. Finally a provision was adopted in an Army bill that sent him back to his regiment.

That is about the condition of things; that is about the way Congress acts in reference to men who want to stay always in Washington city. If a man gets here once, no matter what his duties may be in the field, you never can get him away; the Government will go to pieces if he is sent back to his regiment. The whole thing should stop. You could not get an account of how fast the Mississippi River is rising if three of these officers were sent back to their regiment! I do think that the influence that is brought to bear on Congress by a few men who do nothing but lobby Congress in Washington city is absolutely saying to the country that Congress has not capacity enough to run itself.

I agree with the Senator from Texas in reference to the aids-de-camp on General's staff, and I voted in committee to strike that out; but in striking out all that provision which was put there by the House we certainly thought we ought to put some proviso to it, and to at least carry out in some way a part of the proposition of the House. So we provided that officers should not remain in Washington city over a certain length of time except certain persons that it made no material difference whether other officers learned their duties or not. As far as the rebellion records are concerned, that is not a matter that somebody else wants to learn; that is not a matter that is going to have some influence on the Army as the Signal Service has. It is a mere matter of examining records, and inasmuch as the man is there and it is unnecessary to send him to his command, we said let him remain for the reason that he is not learning there anything that belongs to the science of war. So in reference to the officer in charge of the monument, where nothing is learned that belongs to the science or art of war. But where things are taught that are connected with and are part of the learning of the Army or Navy it is necessary that details should be made at different times.

So, then, instead of the words—

That no officer shall remain absent from his regiment on duty at Washington city or on the staff of a major-general or a brigadier-general for a longer period than three years at any one time, but this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army—

I propose to say this:

And that officers on duty in the Signal Corps shall be ordered as follows: Four of said officers to be returned during the year 1883 to their regiments; four to be returned to their regiments during the year 1884; four to be returned to their regiments during the year 1885, and other officers detailed in their places.

That is what I shall propose.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to one intimation that I thought was rather unpleasant, that I or any other member of the Military Committee or any other Senator was acting in this matter on the dictation of anybody. I beg to say to the Senator that in my action here I am controlled by what I believe to be the best interests of the country. My motives, as I think, are as good as those of men generally.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not question the Senator's motives.

Mr. MAXEY. The ideas of men outside or newspaper articles that the Senator from Illinois refers to do not control my action.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not refer to those newspaper articles as controlling anybody's action here. I referred to them to show that these officers were engaged in matters which certainly do not pertain to their army duties. I do not wish to go into that discussion just now; but I will say to the Senator that officers in the Signal Corps have been sent through deception to far away cities under the pretense that they were going there for purposes necessary to the Signal Corps, when in fact they were sent there to get up resolutions against the action of members of Congress, against what they were attempting to do, to influence Congress in another direction. That the Senator can not deny. If that is the object of these gentlemen and what they are engaged in I think they had better go back to their regiments and let somebody else try to do regular signal work.

Mr. MAXEY. So far as my observations are concerned they are the results of my own examination and without regard to the dictation of any mortal man on earth. I have made my statement to the Senate according to what I believe to be the truth.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator, does he not believe that by making these changes gradually, letting the men now here run on for a year, it would be as well for the service?

Mr. MAXEY. I believe that the best thing on earth we can do is to let the matter lie until the bill which is in charge of the Senator from Indiana is taken up and deliberately considered by the Senate, and in the mean time, let the Signal Service go on for the benefit of the country.

Mr. LOGAN. I have heard that speech made in the Senate Chamber now for many years. I have introduced several bills trying to reorganize the Army, in a certain sense benefiting it and for the benefit of the country, and I never could get the bills acted upon. I have been told always, "It is too late; we can not do it now." And when I have tried to do the same things in bills that came from the House, where we had a right to put them, that were absolutely necessary for the benefit of the Army, the point of order has always been raised, and I have been always told, "Wait until next Congress and we will get the bill through." That is always the argument.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I said when I addressed the Senate before that I did not understand that the question of what the probable permanent status of the Signal Corps was or should be was involved in this question at all. I repeat that declaration. In the very amendment which the Appropriations Committee have proposed they recognize the propriety of exceptions from the operation of this general rule, to the wisdom of which I agree, namely, that officers should not be detached from their regiment for a longer period than three years. They make two exceptions. They say that the officer in charge of the construction of the Washington Monument shall not come within the rule, and they say that the officer in charge of the publication of the records of the rebellion shall be made an exception to the rule.

It seems, then, that the committee and the Senatoa from Illinois recognize the principle that there may be special duties to which officers of the Army have been assigned here, and in which they have acquired peculiar skill that would make it to the detriment of the work in their charge to make them subject to this rule and send them back within three years to their regiments. The proposition I make is to extend the principle that the committee have admitted; and the only proper subject of discussion here is whether the exception which I propose comes within the spirit of the other exceptions which have been proposed by the committee.

Mr. President, this Signal Corps organization is an anomalous organization. The Senator from Illinois says that all the officers of the Army ought to learn this duty of signaling. They are taught army signaling proper, that is, the use of the flag to communicate messages at distances in the field. They are taught that at West Point; they are taught it at the school at Fortress Monroe; they are taught it, I believe, at the school at Leavenworth; but I am free to say for one that if this were the only duty to be discharged by that corps I should be for its entire abolition. It is an insignificant thing. With officers trained in the use of the flag in communicating messages, in any war that we might have, it would be entirely possible in three weeks to train men to use the flag.

In my judgment the business of the Signal Corps simply as an organization in connection with army signaling proper could not be justified. But there have grown up in connection with that the weather reports, observations of the weather; and however the usefulness of this service may be exaggerated, or however undue compliments may have been stimulated by the impertinent interference of any officer, as the Senator from Illinois suggests, it will not be denied by him, it will not be controverted by any Senator here that there is among the people, the commercial classes, our marine, and among our farmers a very general impression that this business of reporting by telegraph from day to day the weather and the coming of storms is of great advantage to our marine as well as to our agricultural interests. It may be—there seems to be evidence indicating what the Senator from Illinois said to be true—that many of these impressions have been stimulated in a way that is not creditable.

If that has been done, I say to the Senator from Illinois that no one would condemn more strongly than I that conduct. I agree, again, that there is no possible natural connection between reports of the weather and the military arm of our service. It does not matter to a soldier; the Senator from Illinois would not care to know particularly, if he were ordered to march to-morrow, whether it was going to rain or shine; he would march anyhow. I agree with him that that function of the Signal Service is a civil function, and if it was an original question here to-day submitted to me as a Senator where that corps should be attached, where that weather observation should go, I should say at once, in some civil department of the Government, for it is purely civil. But I have been met, and was met as a member of the sub-committee of the Military Committee, with the fact that it was already established, that it had its roots in the Army organization, that the men who had become skilled in it were Army officers, and the question was whether we should presently transplant it to another Department. At that time my own opinion, as the Senator knows, was decidedly against it, and it may be that I should not have that opinion at the next session of Congress. It may be that some plan can be devised by which this service can be transplanted from the military to one of the civil Departments of our Government without injury to the service, but I do not believe that can be done now.

The practical question before the Senate this morning is, during this interval that must elapse, as the Senator's proposition seems to contemplate a continuance of this organization here, shall we send back to their regiments men who, if they have ordinary capacity and ordinary faithfulness, must in the nature of things be better able to do this duty than any fresh men who could be sent from any place in the Army? Shall we take them right up to-day and send them back, or shall we take time to consider this question? There is a bill on the Calendar proposing a permanent organization by which the officers shall be detached from their regiments, those that remain; but new appointments shall be made either from civil life or from the graduates of the Academy, and the appointments shall be made upon competitive examination, so that access to the Signal Corps will be open to any bright young man, a graduate of any of our colleges, on terms of equal competition with graduates at West Point.

I am not prepared to say in the light of recent events that that bill ought not to be modified. I will meet the Senator from Illinois in an effort to remedy (by a reorganization of the corps or by a transfer of it if that shall be deemed best) the difficulty which now exists and which he has not exaggerated. That difficulty is that men are taken from their proper relations to their companies and regiments and are brought here. I know as he does, and as he has said, that when once here they do contend and use such influences as they can to be retained here. I profess and say to the Senator from Illinois that I am not speaking to-day from the standpoint of any one of these officers; I do not think the report I made before on the bill that is on the Calendar met the wishes of any of these officers; but I do speak for a certainty that I believe the service will be seriously crippled if the amendment as proposed is allowed to pass.

As to the proposition of the Senator one word further. It is that three officers shall go back this year, and three the next, and three the following year. We ought not to allow this thing to remain as it is or adopt any amendment that contemplates that it shall remain as it is. It ought to be made a separate corps in the Army, having its own officers, having no attachment to any regiment in the service, or it ought to be taken out of the Army, one or the other; and I believe at the next Congress one or other of those courses will be taken. To one or the other I am already pledged. In this interval which is to elapse before action can be taken upon the bill or upon any substitute for it, I do not believe that it would be best either to send all this back or to enter upon a system that in the very nature of it would recognize the continuance of the service.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say that the proposition in the bill does not mean what Senators claim for it. It is not an attempt to abolish the Signal Corps. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Indiana say what he has said. I have believed ever since the Signal Corps attained the proportions that it has for the last few years, and before, that it was improperly organized. I have ever believed that the military part of it, so far as signaling is concerned, should be one branch, and the civil part of it, so far as the meteorology of it is concerned, should be another branch. Not only that, but to-day, and the Senator well knows it and so does the Senator from Texas, with all that is said about retaining these officers because they have attained competency, they have attained competency in what? I suppose they mean competency in making calculations. That is what they are employed for. Is it not a fact that Professor Abby is employed at a salary of $4,500, I believe it is $4,000 any way, to make these computations? If these Army officers are absolutely necessary, and they understand this service and are so competent, why do we appoint as a professor a civil employé and pay him $4,500 for the purpose of making the calculations, I should like to know?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right in saying there is a civil employé and a man there entirely skilled in the calculations, but he is wrong in saying, if he meant to say so, that none of the officers employed at the Signal Office in Washington are competent. In fact they have been trained to it, and do make the computations of the weather, the reports and prognostications.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not doubt that, but I say if they are absolutely necessary, and if they have become so proficient that their duties can not be dispensed with by detailing another person, why do you employ a civil employé at so large a salary?

Mr. HARRISON. Simply because one man can not do it all.

Mr. LOGAN. Then why not detail another Army officer in place of the civilian? It would not cost so much.

Mr. HARRISON. As to that I understand the fact to be that the professor who is employed there, who is connected with the service and has been connected with it for a great many years, has a very peculiar and special adaptation to that service, and has instructed all others who are brought there, and his services are exceedingly valuable and can not be dispensed with.

Mr. LOGAN. "Exceedingly valuable and can not be dispensed with." Then no other man in the United States could do it. I think some other person could do just what he does after a little practice, at any rate. The argument is made that the service of these officers can not be dispensed with, and at the same time that a civil employé can not be dispensed with. In other words, nobody can be dispensed with; no one else in this country can perform that duty. I pity the educational men in this country, I pity the colleges, I pity everything connected with a high order of education if no man can be found to make the computations except the gentlemen who are there in the Signal Office. I pity the service.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator must not misrepresent my position. He would not do that intentionally.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I would not.

Mr. HARRISON. Other persons could be found, but there is no provision of law to find them except by details from the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. If there is a provision of law to find them by details from the Army, if that is the way to find them and you have found competent men, why must you have a civil instructor for the Army officers who have been there from twelve to eighteen years? Is not eighteen years long enough to learn this science, if it is a science? Must we keep these officers on service there for eighteen years and then pay high salaries for professors outside?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Illinois thinks that the professor can be dispensed with it would have been very appropriate for him to have reported an amendment to the bill not appropriating the salary for him.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know whether the gentlemen up there can dispense with him or not. The aid seems to be asked for from that quarter. I will only say to the Senator that I did not propose to report a bill to dispense with a civil employé performing the duties that ought to be performed by a civilian. I think these duties ought to be performed by civilians; and therefore I introduced a bill to turn that part of the bureau over to a civil department, because it to-day is under the head of a civilian and not under the head of an Army officer, except that an officer is detailed merely to give orders and this man performs the duty. I think it ought to be in a civil department. For that reason I reported a bill to do it; but I did not get the aid of the Senator when I reported it.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; the Senator did not.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope I shall hereafter.

Mr. HARRISON. That I have explained already.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope I shall have the very valuable services of the Senator hereafter in this direction. I hope Senators will come to the conclusion finally that I am nearer right than they thought I was at first.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is often right, but I would not be willing to pledge myself now to such a judgment upon his opinion,

Mr. LOGAN. I do not ask any pledges. I was in hope that the Senator's mind had got a little different turn from what it had before.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I have got some light.

Mr. LOGAN. Whether this amendment is agreeable to the Senator or not it certainly has brought out some reasons from Senators here in reference to this very valuable service. I do not say it is invaluable; I say it is a valuable service to the farming community, and to shipping, &c. But while I believe that I do not think it ought to be so expensive a service. I do not think it ought to be made to appear before the country that there is some secret about it so that nobody can perform the duties except certain persons who have already been there a great length of time, detailed from the Army, from the duties that belong to them there. I hope that at least to some extent has been demonstrated.

I want to say in conclusion that I think it is bad policy to keep men detailed from the Army, from the line of their duties, for a great length of time.

Mr. HARRISON. Yet, as I have said to the Senator, he agrees to make an exception of Colonel Scott, who is in charge of compiling the records of the rebellion.

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. That must be upon the idea that Colonel Scott is so experienced in the work that no one else could do it.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. The Senator has entirely a wrong impression. I said that these two exceptions were not in the performance of anything that was educational belonging to army service, and therefore there was no necessity for one in the Army to know the duty; there was no reason why anybody else should learn it, because it ends there. It is not a continuous duty; it is not a duty that belongs to the Army. Hence there is nothing in it to learn that would be beneficial to the rest of the Army. That is the reason why I am for that; but in this other work there is much to operate beneficially in the military branch of it to the whole Army.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just going to ask the Senator what it was that the officers would learn in connection with the Signal Service that would be beneficial to them as army officers, and how it is that he insists on the statement that the whole duties are civil and ought to be performed by civilians.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator will at least be moderately fair in his statement.

Mr. HARRISON. I attempt to be so, undoubtedly.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not suppose it was necessary for me to keep repeating what I said in order that the Senator might comprehend. I said in the commencement of my argument that a number of these duties belong to the Army.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator means the signaling?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; the signaling.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator whether that is not taught to every army officer?

Mr. LOGAN. Not to every army officer. It is taught to all army officers who graduate at West Point, and it is taught to all army officers who attend the Artillery School.

Mr. HARRISON. It is taught at Leavenworth also?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Is there any officer of the Army who is not brought into contact sooner or later with one of those three schools?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; plenty of them. The Senator is mistaken. In the first place, all the officers of the Army do not go to West Point and therefore do not get the teaching there. In the second place, no one goes to the Artillery School unless he has a preference and is detailed for it. Only one from a regiment goes to the school at Leavenworth.

Mr. HARRISON. But is not that detail from the regiment usually if not invariably of those officers who have not had the advantage of the West Point school, so that officers from civil life are sent there?

Mr. LOGAN. But there is only one from a regiment who can be detailed. There is not one officer in twenty in the Army to-day who has had the advantage of those teachings.

Mr. HARRISON. They have had the chance to get it in the Signal Service.

Mr. LOGAN. But why give that opportunity to a few? The details are made for the school at Fortress Monroe every two or three years, I do not remember the time. They are made, say at Fort Leavenworth, and the advantage is given to all they can by making details, but the details do not apply to all the officers of the Army who have not had the advantage of West Point. So I said that that part of the Signal Service which pertains to military duty ought to be taught, and officers ought to be detailed for it, and the rest of it ought to belong to a civil department of the Government, because it is not a part of the duty of the Army, and never has been, until by just such legislation as has been obtained at different times from the Congress of the United States, by one line or two lines, they have got this organization until now it reaches out and attempts to grasp nearly everything.

To illustrate the character of legislation we have had, it has not been very long since the Commissary Department and the Quartermaster's Department of the Army were both open to civilian appointees, because as good quartermasters and commissaries as the Army ever had were by appointments from civil life, but by one line being inserted in an appropriation bill a few years ago civilians were cut off from such appointments. So it goes until you are locking the doors against every man in this country almost getting into these bureaus who has not had the opportunity to get a military education. Step by step it is being done.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has heard me already say that in the bill providing for the reorganization of the Signal Corps entrance into the service was distinctly made open to competitive examinations to all persons in civil life.

Mr. LOGAN. We are not discussing that bill at this time. We are discussing a proposition to give an opportunity to these men to go back once in three years, and other men to come here for the purpose of learning to perform the duties that are performed by them.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say. It is a matter of no consequence to me whether the amendment is adopted or not. It is a great deal better for the Army, it is a great deal better for the country, that we should have at least a little rotation in these things than that we should have them permanently in a few hands.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky to allow the proviso as it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Illinois to be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the original amendment and as proposed to be amended.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 39 to line 52, inclusive, in the following words:

> And on and after the 1st day of July, 1883, the Lieutenant-General may have two aids-de-camp, to be selected from officers of the line below the rank of lieutenant-colonel; that each major-general may have two aids-de-camp, to be selected from the captains or first lieutenants of the line; that each brigadier-general may have one aid-de-camp, to be selected from the first lieutenants of the line: Provided, however, No officer shall remain absent from his regiment on such duty for a longer period than three years: And provided further, That such officers so detailed for staff duty shall not have or receive any additional rank or pay over and above their regular rank and pay by reason of such detail or assignment to such staff duty.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

> Provided, That no officer shall remain absent from his regiment on duty at Washington city or on the staff of a major-general or a brigadier-general for a longer period than three years at any one time, but this provision shall not apply to officers on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois proposes an addition, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add:

> And that officers on duty in the Signal Corps shall be ordered as follows: Four of said officers to be returned during the year 1882, four in the year 1884, and four in the year 1885, and others to be detailed in their places.

Mr. LOGAN. I will supply the words to make that plain. It should read "returned to their regiments."

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to state that on the 6th of February I gave notice that I should propose to add "nor to officers of the Army on duty with the Signal Corps." I ask if I can offer that amendment now to be considered?

Mr. HARRISON. That would be an amendment in the third degree, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would not now be in order as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MAXEY. I propose to offer it whenever it is in order. I do not know when that will be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have not been able, owing to engagements on this floor on another important bill, to attend the meetings of the Committee on Appropriations quite as much as I have been in the habit of doing. But this debate has developed, I think, conclusively, the importance of having as little general legislation upon appropriation bills as possible. We have had for many years, indeed ever since I have been in Congress, more trouble in regard to legislation placed upon appropriation bills than in regard to anything else; and there has been a good deal of crimination and recrimination between the respective parties growing out of the character of legislation so placed upon appropriation bills. I think it is the feeling of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, as far as they possibly can, to divest their appropriation bills of all general legislation, and I believe that at this session we have endeavored more closely to adhere to that rule than we have ever done before.

Mr. BAYARD. That has been done in the case of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. In the naval appropriation bill the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] having charge of that stripped it as clean or as nearly so as he could, and the Senator from Illinois, in charge of this bill, when you come to look over it, has stripped it of a great deal. I am only sorry that he did not content himself with striking out what the House had done, because it is not subject to a point of order, and allow these complicated questions to come up in bills from the Military Committee, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and himself are distinguished members.

I confess my utter inability to grapple with those questions. There are four or five of us on the Committee on Appropriations who are very well qualified, I think, and I claim to be, to attend to the general matters of appropriations for carrying out existing law. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the committee, so far as he ever has developed himself, knows but little about army matters. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is a warrior; I know that it is the case with neither the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] nor myself. As to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is also a member, I do not know what his capacities are in that way. The others have been soldiers, and I admit that a portion of the committee know a good deal about war; but there are four or five of us who do not know anything about such things.

I only rose to protest against going into these questions now. If there is anything wrong about the Signal Service let it come up in an orderly way. If there is anything wrong about officers being allowed to remain at any one place, let that come up on a proposition from the Committee on Military Affairs. I do hope that the Senate, as we have only nine more days remaining of the session, and as we have the sundry-civil bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and quite a number of important bills to pass, and there will have to be much conference with committees of the other House, will keep complicated questions out of this bill.

I repeat that in all the action of the Committee on Appropriations the Senator from Illinois has seemed as anxious to keep clear of general legislation as any of us, and I do hope that he will, in this instance, when he sees what trouble it is making, let it go.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I take all the criticism that may come from any person in reference to this provision. The House proposed to strike generally at all staff officers and included every officer on detail, providing that all should be returned to their commands within three years. They struck down the staff officers of the generals of the Army. We modified that and thought we were doing as little as possibly could be done, so as to make some medium between the House and Senate, by striking all that out and putting merely that portion in which is now before the Senate. We thought that was as little as we could do. I would much rather have seen the bill come from the House without any legislation on it. I did not provoke or suggest this legislation. What I did was to try to modify the proposition, which I thought a very harsh one, that came from the House.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, only one word more and I am done. I believe that if we advise the gentlemen of the House that under our rules we are prohibited from placing any general legislation upon appropriation bills, when under the rulings of the Senate we are hardly allowed to amend even the legislation that they send to us, they will generally acquiesce in allowing provisions of general legislation to go out, especially as an extra session of Congress will be inevitable if some of these important bills fail, and we have made fair provisions for carrying out all the provisions of existing law. I believe it would be stronger to take the ground that we can not consider general legislation on appropriation bills, especially at this time, in view of the great delay that has been had in both Houses over the tariff bill, by striking it out altogether, than to present it in a modified form when the controversy comes up between the House and Senate as to which is the better, because it will be conceded that something has been done in the way of general legislation. I think we had better have none and defend ourselves for striking it all out than to argue the question between the modified form presented by the Senate and the still more objectionable form presented by the House. I hope the Senator from Illinois, when he sees the trouble we are getting into, will see that it is best to let this matter go, perhaps for this session.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois will remember that when this question came up in committee I reserved the right to oppose the amendment in the Senate. The more I think of it, the more objection I have to this clause. I do not think that the Senate, especially upon an appropriation bill, is prepared or has the knowledge requisite to take wise action on this subject of administration. It is purely a question of administration as to what officers shall be sent to one duty or to another duty, as to what officers shall be kept in Washington and how long they shall be kept here. Something must be trusted in this matter of administration to the Department that has charge and jurisdiction of any service or any corps.

It looks now as if there was an evil in the way of favoritism as to officers remaining long in easy and comfortable places; but I know enough about the subject to know that in many cases there may be special duties that require an Army officer to be kept in Washington more than three years. In fact I know enough about it to believe that there are some cases where, for the good working of the service, it is better that an officer should stay here three, six, nine, or even twelve years, or without limit. All of that should be largely left, I repeat, to the Department as a matter of administration. If it is to be revised, then I agree fully with the Senator from Kentucky that the Military Committee, with the Senator from Illinois at its head, should take up deliberately the whole subject-matter of the Signal Service, its relation to the Army, its relation to the reports upon the weather, of so much value to the industrial interests of the country, and frame a bill, and then let us consider the matter upon such a bill and upon such a report.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not like to have the assertion made so often that the Military Committee should consider these questions and report upon them. I have introduced bills at every Congress that has met since I have been in the Senate on these subjects, and I have never been able to have one considered yet. To-day, on the table of the Senate are bills coming from the Military Committee on these very subjects that have never been permitted to be considered. I do not like to have that said all the time in view of the fact I state.

Mr. HALE. I am not in any way finding fault with the duties and the industry of the Military Committee, but certainly somewhere there has got to be a set and determined opposition to appropriation bills being made the vehicle for general legislation. My experience at the last session led me to believe, as I do now, that the committee itself must take that step; that it must resist legislation upon appropriation bills. Otherwise other committees will become remiss and will depend upon putting their provisions upon appropriation bills, and not only will that be the evil, but in the end the Appropriations Committee itself, which has great duties legitimately intrusted to it, will be broken down. The fact that committees report and can not get their bills upon the Calendar considered ought not to be any reason why at last they should be tacked upon appropriation bills.

Mr. LOGAN. This provision was not tacked upon an appropriation bill by the committee. This is a proposition that came from the House and which was modified by the Committee on Appropriations. The Senate had nothing to do with putting it on the bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has made it a great deal better than the House made it. He has, as he says, simply modified the House action. In the naval appropriation bill, where the Senator was with me on the sub-committee, we not only did that but we went further; we not only struck out every particle of legislation that the House had put upon that bill, but we refused to report in any manner that legislation, simply putting ourselves upon the ground that we would report a bill to maintain the naval establishment and to build up a new Navy. There is not another thing upon the naval appropriation bill as reported but that. I wish the Army bill was just like that. The Senator has gone very far toward it, but not quite far enough, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, as I consented to perhaps all these various forms of amendment in committee, I feel as though I ought to say something about the reasons which justified me in that consent. I will say, however, that my proposition goes further a great deal than that made by the Senator from Illinois. I believe in absolutely cutting off all details at a certain time, and I believe in doing that as a matter of legislation, because the legislation must control as it ought to control the Army, because in a time of peace it needs that control more than it does in time of war. It assimilates itself more and more in peace to the civil department of the Government and ought to come more directly under legislative control, when we do not need the autocratic control of one man, whom we make responsible for the movements and the operations of the Army, and must give him power in accordance with his responsibility.

In the first place, I was in favor of this proposition for the very reason that it is going to take men out of the Signal Service Corps, not because I dislike that corps, but because they are among the most conspicuous examples as I think of the evils of the system of continuous detail. There are men in that corps who have been there for seventeen or eighteen years. I do not know a single one of them; I do not know that I am familiar even with their names. I mention that to show that there can be no suspicion that I have any personal ill-will toward any one of them.

I want to say in regard to the head of the bureau, that he is a man who, as a soldier, was entitled to, as he has received, the plaudits of his countrymen. No reputation, I think, is fairer than his, and the only thing that his country has ever done that I think was against him was putting him at the head of the Signal Corps. He came here fresh from service in the field, from the command of an army, and was put at the head of a bureau insignificant in its ordinary and local scope, comparatively speaking, and ill suited to a man of the active habit which had characterized General Hazen during all the years of his manhood. From that has grown up the incongruity of the bureau itself as a branch of the military establishment—and the question as to what its duties were—the mere perfunctory kind of duties properly lodged with it, and the fact that it embraced civilians in its office as well as enlisted men and a few officers all contributed to that, out of which has grown a mess humiliating to this able and gallant man, humiliating to some extent to all of us, in that it has involved in the way it has done the administration of that bureau.

Certain things that have recently come under my observation lead me to believe that these men should be taken away and sent to their companies, where in the contemplation of the law they are needed, without in any way impairing the efficiency of the service. I have in my hand a joint resolution which I will ask the Secretary to read. I will preface the reading by stating that the resolution was drawn, I am informed by good authority, in the Signal Service Bureau, and I offer it now for the purpose of showing something of what that bureau is doing and of the men who are in its employment and where they have been employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind, for the use of the Signal Office, 2,000 copies of a report on the meteorology, geography, botany, and zoology of Alaska, by Lucian M. Turner; also, 2,000 copies of a report on the same subjects and on the ethnology of Alaska, by E. W. Nelson; and 2,000 copies of a report of observations on Mount Whitney relative to the absorption of the sun's heat by the earth's atmosphere, by Professor Langley; and he is also authorized to contract for the illustrations.

Mr. PLUMB. It appears from that, on the face of it at all events, that these eminent scientific civilians are in the employ of the General Government, and that they have had so much time that the personnel of that establishment is so much in excess of any requirement necessary to report the weather in the sections of the country where agriculture exists, where the people raise crops, where they sail ships carrying the commerce of this country, that they have been in Alaska, not reporting, I take it, the weather out in that country, because that would be a matter of very minor consequence, but working up the ethnology, the botany, the meteorology, and so on of that remote and I have no doubt very interesting section of country. That is in no way as I think cognate to the service, and in no way embraced within the proper purview of its duties. More than all that, it is traversing the direct line which is being traversed by another Department of the Government. If it is true that these three men could be detailed for duty in Alaska, if they are of that eminent character which would appear from their characterization by the Department in the draft of this joint resolution, then certainly they could safely be brought home and put upon some duty here that they are qualified to fill, and these Army officers could be sent back to the companies which they have not seen for fifteen or eighteen years, and where according to the theory of the law they are necessary, or the places which they have so long abandoned would have been abolished by law.

I believe in short details where details are necessary, on account of the regard I have for the Army itself, for what I believe is its best interest, and I am unwilling that we should keep up an Army as a basis either for existing operations of a military kind or as a foundation to be built on hereafter in the case of an emergency if the country shall need great bodies of troops, and then constantly deplete it and break up its organization by detailing men for the performance of civil duty upon any theory whatever.

I do not believe it is possible that there will be found within the limits of the Army, well officered as it is, any men so well qualified for the discharge of any duty but that some person in civil life equally well qualified can be found. If he is well qualified, then the Army has the more need of him, for he possesses the special qualifications fitting him for the duties which he is discharging in the Army and he should be kept there in order to make the Army, which is to be our reliance in case of need, all the better for his presence there. If we draw them out we are constantly depreciating the value of the Army.

I believe that these Army officers should be detailed for some purpose outside, but when they have made their tour of duty they ought to go back, in order that the Army may have the benefit of that tour of duty and of the enlargement of their faculties by reason of it. I think that detailing officers for a long time begets in them the idea that they are not a proper part of the military establishment. It begets in them the idea, which to some extent has been made manifest recently, that they are an integral part of the Government in a sphere so important that the Government can not get along without them.

I do not believe that there is anything that these men are doing but what could be done as readily or nearly as readily by an abundance of men already in the service of a much lower rank. The information which we rely upon for the purpose of telling of the existence or the coming of storms is after all transmitted to this central bureau by the enlisted men of that corps, some five hundred in number, and by men on duty at the various posts throughout the United States which have been made signal stations, where the meteorological conditions of any particular moment made necessary are transmitted to the office at Washington, where the functions are to gather them up and retransmit them to all portions of the country and make certain deductions from them which may be said to convey some indication of coming conditions of the weather.

I do not believe that this generally requires the exercise of any very great ability. I would say if I were not somewhat modestly inclined that I believe some officers who have gone into that corps within the last two years are as well qualified to discharge the highest functions of it as some of those men who have been there for fifteen years. I believe if the average Army officer should be drawn in there he would become quite as familiar with what is necessary to be done as a corps of intelligent civilians, that we do not get rid of at all, who are there constantly; and the corps is constantly increasing.

The general question having been touched on, I desire to say that I think it is an anomaly to have an institution of this kind connected with the War Department. I hope the time will never come in this country when we shall have an army enlisted and kept up for the purposes of place, when we shall have the agents of destruction waiting as hand-maids upon the interests of production, when the question of the course of storms and of the meteorology which affects the growing crops and all the great and vast civil interests of this people shall be dealt out to them by the man with the musket. I want the Army kept within its true limits, and in the performance of its true functions in time of peace, taking a back seat and coming to the front only when there is fighting to be done.

This bureau ought to go to the Department of Agriculture. It is the hand-maid of agriculture and of commerce. While I think its benefits have been extolled more highly than they deserve, at the same time it is probably a growing science. We are probably upon the threshold of discoveries in connection with it which are of the greatest importance. At all events it is an interesting and valuable field; we can afford to enter upon it and to spend considerable sums of money for the development of this science and for the record of current events which throw light upon it, in the interest, however, of commerce and of agriculture, not for the purpose of making a place for anybody, not for the purpose of providing easy berths for Army officers or anybody else, but all the time keeping it within the performance of its true functions.

The joint resolution prepared, as I said, by the Signal Corps illustrates the inevitable tendency of things, which can only be corrected by legislation. Here is a bureau performing duties already of the Agricultural Department. I am informed that some time since one of the civilians in that corps applied to the Secretary of War for transportation to attend a forestry convention at Cincinnati, and on being asked why he desired to go to that forestry convention as a member of the Signal Corps he replied that forestry was intimately connected with the science of meteorology or that meteorology was intimately connected with forestry. Thus at one single step this institution was proposing to grasp to itself one of the most important and useful functions of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator calls attention to what undoubtedly is an abuse, the stretching out of a bureau or department and seeking to aggrandize itself and to take to itself subjects-matter that do not belong to it. I agree with him fully that the Signal Service ought not to have anything to do with experiments in Alaska and in other places to which he has referred; but he says that that shows illustratively the need of legislation. Let me ask him whether the remedy is not by legislation, but by refusing to appropriate money? The remedy, I agree with him, is with the Committee on Appropriations. If this bureau or any bureau goes outside of its proper vocation and seeks to build itself up at the expense of taking from others, the remedy is in our refusing to appropriate money, confining them in the sums that we appropriate to what will be sufficient to perform their legitimate duty, and we do not need any legislation. To cut off the supplies will cure that trouble.

Mr. PLUMB. As the Senator from Maine suggests, that undoubtedly is the most obvious way of reaching it, and I cheerfully admit that the proposition of the Senator from Illinois is only an incident to this main one; but the discussion has taken a wide range. We have discussed the Signal Corps, and for the purpose of opposing the amendment or putting it before the Senate in such a way that it should not be adopted, that corps has been applauded and the work of those men has been sought to be put in such a position of importance as that they are not to be touched. I reply to that simply by saying that this department is doing what it ought not to do; that it has got more agencies already than it ought to have; and that therefore if we propose to take away some of the men who are detailed to it we are not in any way infringing upon its lawful prerogative.

The answer of the Senator from Illinois to the question about legislation, it seems to me, while perhaps not entirely conclusive in taking this proposition without the rule, is justified by the fact that the House sent us a proposition touching upon the general subject. Two methods were left open to the committee in treating it. One was to take it out entirely either upon the ground that the legislation proposed was totally unwise, or upon the ground that if possible no legislation should be permitted upon an appropriation bill; the other was that it should be amended so as to make it conform to the views of the committee, in the hope that those views might in time become the views of the Senate in regard to the subject-matter. That is a question in which I agree in the main with the Senator from Maine. I think there is no dissent from it, but I call his attention to the fact that the most effectual way of reaching propositions of this kind is through a money bill.

In many ways we are compelled to touch upon them. There is a world of detail in legislation which will never be incorporated by substantive bills, by bills introduced for that particular purpose. There are things that come to the attention in investigations subsidiary or connected with the appropriation of money which themselves would not constitute the substance practically of a separate measure, but which being grouped with other measures and put together make a bill having form and substance and dimensions sufficient to attract the attention of the Senate, which considered in a separate measure would lead to a world of discussion, and the Senate would lose itself in the matter of detail merely, and thus nothing would be accomplished. Many things will necessarily be touched upon in this way which could not be touched upon otherwise.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a question for information, as he is a member of the same committee?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to know something about the present status of the business in the Signal Corps. May I inquire of that Senator whether there is not the authority of law now for the transference of officers who are to-day conducting the affairs of that department to other fields of duty? If the superintendent of the Signal Service is placed there as such superintendent, does it carry with it the idea that he is to be a permanent officer located there, and that he is not subject to transference?

Mr. PLUMB. As I understand it, the Secretary of War, who originally made these details upon the request of the Chief of the Signal Service, has the same power to turn them into their regiments that he had to put them there. This is a direction to him to do that which he has now authority by law to do.

Mr. McPHERSON. Was he not also appointed and confirmed by the Senate as the superintendent of that particular corps?

Mr. PLUMB. The Chief Signal Officer is beyond the power of removal of anybody except in the manner provided in the Articles of War.

Mr. McPHERSON. If I do not interfere too much with the Senator from Kansas, I wish to say that I was very much impressed with the logic of the Senator from Illinois. It does seem to me that the history of that department is such that the argument of the Senator from Illinois ought to be very convincing. The idea that a man being placed at the head of that department occupies a position that no other man on earth could fill is to my mind a very peculiar idea. We have had the experience in the father, so to speak, of the Signal Service, the man who originated it, who had done everything for it almost to build it up. He has since died and somebody else has been appointed in his stead, and we have no knowledge that the business of that office is not progressing and proceeding in a very satisfactory way.

But there are other things connected with it. There are scandals that have grown up, defalcations have occurred, and some of the Signal Service officers are to-day fugitives. I believe that if the recommendations of the Senator from Illinois were carried out we should have less defalcation; we should have less scandal; we should have new blood, new officers with new ideas, if you please, to take the place of the older ones who have been there long enough to engineer and to originate schemes of plunder which the experience of the past has shown to have taken place in that department.

Therefore it is that I believe the proper place to make this legislation is where you are appropriating money for that department, and it should be moved right here upon this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not care to enter into the question suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, nor had I any reason to suppose that there was anything wrong in the administration of the department so far as it affected the integrity of its chief or any of his subordinates.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know that, and I referred to it to show that it has not lost its virtue and its intelligence because one man had died and another had been put in his place.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a very fair consideration. I do not believe the bureau would lose if its entire personnel should be changed in six months; but I say now, in regard to the question of where this legislation should be done, we are confronted with a condition of things in which we are to do something or nothing at the close of a short session of Congress, and we shall continue to be confronted with conditions of this kind hereafter. It has been found almost impossible, in many of these minor things at least, where legislation should be had, to secure it except in connection with appropriation bills.

It is probably proper that the Military Committee should consider this question, but why the Military Committee more than the Agricultural Committee, or why the Agricultural Committee more than the Public Lands Committee? On various propositions they should go first to the Agricultural Department, then to the Interior Department, and so on. The Military Committee, as I happen to know from my service on it, finds its time almost wholly taken up in the consideration of personal grievances, bills to restore officers to rank which they have lost, to positions which in some way have escaped them, to rectify all that body of evils, which these people see more clearly than anybody else, which affect their rank or their pay. I venture to appeal to every member of that committee if three-quarters of his time is not occupied, and necessarily occupied according to the rules and requirements of the Senate, in the consideration of matters which affect not the administration of the Army at large in its organization, but simply the grievances of its personnel. And unless we can have a thorough understanding that this class of cases shall take the background, and that the Military Committee shall address itself to matters of Army organization and the Naval Committee to matters of naval organization, to the exclusion of these quarrels and bickerings about rank and grade, actual and relative, the Military Committee will never originate any bill which will pass the Senate reorganizing the Army or introducing any reform in it; neither will the Naval Committee do a similar service for the Navy, and so on all around, more or less, we come to concern ourselves about those things which are personal and not general; and until we turn our backs upon the whole policy it will be left to the last moment to put legislation of importance upon appropriation bills or simply to say that by reason of the arbitrary enforcement of the rule (founded in reason, it is true) we shall submit to evils that we labor under rather than attempt to cut them off by violating a rule of the Senate, wholesome of course as it is, but at the same time liable in its enforcement to lead to unjust results.

Mr. BAYARD. If the point of order that I suggested is to be sustained, this debate is simply superfluous.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator will waive the point for a few moments. I wish to submit a few considerations.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, as a member of the sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs which has been referred to by the Senator from Texas, it has been my duty to consider this subject more or less at intervals for several months; and there is upon the Calendar, as we have been reminded already, a bill substantially reorganizing the Signal Corps, a bill that in its general features I heartily approve.

There is no doubt whatever that the status of that corps requires thorough investigation and definite establishment. It is in a somewhat anomalous condition. It has two classes of duties which need not be conjoined. One of them pertains alone to the conveyance of intelligence by signals, by flags by day and by lights by night. There is nothing in that which requires the establishment of a separate corps or a separate school of instruction. All that can be taught at the several military establishments at West Point, at Leavenworth, and at Fortress Monroe, and it also can be taught in the field or at the leading garrisons, and bright young men can learn in a very few weeks to make excellent signal officers. The two things ought to be detached.

It is not a question just now upon this bill and upon this special amendment as to what ought to be done. We know very well what ought to be done. The two should be separated, and the observations of the weather and prophecies concerning it ought to be made an entirely separate branch. They might be retained in an organization that would make a sort of wing of the Army, a semi-detached wing of the Army, and they might be put in one of the civilian departments of the service.

But the range that the discussion has taken shows that it is utterly impossible to reach the real roots and merits of this service upon an appropriation bill, and we are touching only one of the small minor evils of which complaint has been made, and are not meeting the necessities of the case. It is more or less an embarrassment that a young subaltern officer should be detached from his company or regiment and sent away for a very considerable time on a business, no matter what it is, scientific or otherwise, but it is comparatively speaking a small evil, because if there be a captain of artillery in the Signal Service now, those of us who have had experience know that in time of peace his duty at any one of the artillery posts along the shore can be perfectly well performed by a lieutenant of his company.

In objecting to the amendment in question, I do it not for the good of these young men, however excellent they may be in character, however meritorious; not in respect to their record; I do it for the sake of a great establishment of inestimable value to the whole country, commercially and agriculturally, for the pending amendment would return to his regiment or to his command every single officer of the Signal Service Corps who for several years has made one of its daily observations.

There is a civilian professor to whom reference has been made. For several years he has not made a weather prediction. He is a man of great scientific acquirements in his particular way and is considered of inestimable value in the Signal Corps, but he does not make the weather observations. I repeat, and I ask the few Senators who take an interest in this subject to remember, that the passage of this amendment would detach from that service and return to some local command away from Washington every officer who for many years has made one of the weather observations. It is quite useless it seems to me, I do not say ridiculous, to assert that anybody can learn these things in a few days.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not proposed to return them all at once.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know the Senator from Illinois has offered a modification of that; but I am referring to the amendment as it stands in the printed bill. It certainly does not accord with any man's experience in any business in the world to say that a young man can be brought here and taught this business in a very short time. It can not be done. It is not alone a matter of taking the record of the barometer and thermometer and of the wind-gauge and all that every day; it is the rapid and simultaneous collection of these observations from points all over the country, and upon them, after long study and long experience, basing some sort of estimate of what the weather is likely to be within the next eight or twelve or twenty-four hours. As to the value of this service the testimony is utterly incontestible and overwhelming.

Reference has been made to the resolutions passed favoring the continuance of the corps by various boards of trade and chambers of commerce, &c., as if they had all been stimulated by letters written from the headquarters of the corps. They come in abundance, freely given. I know it has been disclosed that some of these officers have of themselves asked that these things be said, but they have been said by boards of trade and others with entire heartiness and perfect unanimity and have been sent without solicitation or suggestion; and any man who desires to know what the opinion of the commercial world is about this service can very easily obtain it by a very little correspondence.

Of course there are minor abuses; of course there have been evidences of lack of tact and skill. The disclosure of personal errors upon the part of some of these officers has nothing to do with the great value of the general service.

Reference was made by the Senator from Kansas to a resolution referred to the Committee on Printing for the publication of certain reports upon the entomology, &c., of Alaska, as if (one was compelled to infer from his remarks) an officer salaried by the Government had been detailed from his natural duties in the Signal Corps to go to Alaska to make these inquiries. Now, these are the very simple facts: The Smithsonian Institution inquired whether at a signal station in Alaska there were not men qualified to make some of these inquiries, or they may have been sent there upon ordinary duty; they were privates in the corps; and it was at the request and suggestion of the Smithsonian Institution that these young men wrote these treatises and did this work.

Whether those things should be printed or not is a matter for the Smithsonian Institution to judge. It had better take them and print them as part of its own work. If it is part of its own work it is not part of the Signal Service business either to collect that kind of information or print it; but inasmuch as the duties of the private at stations require him only a portion of the day, and require exact, faithful, perfect performance of his duty at that time and full reports upon it afterward, there is no harm whatever, but, on the contrary, good, if this young man has a taste for some of the natural sciences, in having him record his observations at the same time. There was no neglect of duty, and there was no special detachment, as I have been informed, for this matter came before the Printing Committee some time ago, and I have heard about it at different times. There was no neglect of duty and no special detachment in the performance of the service.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I did not hear all his statement, but I think I understand the scope of it. Then I understand this proposition is simply to print something which the Senator thinks was properly acquired?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think there was no harm in these young men, stationed where they were, devoting a part of their time to the study and accumulation of information of that description.

Mr. PLUMB. If I wanted to make an adverse criticism on this corps, I would take the Senator from Connecticut's and not my own, because this information having been obtained entirely apart from their Signal Service duty it becomes necessary to have a lot of it printed for the use of the Signal Corps.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it was. My opinion is that resolution sleeps and will sleep in the Committee on Printing, and if the information should be printed, the Smithsonian Institution will have to attempt it within its own proper sphere. That shows, I think, that there was no abuse of the service in that particular matter. We have pending a bill which goes over all this subject, and if that bill can not be acted on now, it would not be a bad thing to require some small committee to look into the whole subject during the vacation and present a bill, for there is a demand and a desire that this corps should be put upon its proper foundation and permanently and definitely organized. It is now in an unsatisfactory condition, because it gives rise to various dissatisfactions and grumblings and criticisms. Any corps, I do not care what it is, will have some man who is unwise in it at times, who will bring criticism, but these criticisms, undoubtedly arising from real defects, extend over that which is of itself meritorious and ought to be continued.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Connecticut if in the investigation which the sub-committee made of this service the fact of evils growing out of the long details was not taken into careful consideration by that committee and attempted to be provided against in the bill reported?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly; but I do not know that I will go further. I do not know but that I would organize a corps in such a way as to contemplate permanency of service in it just as we do in the Engineer Corps. You might as well say you could detail men from time to time to serve as engineers. So you could, and they would do something, but they would make a botch of it. Every army in the world, as a matter of pride, has classes of very high scientific attainments in certain special lines; and it is quite right we should do it. We should have eminent engineers, but I am not quite sure that the Signal Corps ought not to be entirely detached from the line of the Army, so that when a man was put there, either by appointment or promotion, from a sergeant (as is now provided for to a certain extent; two a year are allowed to go from sergeants, to be examined and be made second-lieutenants) he should stay. The whole of them should be drawn by selection from civil life or by detachment from the Army, if they like this service and are attached to it, so as to make them entirely independent. I would organize them as a special branch, and leave no possibility of complaint hereafter about detaching men from their several regiments.

But I beg the Senate not to make this bureau entirely useless by this amendment, certainly as was originally reported by the committee, or to inflict a serious injury upon it by the requirement even of these detachments from year to year. You might almost as well tell me that my old and venerable friend, Dr. Peters, now at Clinton, New York, where he has been many years mapping out the stars and where he has discovered more asteroids than any other astronomer, could be very well replaced by some young student.

After that young man had pursued the same kind of work for ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years, he might, or he might not, be as good as Dr. Peters. You can not avoid acknowledging that there is such a thing as special qualification and an inestimable value in long study and devotion to a subject, and this matter of weather observation may be worth 50 in the 100, or it may be worth 80 in the 100, as it is now, or it may be worth 90 in the 100, but if you are in the habit of changing men frequently it will be worth no more, or hardly as much, as a good old farmer's guess, because he has been all his life long looking at the winds and clouds, and makes a good estimate for his locality of the weather for the next twenty-four hours. If you are to cover a wide region and have it done with any scientific accuracy at all you must devote men to it.

I shall therefore, certainly with a view to the good of this branch of the service, and not because I have any pets or care for the purposes of the public service what becomes of or to what sphere of duty these young men go, but because I regard the public benefit, oppose any interference whatever with that corps upon this bill, and I will be ready tomorrow to take up the bill on the Calendar for its reorganization.

I will add just one word more, which I always say when I have an opportunity, that I am the unyielding opponent of general legislation upon appropriation bills. It is the delenda est Carthago which I shall always utter when this question comes up.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, about four years ago the President of the United States interposed his negative to the passage of an Army appropriation bill, and the reason given in his veto message was that it contained features of general legislation. I thought then and think now it was an unwarranted exercise of his power; it was a criticism upon the form of legislation, a matter with which, I think, he ought to have nothing to do; but notwithstanding it was beneficial in this respect, that it pointed at a vicious form of legislation. An appropriation bill ought to be nothing but the machinery to find money to carry out existing laws. That is all that it is intended to be, and the rule of the Senate, I think, will sustain the point in this case that this is a violation, this being a general appropriation bill, because it proposes general legislation which, the rule says, shall not be received upon an appropriation bill. I therefore think it is not worth while to delay by debate on this subject.

This apparently will take from those who administer the Army and control it all discretion as to the permanence of any officer in his place of duty in the Departments at Washington. It makes it mandatory that they shall be removed after a certain period. Now, as far as I know, the common sense of mankind has digested the wisdom of good government into a very common phrase, to get the right man in the right place; and how can you get him there without testing him and trying him, and when he is found there he certainly ought not to be disturbed. This amendment proposes to unship all details not only for the Signal Service, of which I know very little of the merits or demerits of the individuals concerned, but also for the Engineer Corps, and there may be others of which I know nothing, but the principle which includes the one ought to be applicable to the others.

I do not think an appropriation bill is the proper vehicle for a change of the legislation on this subject. I would not have uttered my own judgment against that of Senators of more experience in respect to the wisdom of rotation in station by officers of the Army, but it certainly is new legislation which makes very wide and sweeping changes without the proper notification which should accompany it. Therefore I have raised the point of order. It has been before the Chair to decide since I did raise it, and why it has been debated I can not tell, though I have no special objection to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The Chair understood the Senator from Delaware to withdraw the point of order for the time being. That was the cause of the discussion progressing. If the Senator now makes the point of order, the Chair will dispose of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to be allowed to say a few words in reference to what has been said.

Mr. BAYARD. The point of order is made on the amendment of the Senator, and then I trust the Senate will sustain the committee in striking out the words they have proposed to strike from the House bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Just one word. I did not expect this to go through without opposition. I do not know that anybody will vote for it; that is a matter I care very little about. I have done my duty in reference to it. I have reported several Army bills to the Senate, and I notice that whenever legislation is on an Army bill that is in the direction a Senator thinks right there is no objection made to it; but if there is a proposition on an Army bill that is in a direction where some Senator thinks it strikes somebody that probably he would rather not have touched, then there is objection to it because it is on an appropriation bill.

Now, I desire to answer the argument of the Senator from Delaware in a very few words. He says that the experience of mankind has proven that where you find the right man in the right place he must be kept there. The experience of monarchies has found that to be their decision, but the experience of republican forms of govenment has not found that to be correct. According to that theory the Senator, being an eminently wise man, would remain in the Senate forever, for experience has shown that he is qualified to perform the duties. According to the theory of the Senator a President of the United States who suits the people should be permitted to remain in that position during life. You can not apply one principle to the Army and insist that it is right and not apply it elsewhere. I totally disagree with the doctrine that no man is qualified to perform the duties of an office except somebody who has been tested. It is repugnant to the doctrine of equality of men and equal rights among men to perform these duties whenever they are selected to do it if they are qualified to do it.

I have nothing further to say except that this is a fair proposition to let these men go out after serving three years and let somebody else come in in their place. A part of them would be there over twenty years under this amendment. Those who have been there seventeen years would remain three years longer, and if twenty years is not long enough to make a detail from the Army, in God's name I want you to tell me how long you want them detailed for.

Senators on the right insist upon a bill that they have on the Calendar which will die on the 4th of March. That, they think, should be investigated and passed. Everybody in the Senate knows it will never be touched; it will never be reached; it will never be called up; and the Senators themselves will not call it up, for they will not have the opportunity. Every one knows that.

There is not a Senator here who can say that rotation in reference to this branch of the service ought not to exist, and the Senator from Delaware is entirely mistaken in reference to this amendment applying to the Engineer Corps. It does not apply to the Engineer Corps at all. Men are not detailed in Washington city from the Engineer Corps as contemplated in this bill. They are operated under a very different law, a law organizing them, making them a permanent establishment. They are detailed under an entirely different branch of the law from this.

Now I am ready to have the decision of the Chair in reference to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has raised the point of order upon the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations that it is objectionable to Rule 29. The Secretary will read the first paragraph of Rule 29.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as folows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under that the Chair holds that this is general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and therefore the point of order is well taken.

The committee propose to strike out from line 39, commencing with the word "and," to the word "duty," in line 52, inclusive. That amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 82, after the word "men," to strike out:

And section 1306 of the Revised Statutes is hereby so amended as to strike out the word "fifty," where it occurs in said section, and in lieu thereof inserting the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 86, to insert:

Provided, That commissioned officers of the Army not above the rank of captain may make deposits with any Army paymaster, not to exceed for any one year one-half of their annual salary; said deposits, on sums not less than $50, to draw 3 per cent. interest, payable when withdrawn: And provided further, That any officer making deposits may draw the same on his check whenever the accumulations shall amount to a sum equal to one year's salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 95, after the word "shortest," to strike out "through" and insert "usually traveled;" and in line 96, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five," and insert "eighty;" so as to read:

For mileage of officers of the Army for travel, over shortest usually traveled routes, not to exceed $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 98, after the word "shortest," to strike out "through" and insert "usually traveled;" so as to read:

And from and after the passage of this act mileage of officers of the Army shall be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes between the points named in the order, and the necessity for such travel in the military service shall be certified to by the officer issuing the order and stated in said order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 103, before the word "contract," to strike out "fifty" and insert "not exceeding eighty;" so as to read:

For miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of not exceeding eighty contract surgeons and one hundred and sixty hospital-matrons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 104, after the word "hospital-matrons," to insert:

Provided, That the office of assistant surgeon-general of the Army is hereby abolished.

Mr. BAYARD. That amendment is obnoxious to Rule 29, and I raise the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not object to the Senator's raising the point of order; of course I have no right to do so; but I should like to give to the Senate the reason. Objection being made to the bill as recommended here, it is taken for granted that I have put something very obnoxious in it. I notice the Senate passed over three or four amendments that were legislation that the Senator did not object to. It only shows what I said a while ago that where legislation happens to strike at something that is unfavorably considered by Senators they object to it, and where it does not they do not. The reason for this I will give in a very few words.

The Medical Department of the Army has in it to-day——

Mr. BAYARD. May I say to the honorable Senator that it is not a question of the merits or demerits of the proposition? It is that upon an appropriation bill this amendment is not proper. In the language of the rule, it "shall not be received." It would be pertinent upon a bill to reorganize the Army. Then I should listen with a great deal of respect to the opinion of the Senator upon such subjects; but my objection is to the form of the proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. I see what the Senator's objection is. I was only astonished that he did not make the point on other items, where legislation much more important than this was on the bill and was adopted.

In the Medical Corps of the Army, with a very few officers there is one brigadier-general and there are six colonels. There is not a corps and never was and never will be again with such rank as belongs to the Medical Corps of the Army, and such an expensive organization. The office of assistant surgeon-general is conceded by every one who has any knowledge of the corps to be absolutely without any reason. It is now vacant, and for the purpose of saving the Government $4,000 a year we thought it proper to let the office not be filled, and that is all there is of it. It does not turn anybody out of office. It merely abolishes the office and leaves one brigadier-general and five colonels in the Medical Corps.

There is one vacancy. We thought to save $4,000 where there was no necessity whatever for the office as the Secretary of War and everybody else admits who has any knowledge on the subject. There is no necessity for it whatever. We thought it would be a saving to the Government and would be in the line of economy to abolish it and not appoint anybody to fill the place. If there is any vicious legislation in that, which is saving something to the Government by not filling an office that there is no reason for in the world, I should like to know it.

I wish to say further that I have a letter in my possession now written, not to me but to a high official, a man whose name was sent to the Senate to fill this office to be called assistant surgeon-general, saying that he is willing to reduce his rank from a colonelcy, which he has had for six years, to a colonelcy to commence now without any increase of pay. It does not increase him; it does not promote him; it degrades the man and cuts him off six years by his appointment now. We thought it was a proper thing to abolish the office. There is considerable question in reference to the law governing this case and whether he can be appointed at all. He wrote a letter to a certain gentleman in this city asking him to select some Senator who was his friend and ask that Senator to make an objection to this Army appropriation bill. I do not know whether that Senator was chosen or not; but he makes the objection. I have got that letter in my possession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] submits the point of order on this amendment. The Chair will hold the point of order well taken.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines, 113, 114, and 115, to strike out:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "quarters," in line 115, to insert:

For the officer in command of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in addition to his pay in the Army for the next fiscal year, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 118, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the Pay Department of the Army from $11,800,000 to $12,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso between line 131 and line 150:

Provided further, That disbursing officers shall be required to give bonds, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as the Secretary of War may direct and approve: And provided further, That whenever a vacancy occurs in the office of Paymaster-General, assistant paymaster-general, deputy paymaster-general, or paymaster in the Army, by death, dismissal, resignation, retirement, or other cause, the same shall not be filled by appointment or otherwise; and whenever the force in the Pay Department shall not be sufficient for the due payment of the troops, the Secretary of War is authorized and required to detail, under such regulations as he may prescribe, an officer or officers in the Quartermaster's Department to supply the deficiency; and when the paymasters have all died, been dismissed, resigned, or been retired, as hereinbefore stated, the payment of the Army shall be wholly transferred to the Quartermaster's Department, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Whenever, however, a vacancy occurs in the office of the Paymaster-General, the duties of that office shall devolve on the next officer in rank in the Pay Department.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That vacancies that may hereafter occur in the Pay Corps of the Army by reason of death, resignation, dismissal, or retirement, shall not be filled by original appointment until the Pay Corps shall by such vacancies be reduced to forty paymasters, and the number of the Pay Corps shall then be established at forty and no more.

Mr. LOGAN. On line 152, after the word "the," the second word in that line, I wish to insert "grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major;" so as to read:

Provided, That vacancies that may hereafter occur in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major in the Pay Corps of the Army, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major?

Mr. LOGAN. That is all there are, I will explain to the Senator.

Mr. CONGER. In regard to the part stricken out, it seems to be based on the idea that you shall transfer the paying department to the purchasing department and leave no check on the quartermasters.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator misunderstands it entirely. We strike out that whole thing. The proposition of the House was to turn the Pay Corps over to the Quartermaster's Corps, which I have no strictures to make on now, because the thing strikes me as being so absurd that I do not suppose anybody would want it. We strike that out and then provide that the Pay Corps as it exists now shall not have any new appointment made in it until it is reduced to forty. That is all.

Mr. CONGER. There is no provision in this for filling the offices of major and lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is mistaken. He does not understand it. It provides that there shall be no original appointments in these vacancies; that is, no outside man shall be appointed. It does not stop promotion. There shall be no more appointments in the corps, but they can be moved up to the higher grade until the whole number gets to forty, and no more. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that this is legislation, as has been before ruled. I think what the gentleman in charge of the bill says as to the fitness of it is undoubtedly correct; but I wish to stick to the principle of no legislation on appropriation bills, and that forces me to make the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator withdraw the point of order for a moment, until I give my reasons?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. My own judgment is that the objection being made to the proviso which we have introduced here the result is exactly putting the bill in such a condition that we can not agree to it. The House undertook to consolidate the Pay Corps with the Quartermaster's Corps, when there is no more relation between those two corps than there is between anything a person may imagine and another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They ought to be a check on each other.

Mr. LOGAN. Instead of being a check on one another they have fixed it so that they will be together. For instance, a captain in the Quartermaster's Corps to-day if a major should die would fill a major's place without any promotion, making the thing, I will not say absurd, but making it very strange at least.

We called the Paymaster-General before us and asked him the number of paymasters he could get along with. He said he could get along with forty. There are fifty-four now. I have drawn up this provision that in the rank of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major of the Pay Corps there shall be no original appointment till the total comes down to forty. That does not interfere with the promotion of those now in, but there shall be no further appointments made to this corps from the outside until by retirement, death, and so forth, the corps shall be reduced to forty, and that it shall remain there. I think that is a wise provision. I have a letter here from the Paymaster-General. When he was before us I asked him to write out his views in reference to this matter, and he did so. His views conform precisely with the views of the committee in this provision, and I shall be very sorry to see it stricken out. I shall be sorry to see it stricken out for the reason that if we do that the House will insist on its proposition. I believe if we put this proposition in the House will agree to it, but if we strike it all out the House will insist upon its proposition, and then what kind of an amendment are you going to get? I think this is a better one than we shall get if we strike out the clause. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. CONGER. The House has followed out that universal feeling in the Army to shut out all civilians from any participation whatever in any civil service in connection with the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; that is true.

Mr. CONGER. And it throws together into the hands of the purchasing officer the payment of money without any check. It throws civilians out of any opportunity for service in the civil branch of the military establishment.

Mr. LOGAN. True; but that is what we strike out. I am opposed to it just as much as the Senator is, and for the same reason.

Mr. CONGER. Now, until there is some bill reorganizing the Army in all its branches that shall meet the approval of Congress, I object to making a difference of ten or twelve officers in the Paymaster's Corps. I do not care what the present Paymaster-General says; it has been reported time and time again that there were not paymasters enough personally and individually to perform the duties of paymasters and pay all the scattered troops of the United States on the different coasts and frontiers easily or safely. I suspect all these measures that seek to get into the military ring only those who have come from West Point and to shut out those citizens of the United States who from their ability and from their tact as business men may desire and their friends may desire that they shall have an opportunity even in the Army to perform the duties of civilians.

There is too much of that feeling of encroachment in the Army and in the Navy to-day. There is a kind of feeling among all the people of the United States and the young men of the United States that there is no admission to any position either in the military or civil part of the service of the Army or of the Navy unless it is through West Point or Annapolis, and there is a growing feeling that notwithstanding our theory that there shall be no title of honor and continual heredity of places of trust, we make the laws so as to make effectual classes in our Government and open the doors only to peculiar classes of our people. That will result in the destruction of the Army organization and the Navy organization whenever the representatives of the people come here with the feeling that all the people of the United States are excluded by our laws and that only privileged ranks shall have opportunities to engage in that service. When that comes to be understood, it will destroy the whole, and deservedly. I would guard against that.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. While I sympathize with him in regard to this exclusion, I trust he will not descend to put himself in the position of saying he would create unnecessary places to give persons outside of the Army a chance.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all. I have already answered that. I have said that from year to year, and up to within the last year, when it was proposed to cut down on some former occasion the number of paymasters, statements were made here officially and authoritatively that with our troops scattered as they have to be, and moving as they have to move all through the Western country, a few here and a few there, a small squad in this direction and troops in the field in another, it was impossible for the paymasters we had to personally attend to the payment of the troops and perform their duties, and therefore the number was not decreased.

Mr. PLUMB. The number of garrisons has been largely reduced, and it is the policy of the Government to continue that reduction by reason of settling the Indian difficulties on the frontier. So, even if that were true a few years ago it is no longer true, and the number of paymasters in the Army now is more than one-third of the number of garrisons, and I will venture to say that there are at least half the corps who do not do five days' work in a month.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know how much work they do. If they do but one day's work in a month, there must be so many to pay and take care of the money of the Government. If a less number will not do it, let them work what time they are required to. But the fact that garrisons and establishments are closed and reduced simply means that you throw off squads all over without garrisons, who camp on the plains in winter and summer as your record shows and watch on the mountains and on the prairies. You divide up a garrison into twenty squads, and they stay months and years wandering about separated from the garrisons.

Mr. PLUMB. That kind of service is not to be carried on any more.

Mr. CONGER. It has been carried on and every newspaper records it.

Mr. PLUMB. Not a single bit of service of that kind has been rendered during the last twelve months, and probably none will be in the next ten years.

Mr. CONGER. I would rather take the reports we see daily in the papers that our soldiers are pursuing Indians in this direction. Continual accounts come to us of their achievements this very winter in camps where human beings could scarcely be expected to live. There are in this city now young men whose health has been destroyed for life by exposure in tents and without tents in the pursuit of Indians this very winter and in watching and guarding our frontier.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not questioning that, but I was questioning their being away a time from the post. I say that kind of service is not carried on.

Mr. CONGER. Some of them have not been at a post for a month.

Mr. PLUMB. The garrisons are changed. It sometimes happens they go into tents. I know that is a very exposed and dangerous service, but it is very acceptable I have no doubt. I am very sorry for these men who are suffering so much more than soldiers ever suffered before or ever will again; but the fact is the paying is done at stations, as it properly would have to be done. The paymasters do not accompany detachments into the field; they do not have to be gone except on scouting parties more than a week at a time generally. It is very rare that any man goes out for a month anywhere. I do not think the Senator can find a sufficient statement that will substantiate the fact he states.

The Secretary of War concurred with the Paymaster-General in saying that the number of forty paymasters is abundant. It has been abundant any time within the last few years. One paymaster is stationed now at Boston, who pays only a company stationed in Boston Harbor, when he has the capacity and could just as well pay those stationed at New York, Charleston, Norfolk, and a dozen other places by going backward and forward, and it would not exhaust all his time to do that. That is, of course, proper enough as long as the number is kept up as it is now.

Mr. CONGER. Those are not the class of men who ought to be reduced. Those spoken of now are not the class of men who are taken and scattered off in the West. Those who have nice places in the cities are there for some peculiar reasons. I am talking about the men scattered over the Western country.

Mr. PLUMB. But this question of vacancies touches all alike. It is proposed here when vacancies occur that they are not to be filled until the number is reduced to forty.

Mr. CONGER. And to make additional liability, additional duty, on the men who perform service on the frontier. It will not affect the men who are at desks here.

Mr. LOGAN. The point of order, as a matter of course, if insisted on, is well taken. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must insist upon it on principle.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely ask to put on record in reply to the Senator from Michigan the reasons why it is proposed in this bill to insert this provision.

The House proposed, as I said, to merge the Pay Corps and the Quartermaster's Corps. That I do not think good legislation. I do not think that that would advance the interest of the country or of the Army in the slightest degree, but it would be a great disadvantage.

The two corps are entirely dissimilar. If the House had proposed to place the Quartermaster's Corps and the Commissary Corps together and merge them there would have been some good reason for that, because they are both purchasing corps. The Quartermaster's Corps furnishes all the transportation for the Army and purchases clothing and things of that kind. The Commissary Department furnishes rations and things of that kind for the Army. One furnishes that which hauls the other, and therefore if these two corps were put together, as one buys and the other furnishes transportation, there would be some reason in that; but there is no reason for putting the Pay and Quartermaster's Corps together, nor has it ever been considered a wise thing to do by any officer of the Army having great experience.

The evidence of General Sherman, of General Sheridan, of General Hancock, and of all the leading officers of the Army is entirely against a proposition of this kind, and I have the evidence here in my hand.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to a point which he does not seem to have understood exactly as I do, that this proposition made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is a modification of the proposition made by the House in this bill, in this, that instead of merging the Pay Corps and the Quartermaster's Corps together we strike that all out and provide for the Pay Corps as it now exists, except that we say when it is reduced to forty by retirement, death, or resignation it shall not be increased beyond that number. That interferes with no one now in the Pay Corps; it retains them all; but when the number is reduced by casualties to forty the corps shall not be increased beyond that number. We base that, as I said, on the evidence of the Paymaster-General. He says that he can get along with that number. He does not say that he prefers the number that now exists, but in answer to our question he says he can get along with forty, and gives the reasons for it. He says the railroad facilities and the concentration of troops, as was suggested by the Senator from Kansas, in large bodies gives him facilities for paying that he did not have before and that no other Paymaster-General had prior to this time. It being reduced to that number, he thinks he can get along with forty paymasters by the time this reduction would take effect; not now, but by the time that by death, resignation, and retirement the number should be reduced. The calculation shows that it would be several years before that can be done, the number being fifty-four now, unless some great calamity should strike that corps. He thinks by that time he can get along with forty when it is reduced to forty.

But, as I said, the proposition to insist that nothing shall go into this bill except that which legitimately belongs to it takes this out.

I think it is a much better provision than the provision of the House, and I will ask that the letter of the Paymaster-General, with the evidence of these general officers on the subject, be printed as a part of my remarks, so that the case may be in the RECORD, that everybody can see it if the question should arise again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done if there be no objection.

The documents submitted by Mr. LOGAN are as follows:

PAY DEPARTMENT, UNITED STATES ARMY, January 8, 1883.

SIR: In reply to your private note of this date I have the honor to state that during the five months ending November 30 the payments on account of mileage to officers of the Army amounted to $73,868, as against the sum of $103,642 for the corresponding period in 1881, showing a saving of about $30,000.

It is believed that the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year ($180,000) will be sufficient to cover all demands against that appropriation.

Referring to the House amendment for the gradual decrease of the Pay Department and its ultimate transfer to the Quartermaster's Department, allow me to say there are abundant reasons why this department should remain separate and distinct from any other.

On account of the increase of railroad mileage each year, making distant posts more accessible, the increased facilities for traveling and the consequent concentration of troops at large posts and the abandonment of small posts, I would recommend that no more paymasters be appointed until the number is reduced by retirement, death, and resignation below forty majors.

To hasten this reduction I recommend that those paymasters who are incapable of performing active service shall be placed upon the retired list at once, and that the law be so amended as to compel all officers of the Pay Department upon reaching the age of sixty-two years to retire from active service.

This change in the law would effect a reduction of ten paymasters within the next five years, as follows:

One paymaster-general, two assistant paymasters-general with the rank of colonel, and seven paymasters with the rank of major.

The safety of the public money is of the first importance. The present system of accountability is as near perfect as can be, and the liability to loss is reduced to the minimum.

The cost of paying the Army is found to be a fraction less than 2½ per cent. on the amount disbursed during the past fiscal year. The cost for the past five years has been but 2½ per cent.

The percentage will, of course, be reduced as paymasters go out of service.

The Browne amendment in the House bill contemplates the payment of the Army by the acting assistant quartermasters at posts. Of these there are over two hundred in the Army. Each one is a subaltern of the line, who, for the time being discharges the duty of quartermaster for the post where he may be serving with his company.

He is not bonded, nor is it practicable that he should be. His duties are principally the receipt, custody, and issue of quartermaster stores and property to the command. He has usually little or no money responsibility. His detail is temporary, and may be revoked at any time. To thrust a large money responsibility on such a young officer at a frontier station, away from a depository, compelling him to keep his funds in his personal possession, not subject to weekly examination by report from depositaries, is placing a temptation where it should be a duty to protect.

National-bank depositories are not to be found in the midst of camps.

The amount required for the payment of a muster period can not be accurately estimated in advance; an excess is usually asked—hence a balance will remain on hand to be held for casual payments. Against this balance there is no check.

Again, these balances though small in themselves in the aggregate withdraw a large amount from the active funds available for disbursement, and owing to the limited appropriations, which leave a narrow margin, makes it very difficult to distribute the funds to so many officers.

These officers must have currency to pay the troops. Checks would leave them at the mercy of post traders and seriously impede if not destroy the present beneficial system of deposits.

To obtain currency, from five to eight officers would have to make the journey now made by one. There is therefore no safety nor economy gained by the adoption of such a system.

If it is proposed that the bonded officers of the Quartermaster's Department shall pay the Army, what advantage is there in substituting one officer for another?

Has the Quartermaster's Department a surplus of officers? If not, the quartermaster must perform the duties of both. He must shut up his storehouse, from which daily issues are required and to which daily receipts are coming, while he is absent for weeks paying troops. It would be difficult to hold a quartermaster or his sureties liable for losses which might occur under such circumstances.

Again, it is doubtful whether his bond, given as a quartermaster, could be held for funds not accounted for as a paymaster.

The wisdom of the law giving the Executive the power of selecting the chief of the staff departments from the junior officers is so apparent that it needs no argument. The chief of a department should be above suspicion and be able to show a clear record.

The Pay Department as now organized has stood as severe a test as may be expected ever can be applied to it. It is capable of expansion in case of war and of contraction in time of peace. The proposed plan is not an experiment, for it was tested in the earlier history or our Army and found wanting.

Attention is respectfully invited to the accompanying memoranda.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. B. ROCHESTER,
Paymaster-General United States Army.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman, &c., United States Senate.

The proposition to merge the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments as proposed by the amendment of Mr. BROWNE (if it should become a law) will set aside and abolish a system of Army payment which years of experience have tested, both in peace and war.

It is safe to say that no system can be devised equal to the present one, which can be made to combine the advantages of prompt payment, safety of the public money, accurate and prompt accountability, with the least possible expense and liability to embezzlement or corrupt defalcation.

As the law is now construed, it requires the express authority of the Secretary of War to enable any officer of the Pay Department to hold funds in his personal possession at places on the frontier distant from designated depositories. This authority is personal to the officer and has to be renewed whenever he may change his station. As the acting assistant quartermaster of the post is generally a lieutenant these changes would be frequent and tend to interrupt and postpone the regular and prompt payment of the troops.

It is not believed that any one officer could perform the duties, make all the returns now required by law and the regulations of the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and do it satisfactorily. This performance of duty under widely different systems would produce confusion in the disbursements and would inevitably tend to inaccuracy, as past experience has demonstrated.

I refer to the long exploded system of regimental, battalion, post, or company paymasters. The official records show the following striking facts in the history of Army payments:

"First. From 1808 to 1811, before the war, the average annual loss by the defalcation of regimental and battalion paymasters amounted to 1.58 per cent. on the amount disbursed, and the annual average expenses for paying the Army to 3.10 per cent."

"Second. From the beginning of the war to 1816, under the same system, these averages were: Defalcations, 2.98 per cent., and the expenses, 4.36.

"Third. From the date of the reorganization, in 1821, on the new plan (the present one), to 1825, the average defalcations were twenty-two one-hundredths, little more, it will be perceived, than the one-fifth of 1 per cent., which was finally paid into the Treasury; expenses for the same period, 2.13." The results during the Mexican war were better still, as not one dollar was lost by defalcation and the average expenses reduced.

"Fourth. From 1825, after the new system had been well established, not one dollar of defalcation, and the total average expenses reduced to 1¼ per cent."

General B. W. Brice, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, uses the following language:

"I am enabled to reiterate the unprecedented result that since July, 1861, in the expenditure of $1,083,000,000, disbursed by this department in minute sums, and surrounded by difficulties and hazards, the total cost to the Government in expenses and losses of every character can not, in the worst possible event, exceed three-fourths of 1 per cent."

Is there an instance on record of public disbursement so cheaply performed? And this under the present organization and system of Army payments.

It was asserted that it costs 4 per cent. of the amount disbursed to pay the Army now. The actual cost of paying the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was 2½ per cent.

To abandon the present system, and call in officers of the Quartermaster's Department to make payments to the Army would be practically a return to the old system, so long tried and found wanting, for at almost all the military posts in this country a lieutenant of the line is detailed to do the duty of both quartermaster and commissary; these officers are not under bonds; the question arises, could they get bondsmen? if they could, would they? Most of the bonded officers of the Quartermaster's Department are stationed at the headquarters of the divisions, departments, and depots, their property responsibility being such as to confine them to their stations. They are not subject to the provision of law which requires paymasters to renew their bonds every four years. This provision preserves an active, reliable bond upon which recovery may be had.

If you pay through the post quartermaster and the quartermaster of each detachment and detail of troops, funds must be conveyed to them and the expense thereof must be paid. As it is now, a paymaster who is familiar with laws and regulations and decisions governing payments carries funds to the place of payment, settles on the spot all questions, places the money in the hands of the soldier, receives such sums as may be deposited by them, returns to his post, and places his surplus funds in a United States depository. If the practice of leaving funds in the hands of any officer at a post for the payment of troops absent from the pay-table when the paymaster pays, as was asserted, it must prevail to a very limited extent, as such payment is illegal and the paymaster responsible for repayment. The Paymaster-General's Office knows of no such practice. If the Pay Corps is too large reduce it by providing that there shall be no more appointments until the number is reduced within a certain limit.

The question of consolidation of the Pay, Quartermaster, and Subsistence Departments was made the subject of careful investigation by the Military Committee of the House at the third session of the Fortieth Congress, the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress. The weight of testimony was strongly against the merging of the Pay Department with the Quartermaster and Subsistence Departments, or with either of them, and I call your special attention to what was said on the subject by a few of the many officers who gave testimony:

General SHERMAN: A staff system that has admitted of an increase of the line of the Army from the mere nucleus of 1860 to a million of men, and its reduction back to the present standard, without confusion, and with the most perfect accountability as to property and money, at all times providing for the Army abundantly, is entitled to our respect.

Lieutenant-General SHERIDAN: Of course they can be consolidated; but I doubt whether you can get as good a result as you have now. I do not believe in tearing things down, especially when they have done well. They have certainly done well as they are, and I do not know that any great saving is to be made by consolidation. I am not prepared to recommend anything of the kind.

Major-General HANCOCK: It would be "practicable" to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps, but the operation would be difficult and attended with no great advantage or economy. All or most of the persons who now constitute the separate corps would appear in the consolidated corps, and they certainly would not act any more efficiently or economically on account of the consolidation.

A careful examination of all the views expressed will not only show that the weight of evidence is against the consolidation of these corps, but that the opposition to it has decidedly increased, and that while some who at first favored it now either oppose or do not support it, there are no changes of opinion in the other direction.

General HOWARD: But careful inquiry will, I am confident, discover grave difficulties in the way of such consolidation. Our Army, though not now very large, is very widely scattered. There would be a liability of overtaxing a single officer at Washington; and confusion in accounts would be inevitable, unless a clear distinction was kept up in all papers, and books and reports, corresponding almost exactly with that now kept by the Quartermaster, Commissary, and Pay Departments.

General MCCLELLAN: You ask my opinion as to the proposed consolidation of the three corps (Quartermaster, Commissary, and Pay) into one. I don't like the idea at all, and, had I the power, would prevent it.

If this consolidation scheme is carried out, experience will prove that some individual interest was at the bottom of it, and that no real benefit inured to the service; and before long the old order of things will be restored.

It seems almost superfluous for me to say that our peace organization should be such as to enable us to increase the Army rapidly in time of war. Any disinterested soldier knows what this means with regard to the number of staff and line officers in peace.

Major-General MEADE: I can not say that, after reading all that has been written and said, I am prepared to advocate consolidation. I have had a fair opportunity to observe the workings of the present system, both in time of war and peace. It has always worked well.

Major-General THOMAS: I do not think that it would be advisable to unite them, either one with another or to unite the whole three together. Their duties are separate, and I think they are very wisely divided as they are.

General FOSTER: The paymasters have, again, an entirely different duty to perform, in which great care and responsibility are required. At many posts the officers who perform the quartermaster's duties could not furnish the requisite bonds for the security of the public money, now furnished by every paymaster. The public money for the payment of the Army is safer in the hands of the paymasters than in the hands of quartermasters, who have to follow the movement of troops, and thus, to a certain degree, endanger its safety, especially in time of war.

General LONGSTREET: The duties of the Quartermaster's, Commissary, Pay, and Medical Departments are sufficiently burdensome and complicated when kept as separate departments. Consolidated, an officer of higher grade would be chief, while the organizations would virtually remain as before. The only good reason that I can give in favor of consolidation is that a place may be made for some distinguished and meritorious officer.

General TOWNSEND. The question of paying the troops is a very difficult one. It does not so nearly affect the number of desertions as is generally supposed. Steady discipline and good treatment of soldiers by the officers is the best remedy for that crime, together with an adequate punishment and proper places of confinement. Payment by company commanders would involve the frequent changing of funds from hand to hand, great multiplication of accounts, and corresponding increase in clerical force of the Treasury to settle them; and more than all, frequent and serious losses to the Government from want of secure places of deposit at most of the military stations. Large supplies of funds must be sent to the officers in the fall before communication is cut off with many posts. Agents, whose expenses must be paid, must carry them, for there are no banking facilities at hand. At the posts, a safe, a trunk, or a chest will be the well-known deposit, inviting to frequent robberies. The officers would not be under bonds, and might often be defaulters; or from want of capacity for keeping such intricate accounts, might often make serious mispayments. Suppose the remedy be applied of requiring bonds. Not many officers could get bondsmen without leaving their post, if they could at all. Moreover, where a man is required to give bonds for any duty, he should have the liberty of accepting or declining the duty rather than give the bond. Another objection would be a removal of check against paying wrong accounts, for the officer who made up the soldier's statements would likewise pay him. Now, the paymaster first examines and corrects the accounts before he pays them, and he is charged with mistakes if the soldier can not be reached to rectify them. Then, after all, provision must be made for payments of soldiers discharged away from their commands, and of officers at posts. The opinion is deliberately entertained that any other mode of payment than the present must necessarily be more complicated, and subject the Government to immensely greater risk of loss.

General McDOWELL says:

"I do not recommend the consolidation of the Pay Department with the ordinary supply departments. On the contrary, I would increase it and keep it utterly distinct from them, and favor the plan of extending its payments to include that of all money due on contracts for either material or services, in all branches of the service; making it the military chest, the cashier of the Army, having nothing whatever to do with the creating of obligations, but confined to the duty of discharging them, as is now done in the case of the muster and pay rolls of the troops and officers' accounts for pay, and, recently, for traveling expenses, where the account or demand is made by one set of officers and discharged by another. I think this division, when once under way, would tend to afford additional guarantees to the Treasury, and much simplify the business of the Army.

General Terry says:

"I think that to consolidate the Quartermaster's, the Subsistence, and the Pay Departments into one corps would be to disregard a principle which underlies all modern progress—the principle that the best results are obtained by the division of labor; that the best work is done by specialists—a principle that is of quite as much importance in military organizations as it is in civil life. The Quartermaster's Department is already loaded down by the multiplicity of subjects over which it has control; to add to its duties would, I think, impair its efficiency.

"That the Pay Department should not be consolidated with the other two, or with either of them, seems to me to be shown by the fact that paymasters must travel from post to post, paying troops, while the duties of quartermasters and commissaries require them to remain stationary. Should a legal union of these departments be effected it would not be a union in practice. The officers of the new organization would, of necessity, be assigned to special duties, some to the duty now performed by quartermasters, some to that which is now performed by paymasters, &c. I think that the change suggested would be merely nominal; that it would lead to no economy."

General Grover says:

"I do not think it would be advisable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments in one."

General Getty says:

"It would be practicable; but to consolidate the three corps into one would not, in my opinion, be for the best interest of the service."

General Dodge says:

"I think it will be a very great mistake to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments."

General Kelton says:

"The Pay Corps can not be incorporated with the Supply Corps for the reasons—

"First. Their duties and accounts are utterly dissimilar.

"Second. Their duties require them to be absent from any one station the greater part of every two months."

General Marcy says:

"For the reason that each of the departments named in question 8 has all the work it can efficiently perform now, and as the chiefs of those departments have abundant occupation in properly administering the affairs of their separate departments, I think the consolidation indicated would diminish their efficiency."

Expenses of Pay Department, United States Army, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

Pay of paymasters	$180,274 56
Commutation of quarters to paymasters	22,034 80
Pay of clerks	64,800 00
Pay of messengers	14,426 66
Mileage of paymasters and actual traveling expenses of their clerks	37,265 26
Total expenses	318,801 28

Total disbursements for fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $13,613,257.41; per cent. of expenses to disbursements, 2.32.

Mr. HOAR. I sympathize with the general object of the Senator from Vermont in insisting upon the rule; but suppose this point of order be sustained, as it appears to be, and then suppose the House non-concur in the Senate amendment striking out their legislation, then the bill goes to a committee of conference. That committee of conference report that the Senate recede from its amendment striking out the House text of the bill, and adopt the House text with a certain amendment, which they agree on in conference. Is that liable to the point of order also?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it would be.

Mr. HOAR. Because if not, the only effect of insisting on the rule at this time is to send our committee into conference with no knowledge whatever of the opinion of the Senate. That is a very important and serious question. If that point of order lies to a conference report that is all right, because then we can stand where the Senate now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point would then lie. Does the Senator from Vermont renew his point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order, as he has on two different occasions already on the same question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the question is on striking out. The committee has recommended to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the lines from 131 to the word "department," in line 151.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Subsistence Department, in line 161, before the words "contract surgeons," to strike out "fifty" and insert "not exceeding eighty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 164, after the word "hundred," to strike out "thousand five hundred and" and insert "and twenty-six thousand one hundred and twenty;" so as to read:

For subsistence of 25,000 enlisted men, 120 additional half-rations for sergeants and corporals of ordnance, 1,830 civilian employés, not exceeding 80 contract surgeons, 160 hospital matrons, 37 military convicts, and 500 prisoners of war (Indians); in all, 10,126,122 rations, at 22 cents each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 171, after the word "guides," to strike out "one million nine" and insert "two million three;" so as to read:

For difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men, and for enlisted men and recruits at recruiting stations, and for cost of hot coffee and cooked rations for troops traveling on cars; for subsistence stores for Indians visiting military posts and Indians employed without pay as scouts and guides, $2,300,000, of which amount $300,000 shall be available from and after the passage of this act for the purchase of stores necessary to be transported to distant posts in advance of the 30th of June, 1883.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that is adopted I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to a fact that I think he will recall, that there was a miscalculation at that point whereby that amount was increased more than was intended. It will be remembered that in making the calculation there was a little confusion between "rations" and "dollars," and that amount I think ought to be "$2,000,000" in place of "$2,300,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer an amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "300,000" in line 172.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objecton to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department, in line 268, after the word "services," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That for the better accomplishment of the object of the acts authorizing the construction of the railroads hereinafter referred to, and the better to secure to the Government the use and benefit of the same, all acts authorizing the building and construction of those railroads which have received, in addition to land grants, Government aid by loan or guarantee of bonds by the United States, and all other acts, parts of acts, and provisions having relation thereto, are hereby so altered, amended, and modified that hereafter the compensation paid or allowed for the carrying and transportation of the property or troops of the United States by such railroad companies, or their assigns or successors, shall not exceed 50 per cent. of the amount paid by private parties for the same kind of service.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire in regard to the two hundred and sixty-fifth and following lines which are not struck out, is that the present law applicable to these railroads?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. So that in all events we are bound to allow them as much as the rate here stated, 50 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the measure of settlement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment striking out the lines which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 290, to increase the appropriation "for construction and repair of hospitals, as reported by the Surgeon-General of the Army," from $70,000 to $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 302, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Medical Department," in line 306, after the word "depots," to strike out "pay of employés;" so as to read:

Medical Department: For purchase of medical and hospital supplies, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations, expenses of purveying depots, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 308, to insert:

Provided, That civilian employés of the Army stationed at military posts may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies, prescribed by a medical officer of the Army, at cost, with 10 per cent. added.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 315, to reduce the appropriation "for the Army Medical Museum, and for medical and other works for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office," from $10,000 to $5,000.

Mr. BAYARD. A gentleman in no way connected with the Army, but a medical man of very high scientific grade and who takes a great deal of interest in the Army, suggested to me that this was a diminution of the appropriation and expressed his great regret. If the Senator having charge of the bill has no especial reason why the appropriation should be diminished, I should be very glad to see it restored to the amount the House fixed. This is the only national medical library, and it is so important in every respect that I hope the Senate will not concur with the amendment, but will adopt the House measure unless there shall be some positive reason given for reducing the amount. The amount is not large and medical books are all copyrighted and we should have them in all languages and from all countries.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not discuss this elaborately. I would like sometimes when gentlemen oppose propositions in a bill, that they would give some reason other than that somebody has asked them to do it.

Mr. BAYARD. This was really from a man who is very competent to speak, who is thoroughly disinterested about the matter, and who knows, I think, the wants of the higher medical education in this country. It was for that reason he spoke, and he would have authority with me, and I am sure he would with the Senator if I mentioned his name.

Mr. LOGAN. Almost anybody would have influence with me in reference to it that knew more about it than I do. I pretend to know but very little about it. The Army appropriation bill has regularly contained an appropriation of $10,000 for ten years for the Medical Museum. That is $100,000, and it ought to buy a pretty good lot of books.

Mr. BAYARD. Has it not been money well spent?

Mr. LOGAN. I am not saying as to that. I only want to know from the Senator when he opposes an amendment are we to go on for one hundred years this way? In every appropriation bill there is $10,000 for the Medical Museum. Does the Senator understand that it has been spent for books?

Mr. BAYARD. It must be for a library devoted to medical and surgical purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I will tell the Senator why it was cut down. It was cut down at my suggestion. I sent for the gentleman who has charge of that Museum, and I asked him for what that money was expended. What do you suppose he told me? He said part of it was expended in purchasing books, and the balance of it was expended for repairs, &c., on the building. If the Senator wants it put in there that so much shall be expended for books I will agree with him; I have no objection to spending money for books; but when money is appropriated for books I do not want it spent for repairs and for employing janitors and other persons to attend to their duties.

Mr. BAYARD. Suppose we strike out the words "Army Medical Museum" and let it stand "for medical and other works for the library."

Mr. PLUMB. Under the custom of the Department this sum is divided into three parts, substantially, one part going to the Army Medical Museum for pay of employés and the care of specimens there found and the accumulation of others; another part goes to the purchase of books and pay of employés in the library, and a portion of the money is used now, as the Senator from Illinois has stated, for repairs of the building. There are two objects in the appropriation, the Army Medical Museum and the medical library of the Surgeon-General's Office, so that practically there is $2,500 for each of those objects.

Mr. BAYARD. This amendment apparently is not for the expense of taking charge of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, but expressly "for medical and other works for the library," and is also "for the Army Medical Museum." It would seem to me a very obvious misappropriation to spend the money upon salaries of janitors or for repairs, as the Senator from Illinois has suggested, of a building when it is expressly for the purpose of works for the library. I supposed that we were building up by these appropriations a valuable medical library, and I can understand few things of more value to the Army and, through the Army, to the country, than to have an appropriate library here of a medical character. It seems to me that if they have, under such a clause as this, to spend money otherwise than really for the Medical Museum and for the medical library, it has been a very great impropriety.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois a question as to this library. Does he understand that this is for a library which is maintained in connection with the Surgeon-General's Office here?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. I had an impression, derived, I think, from accidental conversation with the purveyor-general of the Army, that these medical books purchased were passed about; that they were sent, for instance, to the medical officer at a certain post a certain length of time, many of the new publications in connection with medicine and surgery; that he had an opportunity to read them, and they were passed on, in that way constituting a sort of circulating library through the Medical Department of the Army. I do not know whether I am right about it, but I have that impression.

Mr. LOGAN. That may be so or may not be so; I do not know anything about that; but that would not change it. I inquired and found it has been the universal practice—I did not know it before; I do not think any of our committee knew it—to get a $10,000 appropriation and use part of it for books and to expend the balance of it for something else. We concluded we would stop that other expenditure and let it go where it belonged, and this $5,000 is more than or as much as they have ever used for books. We propose to appropriate $5,000 for that purpose, and give the officer notice—at least I did give it—that if any of the money thus appropriated was used for any purpose except books he would be held responsible for it. This is as much money as they have ever used. I did not know before, and I suppose no one in the Appropriations Committee knew, that part of this appropriation had always been used for either purpose. I looked upon it—I will not say as a fraud, but as a clear violation of the law, and therefore we reduced it to the amount of money that he said they used for books.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask the Senator whether he gives anything for the Army Medical Museum now?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir. I regard the Army Medical Museum as belonging, as far as repairs are concerned, to the Quartermaster's Department, and they have money appropriated for repairs of building and everything of the kind.

Mr. BAYARD. There is not a word in this clause about repairs.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course not; but the appropriation is used for that and has been. I regard part of the money appropriated to the Quartermaster's Department for repairs as belonging to repairs of the museum.

Mr. CONGER. The museum should either be stricken out or allowed a part of the appropriation. There are continual expenses for the Army Medical Museum which are not provided for anywhere else in this bill. To leave it without any appropriation is not proper. Here are two distinct objects for an appropriation, one for the Army Medical Museum, and an appropriation has always been given for that, and I have never heard that the money was misappropriated or used improperly. I consider it a very valuable addition to the medical service.

Mr. LOGAN. I consider it a valuable addition, too, but you do not want to appropriate $10,000 for books and have half of it expended in something else.

Mr. CONGER. The clause does not say it shall be for books for the Army Medical Museum any more than, if it said "for buying a horse," it must all be applied to that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator suggest an amendment that will make it say that? It is very easy to find objections, but let us have some suggestion that will make it mean what you want.

Mr. CONGER. I would suggest:

For the Army Medical Museum, $5,000, and for medical and other works for the library, $5,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, move that as an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I do; I move that amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Pending the consideration of that amendment I have a letter from the Secretary of War, the Surgeon-General, and Surgeon Billings, of the Army, directed to the Surgeon-General, which I ask may be read in connection with this matter. I was very much of the opinion of the Senator from Illinois in regard to this appropriation, and do not know that I have fully changed my opinion now, but I confess that the reading of these documents, which came under my observation after the bill was reported, modified at any rate the opinion which I before had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letters sent to the desk by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your special attention to the inexpediency of the reduction of the usual annual appropriation for the museum and library of this office, which is proposed in the Army appropriation bill as reported to the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations.

As regards the library, its usual share of the annual appropriation, namely, $5,000, is not sufficient to purchase the new medical books and journals published during the year; $2,500 per year are required to obtain the medical journals and transactions alone. At present the library is taking every medical journal or transaction published in the world, about seven hundred and sixty in all. It is extremely desirable that these subscriptions should not be cut off, in part because such periodicals if not obtained at the time of their publication are extremely difficult to obtain at all; in part because they are needed to make the index catalogue of the library, now in course of publication, as complete as possible.

It must be remembered that this is the only medical library approaching completeness in the United States; that by its means the medical writers and teachers of this country are put on an equality with those of the Old World, so far as access to the literature of their profession is concerned, and that the comparatively small sum required to keep it fully supplied with the latest literature is all that the General Government is asked to contribute for the benefit of medical education and of the medical profession.

The good effects of this library with its index catalogue extend to the patients of every physician who subscribes for a medical journal and keeps himself acquainted with the latest discoveries in medical science.

The demands upon the library for information and books are steadily increasing, and there is not a week during which some books are asked for which it does not possess. During the past year, under the regulations which permit of the loan of books to other responsible libraries, books have been loaned to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and other places, for use by physicians in those places.

The annual appropriation for the library alone should be $10,000, for the United States should have in its national medical library a copy of every new medical book as soon as published, and to secure this would require the sum named. As it is, selections for purchase must be made, and it is impossible to assure the inquiring physician that he can see in this library any recent medical publication which he requires.

In view of these facts and of the special and irreparable injury which must result from reducing, during the course of publication of the index catalogue, the amount allowed to the library, it is sincerely hoped that the usual appropriation will be allowed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN S. BILLINGS,
Surgeon, United States Army.

General C. H. CRANE,
Surgeon-General, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 3, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a letter of the 2d instant and accompanying papers from the Surgeon-General of the Army inviting attention to the proposed reduction of the appropriation for the Army Medical Museum and for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, in the Army appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate, wherein the sum which has been annually appropriated for these purposes, $10,000, is now reduced to $5,000.

In view of the facts set forth in the accompanying statements of the curator of the museum and the librarian of the Surgeon-General's Office in regard to the injury which would result should the proposed reduction be made, I concur in the recommendation of the Surgeon-General that $10,000 be appropriated as heretofore for the objects stated.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the proposed reduction of the appropriation for the Army Medical Museum and library of the Surgeon-General's Office, in the Army appropriation bill as reported to the Senate, January 27 (page 14, lines 313, 314, and 315), wherein the sum which has annually been appropriated for these purposes ($10,000) is now reduced to $5,000.

A similar reduction was made in the bill as reported to the House of Representatives, but the amount was promptly restored in debate. (An extract of the remarks on the subject is inclosed.)

I have also the honor to submit statements made by the librarian of this office and by the curator of the Army Medical Museum showing in what manner the appropriations have been expended in the past eighteen months, and would respectfully request that these statements be forwarded to the chairman of the Committee of the Senate on Appropriations, with your recommendation that the sum of $10,000 be appropriated for these purposes as heretofore.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. H. CRANE, Surgeon-General.

To the honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

"For the Army Medical Museum, and for medical and other works for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $5,000."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In regard to that item I will state to the committee that it was reduced by the sub-committee on appropriations from ten thousand to seven thousand five hundred dollars, and we had such a storm raised about our ears because of the fact that this is the pet of the whole medical profession, that after we had reduced it to that sum I moved to restore it to the amount of the estimate. The Committee on Appropriations, the whole committee, instructed, however, that this should be reduced to $5,000. It has heretofore been $10,000. It relates to the collections made during the war and stored in the Army Medical Museum, and for works of reference for the Surgeon-General's Office; and I believe it is the finest collection possibly in the world. They insist that a larger sum is necessary. How it is necessary, however, was not made to appear, and the committee instructed this reduction to be made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman if any consideration was given to the construction of a fire-proof building for the museum?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes. I will say to my friend this, that a part of the public building proposed to be erected for a library would be devoted exclusively to this museum and to the articles there gathered together with the library.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have received communications from many persons who speak of the library and museum as of great value and of the necessity for the erection of a fire-proof building for their preservation.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is no doubt of it. The gentleman is correct. It is asserted by many doctors to be one of the most valuable collections in the world; and it is now stored in what you might almost say is a mere tinder-box, liable to be destroyed by fire at any time. That is one of the reasons the committee deemed it unnecessary to add materially to the collection while it is in that building, but deemed it proper to withhold appropriations until a more suitable building was secured.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do the committee make any recommendation upon the subject?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The committee believe that a part of the new library building might be necessary for this museum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that it would be wise to separate the library from the museum? In my judgment they ought to be together.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The proposition was to set apart a section in the new library building to be devoted to the museum and its library.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Permit me to say that the amount, $10,000, appropriated last year, was not, in the judgment of many eminent in the medical profession, sufficient. That I suppose the gentleman from Ohio understands. Five thousand dollars is entirely inadequate.

This library is the most complete library in the world on medical subjects. The object is to complete it and keep it complete. Five thousand dollars a year will not purchase the new publications necessary to keep it up to its present standard. I think this is perhaps the wisest expenditure of money we can possibly make with reference to disease.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman from New York will yield to me, I beg to state I will move to increase the appropriation to $10,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to say a word, unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] wishes to retain the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have finished what I had to say.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think true economy would require we should make provision for the preservation of the library and museum and that a mere increase of the appropriation is not sufficient. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] to bring in a provision here for the erection of a fire-proof building for the preservation of the museum and library.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not think that would be proper in this bill, although I agree with my friend from Illinois it is something which ought to be done.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUTTERWORTH to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," it was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the proposed reduction of appropriation, in so far as relates to the Army Medical Museum, will prove most disadvantageous to that collection.

There are now on exhibition in the museum over 22,000 specimens relating to and illustrative of military surgery and the diseases of armies; this number is being constantly augmented by contributions from members of the Medical Corps of the Army and from members of the medical profession at large, who-thoroughly appreciate its importance and value, until the collection has become to be regarded as one of the best, if not the best, of its kind in the world.

Its usefulness is becoming more apparent year by year in the increased number of visitors who come to Washington especially for the purpose of the study of specimens included in the collection, and by the constant inquiry made in reference to matters pertaining to medical and surgical science. Hardly a work on surgery is now issued from the press of this or foreign countries which has not abundant illustrations from and references to this valuable museum.

The annual amount appropriated for this museum and library ($10,000) is divided between the two, and heretofore has been made sufficient to keep the collection in good order and to enable a limited purchase of material proper and necessary for a collection of its character.

Latterly, owing to the constant deterioration of the building in which the museum is placed, an unusual draft has been made upon the appropriation for necessary repairs. All the manual labor required in cleaning rooms, shelves, and cases, as well as all the additions for the safe-keeping of specimens on exhibition and for the innumerable demands of such a collection, are paid for, as will be seen by the accompanying statement, out of the appropriation.

An increased appropriation could be well and judiciously expended in enhancing the value and usefulness of this collection, which should be, as it is, the pride of the medical profession of America.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. L. HUNTINGTON,
Surgeon United States Army, Curator Army Medical Museum.

To the SURGEON-GENERAL, United States Army.

Extracts from medical reviews with regard to the index catalogue.

(From the Medical News, Philadelphia, October 7, 1882.)

We have just received the third volume of this extraordinary work. We have so often commended it, and so often urged its support by liberal Congressional appropriations, that it is but iteration to express any opinion. Not only has no such work ever been attempted before, but probably none ever will be again for a century at least, for this work is monumental and complete. It is indispensable for every medical writer and investigator.

(From the Medical Record, New York, November 4, 1882.)

To such as may only know of the index catalogue of the Surgeon-General's Office by what may be written of successive volumes as they appear can form no adequate idea of the immensity of labor involved in its preparation, nor of the amount of material upon which such labor is based.

* * * * * * *

These catalogues are making available to the wants of the working medical men an amount and variety of medical literature which has never been collected together in any similar library in the world, nor probably ever will be. We are not surprised to hear that the use of the library is increasing with medical men over the country. Its direct influence in encouraging research must in the end exert its influence upon our medical literature and through it elevate the tone of medical education. We have repeatedly said that the American medical man is as much a worker as the physician of any other country if the opportunities are offered him for so doing. The different volumes of the index catalogue of this great library are some of the essential means to that end in directing his studies, and in indicating to him the proper lines to follow.

(From the North Carolina Medical Journal, Wilmington, 1882.)

Nothing has done more to give American medicine a reputable position among the nations of the world than the impetus which has radiated from the greatest medical library of modern times.

(From the American Journal of the Medical Sciences, Philadelphia, 1883.)

It is a very pleasant task to notice the successful progress of this great work. It is a proper subject of pride to the medical profession that such a record can be made exhibiting the greatness of our work; and a matter for national congratulation that the conception and carrying out of so grand a plan should belong to America. The scope of the work is enormous, and the execution of it, so far as it has gone, is everything which can be desired.

* * * * * * *

But nothing we can say will add to the value of the book. It needs no commendation. It is its own only fitting commentary. While laying no claim to originality, it is in point of fact most original, and so far as we know stands alone.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to have the paragraph remain as it came from the House?

Mr. PLUMB. I consented as I said to a limitation of this amount to $5,000. The reading of these letters which came under my observation accidentally a day or two ago in the committee-room has satisfied me that whatever propriety there may be in a division of the appropriation the sum total ought not to be reduced.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope, then, the Senator from Michigan will modify his motion.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a schedule there which states exactly how the money was spent last year. Perhaps that had better be read also.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the $10,000 will be divided between the museum and the library if it is necessary to specify the details.

Mr. CONGER. I am perfectly willing to do that. I simply did not like to leave the Army Medical Museum without any appropriation whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves to insert after "Museum" "$5,000."

Mr. CONGER. It has been stated that it was divided equally, $5,000 heretofore for the museum and $5,000 for the library.

Mr. PLUMB. I stated that as an impression, but I think the documents I sent up show that it was never that way. I ask the Secretary to read the statement of amounts.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1883.

Statement of expenditures on account of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office during the year ending June 30, 1882:

	Total cost.
For books, medical—number, 4,241 } For medical journal—volumes, 1,190 }	$7,543 76
And from July 1, 1882, to January 31, 1883:
For books, medical—number, 1,816 } For medical journals—volumes, 285 }	2,611 53

Statement of expenditures on account of the Army Medical Museum during the year ending June 30, 1882:

For microscopical and photographic section	$795 34
For museum collection	574 78
For repairs to and care of building and appurtenances	681 20
For office furniture	250 42
For stationery	102 70
For rent of telegraphic instruments and telegraph service	51 80
	2,456 24

Statement of expenditures on account of the Army Medical Museum from July 1, 1882, to January 31, 1883:

For microscopical and photographic section	$408 43
For museum collection	212 42
For repairs to and care of building and appurtenances	728 54
For stationery	70 00
For rent of telegraphic instruments and telegraph service	25 50
	1,444 89

Mr. CONGER. Then I modify my motion, "For the Medical Museum, $3,000, and for the medical library, $7,000."

Mr. LOGAN. They have never spent $7,000 yet on the library.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, yes; they report that they spent more than that last year—$7,500.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. Whatever the Senate desires is agreeable to me, but I notice one thing, that all the information that can be given about this Medical Museum is always given to somebody else except myself, although I have charge of the bill. I examined the surgeon in charge of it and he told me exactly what I have said, and the very letter there shows that this money is not properly expended. I am perfectly willing that all the physicians in the United States should have access to this library, but when the Surgeon-General notifies the Senate that the books of the library are sent around to physicians in Boston, Chicago, and New York, and not sent to the army medical surgeons all over the United States, I do not think it is exactly the thing.

I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, but I just want to put on record what I have said, that that is not the way for the Government money to be used, buying books to be distributed around over the country for the use of other people. If they want them let them go to the library and examine them. I do not think the Government should be engaged in that kind of business, and this appropriation has not been conducted properly. We have appropriated $10,000 every year for about ten years, and without the knowledge of Congress part of the appropriation has been used for repairs and other purposes, when Congress thought all the time they were appropriating it for books.

Mr. CONGER. That is not the meaning of the language.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood it so. It has always been so understood. No one understood it differently until it was explained to me. Then I said the money appropriated should not go for repairs of the museum. It is a building that belongs to the Quartermaster's Department and the money should be appropriated there for repairing buildings, and not let money be appropriated in the hands of everybody to be used to repair buildings as he chooses and take it out of the hands of the Department to which it belongs. That was the objection I had to it. I was willing to put in the $5,000 for books, because it was agreed that that was enough for books; but I have no objection to the proposition of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] after "museum," in line 313, to insert "$3,000," and in line 315, to strike out "5" and insert "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This supersedes the committee's amendment to this clause.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Engineer Department," in line 323, after the word "chemicals," to strike out "professional books for library;" and in line 325, after the word "thousand," to strike out five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For incidental expenses of the depot, remodeling ponton-trains, repairing instruments, purchasing fuel, forage, stationery, chemicals, extra-duty pay to enlisted men employed as artisans, and ordinary repair, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Ordnance Department," after line 340, to insert:

For transporting, mounting, proving, and testing guns, including small-arms constructed at private expense, said expenditure to be made in the discretion of the Secretary of War, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for the "United States testing-machine," after the word "dollars," in line 377, to insert:

Provided, That the tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes shall be continued during the next fiscal year, and report thereof shall be made to Congress: And provided further, That in making tests for private citizens the officer in charge may require payment in advance, and may use the funds so received in making such private tests, making full report thereof to the Chief of Ordnance; and the Chief of Ordnance shall give attention to such programme of tests as may be submitted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the record of such tests shall be furnished said society, to be by them published at their own expense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have looked at this amendment. In one respect it is possible that it is subject to the point of order, and if so I would have made it, only it is a very trivial one. It seems to me to merely regulate the expenditure of money. I call attention to it in order that if it can be subject to the point of order it shall not be drawn into precedent as a piece of legislation. I doubt if it is subject to it possibly. I merely mention it in order that it shall not be said that we have legislated.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought that the clause when it was adopted last year became permanent legislation. I should like the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the clause which reads:

And provided further, That in making tests for private citizens the officer in charge may require payment in advance, and may use the funds so received, &c.

I ask him whether that is not permanent legislation. I desired to have it so. It was passed last year in the act, inserting this language, and I thought then it was a permanent provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it is. I think it regulates the cost of making the tests now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it will remain, because it is absolutely essential.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not make a point on it; I merely called attention to it in order that it should not be drawn into a precedent hereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations having been gone through with, the bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to return to line 373. I intended to offer an amendment there. I move in that line to change "guns" to "gun" and to insert "a" after "of," so as to make the proviso read:

That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of a magazine-gun selected by the board of officers heretofore appointed by the Secretary of War.

A board of officers was appointed to examine magazine-guns. They were at it for a long time, and they reported in favor of three guns. It is very evident that we do not want three different kinds of magazine-guns; we ought to have but one. These guns should be tested thoroughly, and the one that is the best gun should be selected, and the money should be appropriated for that particular gun and not for three of different kinds. I ask that the amendment may be made so that it shall be understood by the Secretary of War when the money comes to be expended that it shall not be for buying three guns of different kinds, but for buying the gun, after testing it, that proves to be the best. The amendment will confine it to one gun.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Illinois whether this appropriation is not intended for the purchase of several guns?

Mr. LOGAN. The board have reported three guns. I want them to try the three guns, and the best one I want the Secretary of War to select and have the money appropriated for.

Mr. HARRISON. My inquiry is whether it refers to guns of a particular class or to a single gun.

Mr. LOGAN. I mean by "gun" a class. As a matter of course I do not mean a single gun.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I think the language adopted by the Senator would not be correct. It would limit the expression to a single gun. The word "gun" must be in the plural.

Mr. LOGAN. I will modify the amendment so as to read "magazine-guns from one of the class selected by the board of officers."

Mr. CONGER. I should like to ask whether the object of this appropriation is not to test all three classes? How can they tell which is the best unless there is an appropriation made to purchase and test the three?

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly what I want to do.

Mr. CONGER. But it confines it to one class before they have the test.

Mr. LOGAN. It confines the purchase to one class.

Mr. CONGER. But they want to test all three.

Mr. LOGAN. They have already manufactured the three guns and they have reported three. They are to be tested, and this appropriation of $50,000 is to purchase guns after testing.

Mr. HARRISON. There is an appropriation in another part of the bill for testing?

Mr. LOGAN. That is appropriated for in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to lines 114 and 115. I was called out at the time they were being considered. What was done with the amendment there?

Mr. LOGAN. It was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Is that right?

Mr. LOGAN. What objection has the Senator to it?

Mr. HALE. The clause stricken out reads:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters.

I am not very well versed in military law, but I understand that the law now gives to Army officers commutation for quarters where there are no Government buildings which they can occupy; that if we do not appropriate for that we thereby so much reduce their pay; and that it falls with special hardship upon those officers who are placed upon the frontier at garrisons and posts where there are no Government buildings for them to occupy. I know the Senator from Illinois does not in any way wish to interfere with that class of officers, because he is looking out for them. It seemed to me in examining the matter that an injustice might be done in making that amendment. Would it not be better to let the clause remain and give them what the law gives them now?

Mr. LOGAN. They get what the law gives them now.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will call attention to what occurred about that matter. The clause at line 114 is a change of law from what it has heretofore been; that is to say, those words were inserted. We were informed on good authority that that would enlarge the operation of the present law in such a way as to give commutation of quarters to retired officers and officers on leave. Whether the intention to strike out those words was subsequently enlarged so as to strike out all that referred to quarters I do not know; but speaking for myself, the design was to get out that particular interpolation which would enlarge the provision of existing law.

Mr. HALE. Why not meet it, then, by passing it in this form:

For commutation of quarters at places where there are no public quarters, where the same may now be allowed by law.

Mr. PLUMB. It will not be necessary to put in those qualifying words.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it will.

Mr. PLUMB. Simply leaving out "to commissioned officers" will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think it makes any difference at all; but I am perfectly willing to strike out "to commissioned officers" and to insert "for commutation of quarters for officers on duty without troops."

Mr. HALE. Would you have it "on duty without troops" or "on duty where there are no public quarters?"

Mr. LOGAN. "On duty without troops." Officers are not entitled to commutation of quarters when serving with troops, under the law.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. After line 185 I move to insert:

And not more than $165,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Subsistence Department of the Army; and the clerks employed in said department shall be graded as to compensation at $1,600, $1,400, $1,200, and $1,000, respectively, and the number to be employed in each grade shall not exceed those employed in the corresponding grades in the force as now employed.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to inquire whether the Senator from Kansas intends to move a like amendment to the provision in relation to the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. PLUMB. I intend to move similar amendments to all departments of the Army in which there are civilian employés.

Mr. HARRISON. There is on the Calendar of the Senate a bill reported from the Military Committee on this subject. I believe the fact is now that the clerks in the Paymaster's Department are the only class of stated clerks who have any connection with the Army whose pay is regulated by law. That is regulated by Department order; and there it ranges from $1,000 to $2,000. I understand the Senator from Kansas makes his grades from $1,000 to $1,800.

Mr. PLUMB. From $1,600 down to $1,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I see the report of the Military Committee was to make the grades as proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that these amendments apply to all of them. We apply the grades in this bill to the Adjutant-General's Department, and these amendments are to follow on and make the grades the same all through. The matter was considered by the committee and it was agreed that the amendments should be offered.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it not unlikely that there may be a few of these clerks for whom the compensation of $1,600 provided will not be enough; but I shall not undertake to antagonize the chairman of the Military Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that this amendment is legislation in all the last part of it. It proposes to fix a permanent grade of clerks by law.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, it only provides for the method of expending the money which we appropriate here in gross.

Mr. HALE. It is a limitation on the expenditure.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a limitation of the expenditure of money. There is no law fixing the salary of any civilian employed in the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, or the Medical Department, but in point of fact, as we learn by tables sent to us from the office of the Secretary of War, persons are being paid various rates of compensation, ranging from $75 a month up. It is proposed simply to say that as to this money, so far as it is used in the payment of civilian employés, it shall be used in a certain way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Chair will allow me to make a further suggestion, if there is no objection to it (of course the Chair must rule without debate), I should like to reply to my friend for a moment.

I think as to the first three lines, that part of the amendment would be clearly in order, because that merely regulates the application of the money appropriated. Then you come to an affirmative paragraph that has no limitation, and that as I think will stand as the law until it is repealed by Congress. It is:

And the clerks employed in said department shall be graded as to compensation at $1,600, $1,400, $1,200, and $1,000, respectively, and the number to be employed in each grade shall not exceed those employed in the corresponding grades in the force as now employed.

That appears to me, with great respect, to be a permanent provision of legislation. The statement that it does not change existing law because there is no law about it does not exactly answer the rule. It is making law, and if there is no law now it is just as much open to objection. It may be very good; but I only make the point of order on the principle of keeping these bills free from legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont if his purpose, with which I sympathize, would not be accomplished by putting in the express words of limitation applying to this particular appropriation? He seems to anticipate that this would outrun the present appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it will.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I think it best now not to make a classification that is to be limited to the particular appropriation for this year. Had we not better wait until we can reach that question and regulate it by a general law such as is proposed in the bill we have on the Calendar?

Mr. HALE. The trouble with that is that we are confronted with the necessity of furnishing the money. It is not new legislation. It is one of the existing, continuing, running needs of the Department. We are now to furnish the money at any rate. Nobody objects to that; nobody expects that it will be cut off. All that is sought to be done here is, it seems to me, not new legislation, but simply breaking up and subdividing the sum of money that we grant into several parts and pieces. We say it shall be spent in no case beyond $1,600 a year for a clerk, or $1,400, or $1,200, or $1,000. It seems to me in that regard it is not subject to the point of order, it being cleary, closely, accurately a method of expending the money, and a limitation upon it clear through, not only in the amount, but in the designated ways in which it shall be spent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The fact is, as this thing stands, that next year if we appropriate for these classes of clerks, just as if they were in the Treasury, to carry out the provisions of existing law, we shall be obliged to make appropriations in exact conformity to this regulation, as my friends call it. That is the trouble; and therefore I think it is a pretty permanent classification of a salary for these officers.

Mr. PLUMB. I will amend the amendment then, with consent, by saying that during the continuance of this appropriation or as applied to this appropriation they shall be graded so and so as to compensation. That is simply saying that a certain person shall receive a certain amount of this money as compensation for clerical work.

Mr. HALE. And next year you may appropriate in gross if you want to?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not with this modification.

Mr. HALE. We only say that this year it shall be so spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "department," in line 5 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert "during the next fiscal year;" so as to make the amendment read:

And not more than $105,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Subsistence Department of the Army; and the clerks employed in said department during the next fiscal year shall be graded as to compensation at $1,600, $1,400, $1,200, and $1,000, respectively, and the number to be employed in each grade shall not exceed those employed in the corresponding grades in the force as now employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. At the end of line 288 I move to insert what I send to the Clerk's desk. I have modified the amendment that I intended to offer at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of line 288 it is proposed to insert:

And not more than $1,600,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage; and the clerks employed in said department during the next fiscal year shall be graded as to compensation at $1,600, $1,400, $1,200, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, and the number to be employed in each grade shall not exceed those employed in the corresponding grades in the force as now employed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied that I yielded too suddenly to my friend from Kansas before about these changes of the law for the fiscal year. That certainly does change the law. I am afraid the former did, to which I did not object when he modified it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is mistaken about its changing the law. There is no law on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Making a law when there is no law on the subject, changes the law, because it makes a law different from what existed before.

Mr. LOGAN. There was no law before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what makes it law; and that is what is legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator to illustrate the manner in which clerks have been paid. In one of the Departments a clerk would be getting, for instance, $1,200 a year. There would be a vacancy where $1,200 would be allowed, and instead of employing a clerk at $1,200 they would take two clerks and divide it. Wherever they could get two clerks they would be appointed, taking the salary provided for one clerk. It is for the purpose of correcting that practice as far as possible that this proposition is offered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did not the committee report that thing?

Mr. LOGAN. They have reported it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not in the bill because it was not drawn up at the time the bill was reported. We were getting the information, and the Senator from Kansas took charge of it in connection with the clerk, to draft it with the agreement that it was to be offered in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly it is very good to correct all abuses, but if you undertake to correct all abuses on an appropriation bill it is rather a dangerous piece of business, not in respect of that particular abuse, but in the way legislation goes on. Therefore, I feel obliged, although I let the former one go, supposing it was the end of it, as a small favor, now to make the point of order that this is completely within the rule of legislation, and I make it.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator be kind enough to put the form of language in the amendment which would qualify it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should want to think of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not agree to do as requested by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has made a point of order which is not debatable unless he withdraws it.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator withdraw it for a moment that I may make a suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the rule read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was read a few moments ago. The Secretary will read the first paragraph of Rule 29.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. That is enough. It seems to me that the one point to be decided here is not whether this is new legislation, not whether it corrects something that has not existed before, because every appropriation is new legislation. Every provision in an appropriation bill for the expenditure of money thereby creates a right and endows somebody with a right to spend money that did not exist before, and therefore it is new legislation.

The question is whether this is general legislation. I contend that it is clearly not general legislation. It is confined to the scope of the bill, the year in which it runs. It deals only with the expenditure of money given; it breaks it up and declares how it shall be expended; and in no respect is it general legislation. It does not travel outside into that domain, but confines itself closely and unerringly to the way that the money shall be expended, without making any general legislation upon it. Certainly if you can not limit and provide for the expenditure of money covered by an appropriation bill in this way, your purpose and object in the appropriation bill may fail.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he understands that the words "general legislation" relate simply to duration of time?

Mr. HALE. Not necessarily so.

Mr. HARRISON. And whether you might cover the whole subject of appropriation bills?

Mr. HALE. I will tell the Senator precisely what I mean by general legislation: any legislation that is so broad and sweeping and general, to use the term in the rule, that it applies to subject-matters outside of the expenditures of the particular money granted.

Take an appropriation of $100,000 for some particular purpose, for a public building; clearly it can be determined in the appropriation in what months of the year it shall be spent; clearly it can be provided upon what story of that building it may be expended. Take an appropriation of $100,000 for clerk-hire, which has been general heretofore, which has been unlimited, which has been uncontrolled. The committee report an amendment declaring that the money which is to be appropriated shall be spent in such a way for the year. If that is general legislation, then you can not make a provision that is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Vermont is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move the same amendment with the part classifying the compensation to be paid stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified by the Senator from Kansas.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 288 it is proposed to insert:

And not more than $1,600,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supples, incidental expenses, barracks, and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is enough.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. After line 374 I move to insert:

That not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department, in all its branches, shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in all of its departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator from Kansas modify his first amendment to correspond with the amendments just agreed to?

Mr. PLUMB. I will make them all correspond so as not to make any distinction between them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As to lump sums?

Mr. PLUMB. Not as to the sums, but as to the grading of compensation so as to leave them all alike. I will modify the first one. After line 312 I move to insert:

And not over $34,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Medical Department.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that anybody understands how this is limited, whether a half or a quarter or a third, except the gentleman who makes the motion. Unless there is some reason for making the distinction, some abuse of the money, I can not see, without some further information, why these propositions should be made.

Mr. PLUMB. I ought to have said, and it probably would have answered a portion of the purpose of the Senator from Michigan, that these amendments were agreed to in the committee, so that they have not been adopted without consideration. Besides that they have been exhibited in quarters where the question of the administration of the Army is the first consideration, and so far as they relate both to amounts and classification as they originally appear they were entirely satisfactory. They are a reduction of about $10,000 in the sums now appropriated for the purpose of paying civilian employés in the Army.

Mr. CONGER. I think there has been great care taken here that civilian employés of the Army stationed at military posts away from the opportunity of procuring what they want may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies prescribed by a medical officer at cost with 10 per cent. added. I object to that 10 per cent. which is drawn from these civilians for additional money on their pills and salts.

Mr. PLUMB. If we had succeeded in getting in salt free probably these people could have got along with less compensation.

Mr. HALE. It does not reduce the compensation.

Mr. CONGER. Still you charge them 10 per cent. additional for medicine. I think it is a pretty small business to require a man employed in the Army, with the certificate of a medical officer that he needs medicine, provided as well for soldiers as other employés, to get it at a little 10 per cent. added to the cost, which includes everything up to that time; and I do not know who the 10 per cent. is for.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I am very sorry when an attempt is made in a bill to provide for men who are not provided for in the law that this character of criticism should be made. Under the law as it exists to-day the civilian employés in the Army can not have medicine furnished at all by the Medical Department.

Mr. CONGER. It is a disgrace to the service that they can not. I would strike out the "10 per cent."

Mr. LOGAN. The law only applies to medicine to be administered to the soldiers and officers of the Army and their families. It excludes civilians who are employed by the Army; but for their benefit, to prevent them from having to go a long distance and employ a physician, we provide that they may purchase medicine at cost with 10 per cent. added. If the Senator will examine the law he will find that every dollar's worth of provisions that is purchased by an Army officer, sergeant, or soldier from the Commissary Department is purchased at 10 per cent. advance, and we use the civilian exactly as the soldier is used when it is applied to medicine. It is a fair and proper thing put in here for his benefit, and I do not like to see a criticism of this kind made upon such a proposition intended for the benefit of individuals and not for their injury.

Mr. CONGER. This must apply to teamsters. It must apply to those who are just as necessary to the movement of the troops and to the service as the soldiers themselves. The cost includes transportation, purchase-money, everything.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator desires this stricken out, and is in favor of not allowing the civilian employés of the Army to purchase their medicines at all, inasmuch as it is new legislation, let him make the point of order on it and strike it out.

Mr. CONGER. I want to strike out "10 per cent. added." That is all I care to strike out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has nothing to do with the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. CONGER. I do not know but that it has something to do with the pending amendment. It follows, it is connected with it. It deducts 10 per cent. on the wages of these men, and in the same clause, if adopted, taking 10 per cent.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope none of these employés will use all their compensation in buying medicine from the Army in order to be cheated out of 10 per cent. That seems to be the logic of the Senator.

Mr. CONGER. It is a little thing, and the very triviality of it makes it ridiculous in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the words "with 10 per cent. added."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has been voted in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule that motion is not in order, as the words have been agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. There is no objection, I suppose, to striking them out. Nobody has raised the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not a question of order. The Senator may reach his purpose by moving to reconsider. The Senator from Michigan can make the motion when the bill gets into the Senate, if he desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When the question is on concurring in the Senate in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole the Senator can move to amend as he has indicated.

Mr. CONGER. I think everybody approves it, and I have no doubt it will be struck out by unanimous consent. We might as well finish it here. I ask unanimous consent that those words be stricken out.

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects. The Senator from Michigan can bring up the matter when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. After the word "hostilities," in line 131, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in the execution of so much of the act approved June 30, 1882, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, as provides for the honorable discharge of supernumerary officers, it shall be deemed lawful and within the intent and scope of said provision, and in the fulfillment of its purpose, for the President, in his discretion, to discharge honorably as supernumerary officers, in the manner and subject to the conditions prescribed therein, such first lieutenants of artillery in excess of the number of fourteen of that grade to each artillery regiment as may request the same. The places thus made vacant shall be abolished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator from Kansas modify the first amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I will, by unanimous consent, modify the first amendment so as to correspond with the later ones that were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the modification will be made.

Mr. LOGAN. I move the following to come in at the end of the bill as an additional section:

SEC. —. That hereafter, in time of peace, all offenders in the Army charged with offenses now punishable by a regimental or garrison court-martial shall be brought before a summary court, which shall consist of the commissioned officer second in rank in the line at the post or station of the offender, and who shall hear and determine the offense, and adjudge the punishment that shall be inflicted; and shall also make a record of his proceedings and submit the same to his post commander, who, upon the approval of the proceedings in the case, shall order the execution of the sentence, and shall forward the record to the department headquarters for examination and file in the office of the judge-advocate of the department: Provided, That the punishment in such cases be limited to that authorized to be inflicted by a regimental or garrison court-martial.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is clear legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Vermont is sustained.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not see any chance to get any legislation on any bill that will improve the Army anywhere.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not until you bring in a bill for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I have brought in a bill and I have tried to get it before the Senate, and I have failed to do so.

I desire to amend the bill in one particular, and I hope the Senator will not object to it when I state it. It is to fix a punishment on persons who invade the Indian Territory whom the Army are required to arrest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall make the point of order on it.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I move to add the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. —. That section 2148 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words: "Or to imprisonment in a penitentiary for a period not to exceed one year, or by both."

That is to cover offenders like the man Payne who has led his company time and again to the invasion of the Indian Territory. It is to cover offenses of that character where the military authorities are required to arrest and they can only arrest. This is for the purpose of fixing a punishment to that class of offenders. Of course it is subject, as I know, to the point of order, but I was in hope that this might be permitted at least to be adopted; it is a provision that is so necessary and so much required.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This may be necessary, and it may be that a careful inspection of the law would show that there are means of reaching the thing now. It is true that the power of the Army is to remove intruders from the Indian Territory. That there is no law for the punishment of such intruders under a different branch of the Government at this moment, I am not so sure. That is a subject that a committee charged with the matter, the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Committee on Territories, or somebody, should properly investigate. I therefore am not willing to waive this point of order for that purpose, more especially as all these points of order are upon the principle of having the appropriation bills appropriate money to carry out existing laws and to stop there. They then become easy and proper subjects of consideration and can be easily disposed of, and it saves one committee, the Committee on Appropriations, from the necessity of absorbing all the legislation—civil, criminal, political, foreign—that belongs to the whole Government by putting these things on the appropriation bills. So I feel perfectly justified in insisting on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to add as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. —. That fuel in kind only shall be issued to the officers of the Army without cost by the Quartermaster's Department, in quantities as prescribed by the Army regulations and general orders.

That can not be out of order, because it is only making a regulation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is legislation. I make the point of order upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am going to stick and see if we can not have a clean bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator from Kansas corrected the former amendment to make it conform to those afterward agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been done.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the vote be taken in solido or separately upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LOGAN. Let it be taken in gross.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan can now get at the question he desired to bring up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. In line 312, after the word "cost," I move to strike out the concluding words of the paragraph, "with 10 per cent. added;" so as to read:

Provided, That civilian employés of the Army stationed at military posts may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies, prescribed by a medical officer of the Army, at cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. That I know ought not to be done, because the same rule applies to all officers of the Army or employés or soldiers.

Mr. HARRISON. Not as to medicine.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not as to medicine. I know the general rule authorizes soldiers and officers to procure certain supplies from the Quartermaster's Department, and the 10 per cent. is added, as it is supposed, to cover transportation. There may be some difference in this provision from other provisions, but it seems to me that in the case of civilian employés, whose pay is larger than that of soldiers, because they have to pay all their expenses, there ought not to be a discrimination in their favor. Not only that, but the addition of 10 per cent. does not equal the transportation. They get it at cost to the Government, and it is all that could reasonably be required.

Mr. LOGAN. Ten per cent. is added on everything that is purchased by the Army from the Quartermaster's or Commissary Department. Medicine of course is issued to all soldiers and officers. It is the only thing that these men are prohibited from purchasing by law; they can not do it, and we change that so as to allow them to purchase it and pay the 10 per cent. the same as officers pay on commissary supplies for transportation, as the Senator from Ohio says, and that is what it includes and covers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to change some totals made necessary by the adoption of the amendments which I proposed as in Committee of the Whole. In line 339 I move to strike out "and ten," so as to make the amount "$100,000" in place of "$110,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 308, after the word "Department," I move to strike out "200" and insert "190," so as to read "$190,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 256 I move to strike out "500" and insert "475;" so as to read: "$3,475,000."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to make the total according to the amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. It is to correspond with the reductions made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 231 I move to strike out "700" and to insert "650;" so as to read: "$650,000."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to conform to the items?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; these are all for the purpose of making the items correspond.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 201 I move to strike out "$3,000,000" and to insert "$2,840,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 19th instant, inclosing one from Major George L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, dated the 15th instant, reporting the insufficiency of the sum ($39,000) appropriated by the sundry civil bill of August 7, 1882, for building the sea-wall on Governor's Island, New York Harbor, together with an indorsement of the Chief of Engineers showing the necessity for an additional appropriation of $15,000 for the purpose.

The Secretary of War recommends that said additional sum of $15,000 be appropriated at the present session of Congress for the object stated.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 20, 1883.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. It should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE. Is not that a Government work?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a Government work.

Mr. HALE. Then it should be considered in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 357) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Association at Columbus, Ohio, and to the Grand Army of the Republic at Denver, Colorado, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state for the information of the Senate that the material differences between the conferees of the House and Senate relate to the amendment by the Senate to the House bill providing for what is known as fast-mail facilities, the amendment of the Senate striking out the amendment of the charters of the Union Pacific railways, and the amendment of the Senate making the 2-cent postage provision take effect on the 1st day of July.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All of which are legislative provisions.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Vermont says that these are all legislative provisions. We happen to have had the decision of the ranking officer of this body to the effect that the last named was not a legislative provision, and upon that I will rest, at least for the purposes of this discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In a military point of view.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a new conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have not heard the message of the House read.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought it had been read yesterday; I am not sure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read again, whether it was read or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the message of the House of Representatives.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 21, 1883.

Resolved, That the House agree to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and that it further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. CASWELL, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. ELLIS be the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move to take up the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I have sent for the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] who has charge of the bill, who will be here, and who desired me to move to bring it up. I now give notice that to-morrow morning as early as possible I shall try to get up the naval appropriation bill, and I hope that we shall pass it to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps it would be well enough for me to state the condition of this bill before the amendments are reported.

The total in the bill as it came from the House is an appropriation specified in the bill of $325,000 only. The estimates for fortifications were $1,000,000. The appropriations for the last year were $380,000. In this bill the appropriations as they came from the House are less than the estimates $675,000. The bill is less than the appropriation of last year $55,000; $50,000 of that reduction is in the appropriation for torpedoes for harbor defenses, and $5,000 was a special appropriation for heavy guns to be loaned to the militia of the States, which it was not necessary to repeat.

The bill makes no appropriation for the enlargement or construction of fortifications in any of the harbors. It simply appropriates enough to preserve and to keep in repair, in the condition they are now, any of the harbor defenses. The Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate propose certain amendments to the bill, which are printed of course in Italics. They are first in the matter of appropriations for torpedoes for harbor defenses. They restore the amount appropriated last year, which was $100,000 and which is the same as the estimate. They then offer amendments resulting from the determinations of a special committee of the Senate upon the subject of heavy ordnance, which are printed in the report of that committee, and which the chairman of the committee, himself being of the Committee on Appropriations, will more intelligently explain to the Senate than I should be able, if I should undertake to do it. When those amendments are reached, therefore, I will leave them entirely to him.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 18.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a motion to be made in regard to the matter on line 16. Perhaps I ought to wait until the Secretary has read the matter in Italics.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines 16, 17, and 18, to strike out the words:

And for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $1,000.

And to insert:

And for conversion of 10-inch smooth-bore cannon into rifled guns, making and testing two 12-inch cast-iron rifled cannon, in lieu of such of the guns the construction of which has not been commenced as were provided for by the "act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1880, making and testing two breech-loading steel guns, one 8-inch and one 10-inch, making mortars and gun-carriages, mounting three hundred 15-inch guns, making and testing two guns banded or wrapped with wire, testing devices for breech-loading guns, testing projectiles, &c., in accordance with the report of the select committee of the Senate on the subject of heavy ordnance and projectiles, $450,000: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so that its provisions which require that purchases shall be made from the lowest bidder after advertisement shall not apply to ordnance and their carriages, to projectiles, gunpowder, or other war explosives, or to the materials entering into the manufacture thereof, or to whatever is requisite in military experiments with them; but all contracts for such material shall be made by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the question of order so far as the proviso is concerned, not as to the rest. That clearly changes the well-established law.

Mr. LOGAN. If the point of order is raised I will not say whether it is well taken or not, but I am very sorry that it is; and I will state the reason to the Senator if he will hear me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to withholding it, but I shall insist on the point of order after the Senator gets through.

Mr. LOGAN. We provide in the bill for the manufacture and fabrication of two steel guns and for the making of projectiles, powder, &c. It is a well-established fact that in this country we can not produce the character of steel that is absolutely necessary for the manufacture of guns. That article has to be purchased from abroad, and so it is with many of the things connected with the Ordnance Department. If under the law we have to advertise for all the materials which are necessary for the fabrication of these guns and the different articles which can not be procured in this country, that stops the making of them entirely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A foreigner can bid under our laws as well as anybody else.

Mr. LOGAN. But a foreigner can not, as a matter of course, bid for the character of steel he would propose as low as the character of steel that would be proposed by American manufacturers. Therefore I say it entirely puts a stop to the making of the guns, unless this can be changed so that the Ordnance Department can have the opportunity of making the purchases without the ordinary advertisement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose we can not make this kind of steel—which I suppose a Pennsylvanian or a New Yorker would deny—grant that, and therefore it is necessary to have foreign steel. If the War Department describes precisely the kind of steel that is necessary and our people have not got it, then the foreign manufacturer has the monopoly of the bidding and he can make his bid and will get his contract, and we shall have the steel; but that is not the point of course. The point is to endeavor to free these bills from any kind of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] makes the point of order on the part of the bill indicated. The Chair sustains the point. The question is on the amendment of the committee, omitting the proviso.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hardly know how to make the proper motion in the case, but I desire to leave the words in line 16, "and for machine guns," where they are. I will therefore modify the pending motion, which is to strike out those words. I move that the motion be so amended as to strike out only the words "including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $100,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Connecticut to ask for a division of the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will observe the forty-third and forty-fourth lines.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see there is an independent appropriation in those lines of $15,000 for the purchase of machine guns. I only desire to leave it as the Ordnance Department originally left it in gross, so that if the Chief of Ordnance desires to purchase $15,500 worth of machine guns or $18,000 or $20,000 he will not be restricted. The original bill read for ordnance, &c.; "and for machine guns * * * $100,000." Now they have it for ordnance, &c., $450,000, and a separate $15,000 for machine guns.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator would leave the Chief of Ordnance at liberty to purchase the gun he likes, I suppose.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I shall move when we come to the $15,000 to make it $25,000. I would give him some leeway.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will get what he desires in an amendment to that amendment; but if the Senator leaves the other phrase in, then, in addition to what may be that amendment, the Chief of Ordnance might expend the whole $450,000 for these guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. The way the bill came here originally you might say he could expend $100,000 for machine guns.

Mr. DAWES. We moved to strike it out for the very reason that it was possible for him to spend the whole sum for machine guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator thinks it is really necessary——

Mr. DAWES. I do not think the Senator desires to have more than one kind of machine guns, and that is the latest improvement.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what I desire.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator want any other kind?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator would not want any other kind but the latest improvement. If the Senator thinks the amount we have set apart for that purpose is not enough, he can move to make it $25,000 or $30,000, but to leave a specific appropriation for the purchase of the latest improvement and then leave an appropriation for the purchase of machine guns generally, in a general appropriation of $450,000, the Senator sees would not do.

Mr. HAWLEY. I perfectly comprehend what the Senator is at. I was willing myself to leave the Chief of Ordnance to make his selection, but if the Senator thinks it better to make a restriction in this paragraph I shall not make any further contest about it. I was going to move to strike out lines 43 and 44, for the words "machine guns" were left in the original bill. If the Senator realy objects to that, I will move to add $10,000 to the item in lines 43 and 44.

Mr. DAWES. I would not object if it seemed to me wise, but I have no doubt about it. It seems to me wise to have the Chief of Ordnance restricted to one machine gun and for us to determine how much he may expend for the machine gun.

Mr. HAWLEY. It did not occur to me it was objectionable in the way it read at first, namely:

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsmen on gun construction while employed in Ordnance Bureau, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $100,000.

Mr. LOGAN. We struck that out; and I will state the reasons that actuated me at least in regard to this appropriation of $15,000. We had the evidence before our committee when we examined this question. I do not remember the number—perhaps the chairman does—but over two hundred machine guns have already been purchased by the Government of the United States, and the evidence shows that there is not one of them to-day that is not laid aside.

Mr. DAWES. There are about one hundred of one particular kind, the inventor of which is a wonderful inventor, and he has now made an improvement on that gun which the Ordnance Department think never can be improved upon further.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I make a correction there?

Mr. DAWES. That is the Gatling gun that we propose to purchase. We do not propose to purchase a great number of them to lay up, because we think it is possible that the Ordnance Department may be mistaken in the idea that there never can be any more improvement to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Those already on hand are not laid aside in one sense. They are still an extremely valuable gun and the same that are still used in the European armies of a particular make; but he has made an advance on them and the purchaser of course would not think of taking an old one.

Mr. LOGAN. We had the inventor of those guns that we laid aside before us, and we questioned him. Every year there was an appropriation for purchasing machine guns and there was no restriction until we have two hundred that are laid aside, because a new invention makes much better guns. I asked this inventor if the guns we had could not be changed, and he said no. He insisted that the only thing to be done was to buy the new gun. Now, for fear there might be a change in the new gun again in order to get a new sale, we concluded that we would restrict the Ordnance Department to $15,000, and I think it was a very wise thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much did you pay for the old guns?

Mr. LOGAN. About $1,000 a piece. We have two hundred of them now useless in consequence of new inventions.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are not useless. They do not fire at high angles so easily.

Mr. LOGAN. I am using the word that the gentleman who appeared before us used. I do not invent the word "useless," but he said it. He said they could not be changed to this character of gun. We thought it would be a good idea if they could be changed, but he said no, and we concluded it would be proper to restrict the seller and the purchaser, so as to see what kind of a gun could be had.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 42, to insert:

For the purchase of machine guns of the latest improvement, $15,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the previous paragraph been ruled out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proviso has been. The other part has been agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is quite useless to argue on the wisdom of the proviso, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question has been determined, and debate on it is out of order. The question is on the amendment which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 48, after the word "application," to strike out "50" and insert "100;" so as to read:

For torpedoes for harbor defenses, and the preservation of the same, and for torpedo experiments in their application to harbor and land defense, and for instruction of engineer battalion in their preparation and application, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "provided," in line 49, to strike out:

That the money herein appropriated for torpedoes shall only be used in the establishment and maintenance of torpedoes to be operated from shore stations for the destruction of an enemy's vessel approaching the shore or entering the channels and fairways of harbors.

And insert in lieu thereof:

That one-half of this sum may be used in the purchase of torpedoes of the latest improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. On line 20, before the word "rifled," I wish to insert the word "breech-loading."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Those words should have been in.

Mr. LOGAN. They ought to have been in; it was neglected. It will then read:

Two 12-inch cast-iron breech-loading rifled cannon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, understanding that there is no appropriation bill ready until morning on account of the papers not being got together, that the Senate take up for consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of the fisheries part of the treaty with Great Britain, a measure of great public importance that ought to be passed on.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection, but will aid the Senator in any way to get that matter up; but there is a conference report that was laid aside yesterday to be taken up to-day which will take but a minute. If the Senator would not object, I should like to call it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary informs the Chair that the conference report was read yesterday.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir, and was laid aside at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], to be taken up to-day. I ask that the report be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation in the State of Nebraska.

The report was concurred in.

BRITISH FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington May 8, 1871, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That in the judgment of Congress the provisions of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and of article 30 of the treaty between the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, for an amicable settlement of all causes of difference between the two countries, concluded at Washington on the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time, and be no longer in force; and to this end the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the articles aforesaid will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give and communicate to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty such notice of such termination on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1883, or as soon thereafter as may be.

SEC. 3. That on and after the expiration of the two years' time required by said treaty, that each and every of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and be of no force and effect, and that every department of the Government of the United States shall execute the laws of the United States (in the premises), in the same manner and to the same effect as if said articles had never been in force; and the act of Congress approved March 1, A. D. 1873, entitled "An act to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th day of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries," shall be and stand repealed and be of no force on and after the time of the expiration of said two years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In section 3, line 2, there is a clerical error. It now reads:

That on and after the expiration of the two years' time required by said treaty, that each and every of said articles, &c.

The word "that," before "each," should go out as a mere matter of grammar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so amended.

Mr. BAYARD. Is this the regular notification under the treaty?

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the regular notification under the treaty.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether section 3, which repeals "an act to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th day of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries," will repeal the act under which goods are imported in transit through American territory. It says "relating to the fisheries," but the Revised Statutes seem to indicate that it covers the question of transportation in bond.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is section 2866 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will look at the statute.

Mr. WINDOM. While the Senator is looking for the statute I desire to say that I am very unwilling to repeal those clauses of the treaty and those laws which relate to transportation in bofid through this country, because it is a very large business and a very great interest would be injured if it should be done. I am very willing to give notice of the termination of the fishery part of the treaty, and I do not know but that article 29 of the treaty would cover the transportation question. The question is whether the law which is here proposed to be repealed affects transportation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The twenty-ninth article of the treaty provides, not for the fishery subject or the transportation between the two countries of things in bond from the ports of one country to those of another, but it provides for complete transit from the sea, for instance at Portland to Quebec, and from Port Huron, in Michigan, to Buffalo, for another illustration, reciprocally. That is the twenty-ninth article.

Mr. WINDOM. Would that provide for transportation, for instance, through Minnesota, of goods brought and carried to Manitoba.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it would; it covers all that thing. Article 30 would not provide for that.

Mr. WINDOM. But article 29——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Article 29 provides, I think, for that, because it says not only New York, Boston, and Portland, "but any other ports of the United States," and then reciprocally the other way in exactly the same terms, so that article 29 would cover things from Manitoba coming across the Territories of the United States for the British provinces; all that would come under article 29. Article 30 is an entirely different thing, which provides really for the British having the benefit of the coasting-trade of the United States, and the United States having the benefit of the coasting-trade on the lakes. That is the sum and substance of it, stated briefly.

Mr. FRYE. No notice is given as to article 29.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no. The only question is whether this repealing clause of the act of 1873 is to operate as repealing the provisions that have been made to carry out article 29; but article 29 did not require any legislation about it; it executed itself. I will look now at the act of 1873, and see if it did provide for carrying out article 29.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the Senator will find it did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be, but it was not necessary.

Mr. FRYE. Even if the Senator finds that it did, there is ample time to amend it at the next session of Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, but we would rather amend it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be arranged in a moment, if it is necessary. I do not think it is, for it says "relating to the fisheries;" but we can fix it in a word.

Mr. FRYE. I said to both Senators from Minnesota that it did not interfere at all with the rights and privileges which were of advantage to us under the treaty. I refer to the twenty-ninth article, which was not repealed, and not to the legislation which the resolution undertakes to repeal, for I did not have in my resolution any such reference to legislation.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is an express repeal of legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To guard against all possible misconstruction about it, I move to amend the amendment of the committee, page 3, after the end of the description of the title of the act, after "fisheries," partly in line 13 and partly in line 14, to insert:

So far as it relates to the articles of said treaty so to be terminated.

So that we repeal the act only that far.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think that covers it.

Mr. WINDOM. I am sure it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF BIGAMY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As no appropriation bill is yet ready, I move to take up the Utah bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is called the Utah bill. It will be reported by title and number by the Secretary.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to considering the bill?

Mr. CALL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CALL. I hope very much that bill will not be taken up at this time. It involves very serious constitutional questions, and we have but a few days left of the session, and there are a good many matters of very great importance to the current business of the country that have not been able to be considered at all. We shall be occupied long with this question in regard to the condition of things in the Territory of Utah if we go into it. It occupied a great deal of time last session. I think it is impossible to consider it at the present moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. WINDOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, forgetting that I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Anthony,	Garland,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Hale,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hawley,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Miller of N. Y.,

NAYS—17.

Barrow,	Camden,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Williams.
Beck,	Groome,	Pendleton,
Brown,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Call,	Harris,	Ransom,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Allison,	Frye,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Butler,	George,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	McDill,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Grover,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Davis of Ill.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Vance,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jackson,	Morgan,	Vest,
Fair,	Johnston,	Morrill,	Walker,
Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Windom.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in any proceeding and examination before a grand jury, a judge, or a United States commissioner, in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation under any statute of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the person accused shall be a competent witness and may be called and may be compelled to testify in such proceeding, examination, or prosecution, without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be.

SEC. 2. That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, whether before a United States commissioner, judge, a grand jury, or any court, an attachment for any witness may be issued by the court, judge, or commissioner without a previous subpœna, compelling the immediate attendance of such witness, when it shall appear to the commissioner, judge, or court, as the case may be, that there is reasonable ground to believe that such witness would unlawfully fail to obey a subpœna issued and served in the usual course in such cases.

SEC. 3. That any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation may be commenced at any time within five years next after the commission of the offense; but this provision shall not be construed to apply to any offense already barred by any existing statute of limitation.

SEC. 4. That every ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of marriage, in any of the Territories of the United States, whether either or both or more of the parties to such ceremony be lawfully competent to be the subjects of such marriage ceremony or not, shall be certified in writing by a certificate stating the fact and nature of such ceremony, the full names of each of the parties concerned, and the full name of every officer and of every person in any way taking part in the performance of such ceremony, which certificate shall be drawn up and signed by the parties to such ceremony and by every officer or person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and shall be by the officer, priest, or other person solemnizing such marriage or ceremony, filed in the office of the probate court, or, if there be none, in the office of the court having probate powers in the county or district in which such ceremony shall take place, for record, and shall be immediately recorded. Such certificate shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this act to be stated therein, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in which the matter shall be drawn in question. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That every record and entry of any kind concerning any ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of marriage, made or kept by any officer, clergyman, priest, or person performing civil or ecclesiastical functions, whether lawful or not, in any Territory of the United States, shall be subject to inspection at all reasonable times by any officer of justice appointed under the authority of the United States, and shall, on request, be produced and shown to such officer by any person in whose possession or control the same may be. Every person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. And it shall be lawful for any United States commissioner, judge, or court before whom any proceedings shall be pending in which such record or entry may be material, by proper warrant, to cause such record or entry and the book, document, or paper containing the same to be taken and brought before him or it for the purposes of such proceeding.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence now legally admissible for that purpose.

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

SEC. 8. That the existing election districts and apportionments of representation concerning the members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah are hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor, Territorial secretary, and the United States judges in said Territory forthwith to redistrict said Territory and apportion representation in the same in such manner as to provide as nearly as may be for an equal representation of the people (excepting Indians not taxed) being citizens of the United States, according to numbers, in said Legislative Assembly, and to the number of members of the council and house of representatives, respectively, as now established by law. And a record of the establishment of such new districts and the apportionment of representation thereto shall be made in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and such establishment and representation shall continue until Congress shall otherwise provide; and no persons other than citizens of the United States otherwise qualified shall be entitled to vote at any election in said Territory.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the seventh section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state the reasons on which the committee inserted the seventh section which deprives for the time being females in the Territory of Utah from voting. According to the information that we received from the commissioners appointed under the previous act of Congress and from other sources, it appeared that female suffrage in that Territory was so far as it relates to the Mormons a suffrage of servitude, that the females vote exactly as their lords and masters require them to do, be they many or few; and that counts to keep up in this hierarchy and polygamous really governed Territory as it has been, the power of those guilty of the crimes that we wish to repress.

Accordingly, we felt justified without any reference to the question of the general propriety of female suffrage, in proposing that for the time being female suffrage exercised as it is in that Territory should be suspended. We do not, by proposing this clause, undertake to express any opinion as to the general question of female suffrage; but in order to accomplish the end, and to put the political power in that Territory in the hands of the people who are in accord with the laws and sentiments of the United States. This was one of the things that was thought to be necessary to that end.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow me to ask one question for information. I did not hear all the statement of the Senator from Vermont. I lost the authority he had for saying that the females in the Territory voted as their lords and masters directed. I suppose he stated on what authority he said so, but I did not hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We saw all or all but one of the gentlemen who were commissioners under the former act, who spent some months in that Territory. This observation that I have made does not apply to the Gentile women as they are called there, very few of whom I understand really exercise this right of suffrage; but it refers to the other class of females under the domination of the Mormon Church, for there is no disguising the fact that the Mormon government of that Territory is a government of the most exclusive and powerful hierarchy that exists on this continent.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Gentile women did vote one wife would not counterbalance six.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true enough; but our information drawn from these gentlemen who spent months there, and from all other sources that we can get by letters and so on, convince us that the political power of this Territory is now largely influenced in respect of its being kept in the hands of the people who defy the laws of the United States, by force of their casting the solid votes of their females in the direction that I have named. We therefore thought that the greater good of breaking up this great crime would justify the suspension for the time being of female voting in the Territory, without any reference, I repeat, to the general question of female suffrage.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Vermont to any legislator accustomed to be governed by general constitutional principles has stated very strongly the objection to the section which he proposes in his bill. Here is a criminal law, a law aimed at the offense of polygamy and prescribing the method of proving with a view to the punishing a certain crime. In that law he includes a general provision in regard to the right of suffrage, and he undertakes to make a general provision in regard to the right of suffrage prohibiting all women from exercising a right they now enjoy and taking from the people of a particular Territory the right to determine the qualifications of electors in that Territory, accorded to all other people and accorded to them in all other respects, by saying that a certain class of women whom the Senator thinks are in a majority will not vote as he thinks they ought to vote.

That is the whole of this proposition as he states it himself, translated into plainer and clearer language so far as disclosing the purpose goes. I do not mean to compare my general capacity for making a clear proposition with that of the learned chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He says that the Gentile women, the unmarried women, the women who are the sole lawful wives of lawful husbands, shall all be prohibited from the exercise of a right which they now enjoy, and which for the purposes of his present argument he does not deny they ought to continue to enjoy, because certain other women have voted or are likely to vote in a way that we do not want they should for the wrong candidate or because they are constrained by domestic or other influences into voting a particular way.

Now, suppose we may take it for granted (though the Senator cites no authority except that of certain commissioners who have not been out of Salt Lake City) that the women who have so far become adherents or disciples of Mormonism as to live in polyamous connection with Mormons would be likely to cast their votes in the interest of that church and that institution; I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont why, if he excludes all the women of that Territory from the right to vote because of the action of the majority of women, he does not exclude all the men of that Territory from the right to vote because of the way in which the majority of the men vote in that community? If he excludes the Mormon wife because of casting her vote in accordance with the will of her husband, why should he not exclude the husband who casts his vote under the domination of the same hierarchy?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is really doing what the author of this section, I will not say flinched, but shrank from doing, and from avowing in regard to men. Why not meet this question fairly and say that Mormons shall not vote, that persons under the influence of the Mormon hierarchy shall not vote, or at any rate that persons living in polygamous marriage, male or female, shall not vote? That is what the Senator undertakes to accomplish; and if he has a right to do what he proposes, he has a right to do that.

But I suppose that whoever drew this section and that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in proposing this section thought that would be a violation of general and sound constitutional principles. He was not prepared to say even to a Mormon, "You shall not vote because of your religious or pretended religious principles;" he was not prepared to say even of Mormons, "We will punish a certain class of offenses against society and against the marriage relation as it is conceived and understood by Christians with the deprivation of the right of suffrage," because whatever evils the exercise of the right of suffrage by this class of persons may operate in the particular class, the assertion of the right by the Government to control the suffrage with a view of making that control a lever or instrumentality in regard to certain opinions, however erroneous they might be, was the assertion of a vicious and most dangerous general principle, worse, if anything could be worse, than Mormonism itself. I will not say that; not worse than Mormonism itself, because Mormonism itself is a destruction of that most sacred tie which lies at the foundation of the home and of society itself.

Now, the Senator from Vermont says that he does not put this proposition upon any general objection to female suffrage. Whatever his opinion may be on that question he is not governed by that opinion here, but he puts it simply on the ground that the suffrage of a particular class of women preponderating in numbers over others in a particular community is exercised in favor of a vicious system or under the control of a vicious hierarchy. If that be the reason, it seems to me, with great respect to a Senator for whose conclusions I have so great respect always, whom almost always I delight to follow in public questions, that that is a bad reason in principle.

I hope, therefore, whatever may be done with the bill, which I shall be glad to support without this clause, that the section will be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the question of suffrage is a political question within the control of the political power at all times. I believe everybody agrees to that. All that the Senator has said respecting the opinions of Mormon women is entirely apart from this bill. That is motive merely; it is not law.

In the next place, if we could get at the real opinions of the Mormon women, and give them the free exercise of those opinions, desirous of breaking up as I am these practices in that Territory, I would say if the Mormon women could not now vote they should have the right to vote, because if you can get at their real opinions (as these commissioners did from many of them in private interviews, &c.) we should find that the very nature of woman in general—the very nature of every virtuous woman—revolts at the notion of polygamy and of all its influences; but they are like the women of Central Asia at this present moment; they are dominated by the lords of creation, who wish to keep up a government which is opposed, as my friend and myself agree, to everything that is good as we understand it in this world, and that we all agree in desiring to put down.

That is the way it stands. Therefore we do not invade any principle of law or constitutional government in arranging the political affairs of a Territory over which we have supreme dominion. If the argument of a learned citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, said to have been delivered to a committee of the House of Representatives, and a copy of which has been sent to me, is sound, then we have no right to legislate about any of the transactions in the Territory of Utah at all, and Utah is entitled to the same powers of self-government by its people that a State is. But I do not propose to go into that question; I dismiss it as one to which no Senator, or very few Senators, will agree at all.

Then having the political power of arranging the suffrage in that Territory, and being determined to put down the practice of polygamy there and to abolish this anti-republican hierarchy which is founded on that alone, I think we are justified in taking any step that protects equal rights, necessary to that end. The motive is not to make a distinction in respect to opinions, but the motive is to liberate these women from the duress under which they keep up a government there which is injurious to their own fortune, their own honor, their own prosperity, and their own instincts of female virtue. That is it, and that is all of it.

My learned friend inquires why we do not exclude the men too. On constitutional principles of course we must make general rules. We have not undertaken, and I do not wish to undertake, and I do not think it right to undertake, and I doubt if it is constitutional to undertake—I will not say I doubt; I am sure it is not constitutional—to disfranchise any man on account of an opinion that he has, or any woman. Persons must be disfranchised on some other legal ground.

Everybody, I suppose, except Judge Black, agrees that in point of law we can confine voting in any Territory or in the District of Columbia to property-holders of $100,000, and that would reduce the government of the District to probably one hundred men; we can confine it in the Territories to $100,000, and that would reduce the whole Territory to one hundred men very likely; we can say that nobody who has a dollar in the world shall be entitled to vote; we can say that nobody who has any amount of property shall be entitled to vote, and that all those who have no property at all—the paupers—shall be the sole voters in a Territory over which we have dominion or in the District of Columbia, if we think it wise to do it, because we make a general classification.

If you say exclude the Mormon men as well as the Mormon women, you must exclude the Gentile men as well, as we do by this bill the Gentile women, and then you have nobody to vote in the Territory at all. So with the motive, which I avow with the utmost plainness, of diminishing this power and relieving these Mormon women from the slavery and duress under which they now cast their votes in a certain way, it is right and proper to do this thing. That is the whole of it.

Now, if my friend from Massachusetts is so stirred up with his admiration and desire for woman suffrage that he is unwilling to take every step possible lawfully to repress polygamy and this hierarchy founded on it in that Territory; that he prefers to have polygamy with woman suffrage than to have no polygamy without it for the time being, that, of course, will account for his position.

Mr. HOAR. Why does not the Senator abolish suffrage there altogether, allow me to ask him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that.

Mr. HOAR. We have the same right to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have the same right to abolish suffrage altogether. Then what are you going to do? You must govern that Territory then just as you govern the District of Columbia, by a steady and constant act of Congress like a legislature, which is impracticable. Some people, a considerable number of the Gentiles in that Territory, were angry last year when we passed the former bill, to which this is merely a supplement drawn out by circumstances and in aid of it, and extremely desirous that we should abolish suffrage altogether and put the government of that Territory into a commission and give the commission, as practically we must, if we do it at all, legislative powers.

I do not believe the Congress of the United States ought to give any commission anywhere legislative powers. You can give them executive powers; but you must yourself exert the legislative power and we know with the way Congress is blocked up with business that we can not provide local legislation from day to day and from time to time for that Territory. It can not be done; and the committee thought, considering that part of the question, that it was improper as the thing now stands to undertake to govern that Territory by a commission that should be invested with the necessary legislative powers for the proper government of it. So we can not do that.

Then we go just as far and as fast as the Constitution will allow us in every way to accomplish the end that I suppose we all have in view, and so far as the thing stands in point of law there can be no question of our right to regulate suffrage in that Territory, I suppose. When you come to the question of motive then my honorable friend is entitled to make the argument he has made, that this motive may apply just as well to men as to women. So it might; but we apply it both to the Gentile women who are willing and glad to suffer this deprivation in order to accomplish this great good, and to the Mormon women alike. If we apply it to the Mormon men we must apply it to the Gentile men alike, and then we shall have nobody to elect a Territorial Legislature and make a government.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator a question, but I want to found it, if he will allow me, on the reading of a passage from the last act. The Senator, as I understood him in what he first said, stated that these women acted under duress of their husbands. For that reason he wished to exclude them. The present law is this section 8 of the act of March 22, 1882:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

So you have already excluded every bigamist or polygamist, man or woman, every woman cohabiting with any polygamist or bigamist; and this is a proposition merely to extend to all women this disqualification without extending it to all men. The Mormon man in carrying his principles into practice is not excluded. Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont why it is that finding certain men not guilty of crime but only entertaining bad opinions, and certain women not guilty of crime but some of them as he supposes entertaining bad opinions, he makes a law applicable to the Territory of Utah by which he excludes all women from the franchise they now possess and refuses to exclude not only all men but even the men entertaining those opinions?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have answered that already. I have said that your law must be equal and is equal as applied to classes. Nobody doubts, my friend from Massachusetts does not doubt that wherever we have legislative jurisdiction, like a State has or like Congress has over the District of Columbia or a Territory, we may classify the people who are entitled to the exercise of political rights by age, by sex, by property, or the want of property, or any other such thing that is general in its application. Now in order to accomplish the object we have in view, one great and necessary step in it is to diminish the political power of the polygamous Mormon Church, because that is what it is, and that is what it is alone, as it is now constituted, although it is an ingrafted contrivance on the original Mormon faith.

Now how are you going to do it? I have answered that already. You can do it by excluding all men in the Territory if you please and leave it to all women; but inasmuch as three-fourths of the women there are under the domination of the men who wish to keep up this polygamous church, they vote just as they are compelled to whether they are plural wives or not, because the power of the church extends entirely beyond the mere polygamous relation. It extends to almost all the female people of that church as well as the male people, and they vote almost solid in one way in order to maintain this central power of the kind that I need not take time to describe. That is the reason, and therefore having the power to make this classification under the law and not having the power to abolish it entirely with any safety for the government of the Territory, for we cannot put it in a commission with legislative powers, we must do this or do nothing; and it really comes back to the question whether you prefer polygamy to suspending for the time being female suffrage in that Territory and relieving these poor women who are far more vastly sinned against than sinning, from the domination that forces them to uphold by their votes this institution that we are trying to get rid of.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I believe in what is called manhood suffrage; that is, the right of partaking in the sovereignty on the part of every human being of mature powers, whether male or female. I admit that the power to regulate the exercise of suffrage is in the political organization as it exists, and that the extension of the suffrage is at its will, not as a matter of right but as a matter of power, because there is no other way to obtain the extension unless it be exercised by force and violence, which is revolution. Wherever in any republican community or in any community where the republican form of government prevails this right has been extended to all to whom it belongs by nature, I never will consent by any act of mine to see any class despoiled of the exercise of that right; and if in the Territory of Utah woman has acquired it, I will so far as my action is concerned incline always to vote in such way as to enable her to continue rather than to restrict her in its exercise. But without entering upon the general question of the right of female suffrage, I wish to confine what little I have to say now to the specific provisions in this bill.

The exact state of the law seems to be this: By the statute of the last session we deprived every polygamist and bigamist of the right to vote and to hold office. I suppose we would consider that they have the right to continue the exercise of suffrage and the right of office-holding until tried and convicted of the crime mentioned according to law, and it is because we can not inflict this pain and penalty, for certainly the deprivation of the right of partaking in the suffrage is punishment, because we can not deprive them until after conviction by due course of law, that the Mormon men still retain the right of suffrage. Therefore they can still vote. Mormon women can vote still. Both can vote until they are convicted of the crime specified in the act of last session. Now, this bill comes to us and reads as follows:

That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

It does not touch the matter of office-holding, it does not attack the right of suffrage in the hands of any but women, and it makes no distinction among women. The Senator from Vermont brings in this bill with this section because certain of the women in the Territory of Utah believe in polygamy and vote in accordance with their belief, or if he does not place it upon that ground he says it is because these women are practically enslaved and vote in accordance with the will of their husbands or their masters.

That is a question of fact, and his proof of that question of fact is, I think, liable to be controverted. To be sure he says that certain commissioners who went out there and spent a few months come back and say so. I do not know in what authoritative way they have ever said so; but I do know that all the accounts I have ever heard from the Territory of Utah are overwhelmingly to the point that the women are as much attached to the institution as are the men in that Territory, and I think that is the fact.

I happened to be the last Gentile who conversed with Brigham Young before his death. I was in the Territory at that time. It was on a Monday evening, and he died the next Thursday. In conversation with him and in conversation with many other leading men, and from observation that I had the opportunity of making at a public festival and at other public gatherings and assemblies which I witnessed while there, I was thoroughly satisfied that the women as a whole were as strongly attached to the institution as were the Mormon men, and I believe such to be their opinion to-day. I believe that if the Mormon women vote for sustaining that institution, they do so as a rule as freely as do the Mormon men. So upon the question of fact I should need a great deal of evidence to satisfy me that the position of the honorable Senator is correct.

But assuming that he is correct in that regard and that his object is to place the control of the Territory in the hands of those who are opposed to polygamy—for that after all is the only practical reason that can be urged in this strange and otherwise violent and tyrannical legislation; nothing but the good purpose involved can possibly justify it—it is a question whether the best purpose, that is the destruction of polygamy, the destruction of the Mormon system, can justify a violation of the constitutional principles that have been the result of the toil and development and struggle of six thousand years. Assuming that the purpose, itself a worthy purpose, may be attained by the means which are brought into use in this section of this bill and other provisions of the bill which certainly seem to me to be very severe and violent and only to be justified by stress of the most important circumstances—assuming that, however, to be so, does the Senator attain his end?

Is it not a matter of common notoriety that the Territory of Utah is in the hands of the Mormons at least four to one, and in the hands of Mormen women also? Of what avail is it to strike at the suffrage in the hands of Mormen women even if they do vote unintelligently or as slaves, casting the ballots of their masters and husbands? If you disfranchise these women there are four Mormons to every Gentile to vote for the system, not four polygamists it may be, but four who entertain this same Mormon opinion, and who have the right to vote, and if every male polygamist in Utah was convicted of the crime as contemplated in the law of the last session, and if therefore he was deprived of the right to vote legally and judicially as a part of the sentence to be affixed to conviction, there would be at least three Mormons remaining who are not in the practice of polygamy to retain by their voting in their own hands the sovereignty of that Territory; for from all the undisputed information I have ever heard from any source there are at least three, if not four, unmarried male polygamists in that Territory who upon the provisions of all the bills suggested will still have the right to vote and who will control the Territory at the ballot-box.

So then this bill goes far short of any remedy for the evil there, and there is no necessity whatever of this continuous violation of our constitutional ideas and our constitutional rights. This other provision here, which commences by placing a witness under arrest before the ordinary means have been put in motion to secure his attendance, before there is any contempt of court, seems harsh. There is no necessity, I say, of adopting these violent measures, unless you go a great deal further than the Senator from Vermont feels justified in doing and deprive the unmarried Mormon male polygamist of the right of suffrage. Nobody proposes to do that, and the bill will be an utter failure for that reason, and we shall find ourselves precisely where we were in the commencement.

Mr. President, there are other reasons, strong, general reasons, that I could state why I am opposed to this principle of the deprivation of any human being who has it of the right of suffrage. I do not believe the remedy for this evil lies in that direction, and the proposed remedy I had almost said is worse than the evil itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied that as the Senate is very thin and I should like a full vote on this question, it is better to now adjourn. I move——

Mr. BLAIR. If you are going to move an adjournment, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to offer an amendment to this section, that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to read it first. I propose to amend the seventh section by striking out the word "female" wherever it occurs and inserting the word "person;" also after the word "whatever," in the fourth line, to insert:

Provided, That such person shall have been tried and convicted of the crime of bigamy or of polygamy according to the law.

And also to insert the word "such" between "by" and "female," in the seventh line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 21, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask unanimous consent to pass a bill——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and cuts off all requests of that kind.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 7193) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, and to recommend that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "dollars," insert "and of this sum $5,000 shall be immediately available;" so that the clause will read:

"For contingent expenses of pension agencies $10,000, and of this sum $5,000 shall be immediately available."

Page 2, after line 16, insert the following:

"That section 4745, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4745. Any pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in any pension which has been, or may hereafter be, granted, shall be void and of no effect; and any person who shall pledge, or receive as a pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in any pension or pension certificate which has been, or may hereafter be, granted or issued, or who shall hold the same as collateral security for any debt or promise, or upon any pretext of such security or promise, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 and the costs of the prosecution; and any person who shall retain the certificate of a pensioner and refuse to surrender the same upon the demand of the Commissioner of Pensions, or a United States pension agent, or any other person authorized by the Commissioner of Pensions or the pensioner to receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 and the costs of the prosecution.'"

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES UPON SENATOR BENJAMIN H. HILL.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate joint resolution No. 137, to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed 12,000 copies of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill, a Senator from the State of Georgia, of which 4,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 8,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of said Benjamin H. Hill to accompany each copy of said eulogies; and for the purpose of defraying the expense of engraving and printing the said portrait the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. JOHN W. SHACKELFORD.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. VANCE. I ask that this resolution be put upon its passage now.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed 12,000 copies of the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina, together with a portrait of the deceased; 9,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate; and a sum sufficient to defray the expense of preparing and printing the portrait of the deceased for the publication herein provided for is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I rise to make a privileged report from the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill submit the following statement in explanation of the report submitted:

The conference having failed to agree leaves the bill and amendments in the same condition as when last considered in the House.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask that the House insist on its non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair announces as the managers on the part of the House in the further conference the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. CASWELL, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. CASWELL. Inquiry is made of me as to what are the points of difference. If there is any wish on the part of the House to be indicated at this time in reference to any particular amendment I would be glad to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The subject is not now before the House.

Mr. CASWELL. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the substantial differences between the Senate conferees and those of the House were in reference to the appropriation of $185,000 for special mail facilities and the provision fixing the rates of compensation for land-grant railroads. Upon those two points mainly the conferees differed. I think there would be no difficulty in agreeing on the other points.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that there is any question before the House in regard to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

ADDITIONAL CHAIRS AND DESKS IN THE HALL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up the report and accompanying resolutions submitted by the Committee on Rules some days ago, and which went over upon the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] and others. The report relates to the rearrangement of the seats in this Hall for occupation in the next Congress.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, directed to procure thirty-two additional desks and chairs of the same size, style, and material as those now in use, in order to accommodate the increased number of Representatives in the next Congress, said desks and chairs to be placed upon the present platforms.

Resolved, That to this end the railing now in position on the south side of the Hall be removed; and that the Architect of the Capitol is hereby directed to make room for an additional desk at the south end of each platform.

Resolved, That the payment for the desks and chairs, and for label frames and plates for the former, be made out of the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to go further in the discussion of these resolutions than I went on the day of their submission, which, if my memory serves me, was Friday last. I merely wish to say that the Committee on Rules in presenting these resolutions express the conclusion which they have reached upon consultation with the Architect of the Capitol and after the discussion of very many different suggestions and plans looking toward the accommodation of the thirty-two additional members who will come in with the next Congress. The Committee on Rules, having been charged with the duty of inquiring into and reporting upon the best method to provide for the accommodation of those additional members, have submitted this report as the result of the best and closest inquiry and investigation they could make. The Supervising Architect of the Capitol and the Clerk of the House have been conferred with. A diagram has been submitted. The space has been measured; the thirty-two additional seats have been calculated for.

Among the various propositions submitted was one looking to the removal of all the desks from the Hall. The committee declined to agree to this, remembering that some years ago that method was attempted. The desks were all cleared out and nothing but seats left; but after a trial of the experiment for a very short time it was by an almost unanimous vote repudiated and the desks were ordered to be put back. Another proposition was to remove the intervening walls and extend the Hall to the outer wall on the south side of the Capitol. There were grave objections to this suggestion.

Among others we learn from the Architect of the Capitol that the weight of this building rests on the wall intervening between this and the surface wall, and that project could not be carried into execution without endangering the permanency of the structure itself, for the corridors all rest on the wall immediately beyond the Hall here on the other side or the south side of the lobby.

After the most careful consideration the committee could give, it reached the conclusion it would probably meet the views of the House to recommend as it has recomended, that seven seats shall be supplied on the right and left of the Speaker's stand on the south front of the Hall, the remaining eighteen to be supplied by the insertion of desks and chairs in each of the blind aisles of the House, gaining from two to five by sections.

As I stated on the day when this report was made to the House, actual measurement made by the Architect of the Capitol shows conclusively that it will not cramp the members more than they are cramped to-day, except in each of the blind aisles of the House, by which I mean those aisles which run from the circumference but do not reach down here to the point in front; not the aisle in which I am standing, but the adjoining one. That is, one tier would have to be occupied, and where there are now three tiers running there would be but two left. One will be occupied by the insertion of another desk and another chair; and you will have the same amount of room for each desk you have now, except that this rail here on the south front of the Hall will have to be removed and that space will have to be occupied by chairs and desks, affording seven seats on either side. It will not interfere with the walk-way of the Hall, but will simply necessitate the removal of the rail which we have now in the House.

The committee did not know and were not able to find or have suggested to them any method which would less disturb the present arrangement of the Hall and at the same time afford equal convenience and facility to each member and to the additional thirty-two who are coming in.

The plan submitted, as I stated the other day, does not carry a single seat in this Hall any further back toward the rear. Nor does it trench in the slightest degree on the vacant space in area in front. Nor does it disarrange the semicircular disposition of seats.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky, if he will permit me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. And that is whether that wall between the body of this Hall and the outside lobby is at all involved in the support of the building?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman refer to this wall here to the left?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer and say no. My opinion and that of the committee, as we got it from the Architect of the Capitol, is that it is not this wall, but the wall immediately across that Hall, between this and the lobby-room of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me ask the gentleman another question. If this wall may not be removed, did the committee take into consideration the reduction of that space; that is, reducing the width of that gallery, say two, four, or six feet?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer, I wish to say the committee took all that into consideration, and the result of the suggestion, if suggestion it is, that comes from the gentleman's question was it would necessitate two things: the taking away of the gallery above the Speaker's desk and the making of an entrance into that main lobby-room of the House at either end, by doors opening from the transverse hall, for of course there could be no hallway through a portion of the House itself. This wall might doubtless be removed with impunity so far as the structure is concerned, but you would then have the lobby of the House left without any wall in front of it at all and no way to enter except by doors from this and the corresponding transverse hall at the several ends, and you would do away with the gallery we now have over the Speaker's chair in the south front of the hall.

Mr. ANDERSON. One more suggestion, and that is whether that wall might not be removed four feet and still leave a narrower lobby, and in that way provide more room for seats; not taking this gallery, not doing away with that gallery, except that you will take one seat out of it, and in that way get room for seats, leaving the reporters' gallery as it is and still having the convenience now afforded by the blind aisles.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I state to the gentleman from Kansas it seems to me his suggestion would mar the symmetry of the Hall, while materially impairing and impinging on the convenience of members in this Hall. We would then have the seats provided on the south front, I take it, in tiers, and would throw the occupants of those extreme southern tiers behind the Speaker instead of at his side as now, leaving the reporters' gallery as it is, as that can not be disturbed. In that event you will have one if not two of these rows of seats actually in the rear of the Speaker's desk.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; only one.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that this suggestion would involve—that is, the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas—a very considerable expenditure, while at the same time it would be merely experimental and might not be satisfactory nor afford such a satisfactory arrangement as we would be willing to continue. On the contrary, the report of the Committee on Rules and the recommendation that they make involves an expenditure of only the purchase of thirty-two additional desks and chairs, costing perhaps in the aggregate, with such slight alterations in the Hall as will be rendered necessary, not more than $2,000.

I might say further that it was proposed and urged in committee that it would be wise to bisect the Hall and reduce it in space one-half, removing every desk now here and inserting benches for the use of the members; and also to provide retiring-rooms where members might go to transact business or carry on their correspondence. Several such radical changes were suggested. Other suggestions as radical in their features were submitted without number to the committee; but we believe the plan we propose to be the most conservative course that can be pursued, both as to the amount of money involved and also to the character of the work done, which is, as must always be the case, more or less experimental. They thought it would commend itself to the judgment of the House, and leave future arrangements of a more permanent character to such time as, after the new Congress shall have convened, this plan may have been fairly tested, and we will have more opportunity or leisure to discuss the alterations or make the proposed changes.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I know that there are only about one-half of the members present who are interested at all in the question of the arrangement of this Hall for the accommodation of the next Congress, and as a consequence many gentlemen present do not care in particular what arrangement may be made for the accommodation of the next House. I do not doubt that the Committee on Rules did their best and recommended the most economical measure that could be suggested. But I say this, sir, that every member of this House who occupies a seat on the last three tiers of seats in this present Hall will bear me out in the assertion that we are making the House, if possible, still more inconvenient even than it is now, although perchance it may be done in what is claimed to be the interest of economy. By making the additional seven seats on the south side of the Hall, on either side of the Speaker's chair, we shut up practically those passageways now running between the rows of seats and the south wall. By filling up these blind aisles, as suggested by the committee, with seats and desks, we compel members who may occupy seats on these lines to drag themselves along through fifteen members in these narrow, crowded transverse aisles, between the chairs and the desks, before they can get access to the main or other aisles, or else they will have to sit still and remain in their seats, which is perhaps a valuable thing sometimes in public life. [Laughter.] And I repeat, sir, that if this proposition of the Committee on Rules be adopted in its present form its effect will be to disqualify at least one-half of the members of this House both from hearing what is taking place or taking an active part in our deliberations.

Mr. HASKELL. What better can be done?

Mr. HAZELTON. What would the gentleman himself suggest?

Mr. COX, of New York. I made some observations while I was traveling, if I may be allowed to refer to it, which I seldom do, and I took occasion to visit the parliamentary houses of Holland and Belgium, Sweden and Norway, Germany, the Cortes in Madrid, the French Assembly chambers, and other parliamentary bodies, and after making some little notes and observations and looking carefully over the ground I think the best thing we can do is not to have benches, for we tried that some fifteen years ago and found it to be a failure, but to do as they do in the Spanish Cortes, and if you please in the French Assembly, and that is to provide smaller desks and smaller chairs, which will be equally convenient for the members occupying them, and we will have far more room and better accommodations in the Hall. I can now make a desk from what I have seen which will give us as much accommodation certainly, if not more, than the present desks, and can furnish a chair or bench which will be as comfortable as those we now use and which will occupy very little more than one-half of the space that is now taken up by the present chairs and benches.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not complain of gentlemen on the Committee on Rules for the recommendation they have made; nor that they have not examined further into the matter, although they have had a plain proposition submitted to them. But I would suggest a plan and submit a resolution providing that a special committee of this House and the next be appointed, after we shall have rejected the present plan of the committee for temporary purposes, to make a more full and thorough investigation of the subject, and let that special committee go on and inquire whether we can not make a more commodious and better arrangement before the meeting of the next Congress. I think it would be a good idea to put some benches in front of the desks or in front of the seats, as is the case in the Spanish Cortes, on which members could lay their papers. In the British Parliament, as we all know, thay have no desks at all. They have only benches for the accommodation of the members, and the members of Parliament are not permitted to write or to take notes during the sessions of the Parliament, except in a very limited manner. They write on the tops of their hats, and sometimes, as I have seen ministers near the bench, they reach over and get paper from it, and write on their knees.

Mr. DUNN. The trouble is we do not all wear plug-hats.

Mr. COX, of New York. And we can make the same arrangement here that is made in the British Parliament, in part at least, with satisfaction and comfort to the members. I would not do away with the desks altogether, and I would perhaps put some of them in the corner for the convenience of members who desire to carry on their correspondence. We tried, as I have said, some years ago to do away with the desks altogether, but the difficulty was in securing the attendance of members who were engaged writing letters in the corner at the desks provided for that purpose, and in a few weeks we gave them up. My present idea is that we should combine a smaller desk with smaller seats, to provide suitable accommodations for members, so that we may be able to do some writing and something else besides merely listening in our seats.

Mr. KASSON. Will my friend from New York permit me to say, I suppose there is no doubt except upon one or two points. One method might be instead of blocking up these short aisles to put some rows of seats in the corners in the rear. Another is the suggestion the gentleman from New York now makes as to diminishing the space occupied by desks and chairs. I think these doubts are of sufficient importance to be a reason for the appointment of a select committee, as the gentleman now suggests, and which I suggested the other day. I know the embarrassment of the Committee on Rules in recommending anything else than is embraced in their report without the sanction of the House. I think their report is the best off-hand report that could have been made on the subject.

Mr. COX, of New York. I believe if we would reduce the space occupied by the seats we would have plenty of room in this House to do our business properly. But as it is now, I believe more than half the members of the House do not understand what is going on. I have to leave my seat always and come over here to understand what is going on from the Speaker's chair. And the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who has the most magnificent voice in this House, frequently can not be heard by gentlemen in that corner on the last two rows of seats, unless he speaks from some commanding position; and he can not always obtain that position. Even the Speaker can not always be heard in those remote parts of the Hall.

Mr. BEACH. Let me ask my colleague whether that is not owing to the confusion which prevails in this House, and whether members would not be better heard if better order were preserved?

Mr. ANDERSON. There will always be confusion here.

Mr. COX, of New York. As long as our country is what it is, and when we have in this Hall three hundred and twenty-five members, there will be confusion more or less. What is to be aimed at is to diminish the confusion as much as possible by bringing the members closer together, in the interest of business.

I know something about this matter. With all modesty I say it; I made the first speech in the Hall. It had an attentive auditory—not from what I said, but because men were watching the acoustic properties of the Hall. I have survived a good many long, wearisome debates in this House in spite of all the confusion. I have been placed in the outer rim in one corner; I have drawn seats all round the Hall; and I know the interest I take in legislation depends greatly on where I am in the House. If I had the choice of a seat in this House I would choose the Speaker's chair. [Great laughter.] But I can not always have that. [Mr. BLACKBURN rose.] Will my friend from Kentucky allow me to offer my resolution?

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] propose to offer an amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I offer an amendment which I think will perhaps be accepted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a committee of five members be appointed to consider whether any other arrangement than that proposed by the Committee on Rules can not be made; and that said committee be authorized to so arrange the seats of the Chamber as to give better accommodation for the transaction of the business of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is in addition to the resolution of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire simply to say we have but nine working days left, I believe, of this Congress. It seems to me impracticable to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from New York in the form of the substitute he offers.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not offer it as a substitute, I will say to my friend, but as an addition to his resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That would necessitate the change contemplated by the report made from the Committee on Rules; then the sitting here during the long session of the Forty-eighth Congress under that arrangement. And it seems to me that the time during the six or eight or nine months of the session will be ample to consider any radical changes.

Now that the gentleman from New York has offered his amendment, desiring to get the sense of the House, and having tried as fairly as I could to state the reason which induced the committee to make this report, I will test the sense of the House by demanding the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not wish to antagonize the report made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My demand for the previous question does not shut out the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I agree to let it come in.

Mr. WHITE. I ask my colleague from Kentucky to allow me to offer a substitute.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it is the only one, I shall be glad to do so.

The Clerk read Mr. WHITE's proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, directed (before the convening of Congress in December, 1883) to remove the desks and chairs now in use in this Hall of Representatives, and substitute therefor the same chairs, or those of a more convenient style and pattern, if such can be obtained, attached to the right arm of which shall be a rest or table on which to write, with a small drawer or receptacle underneath for holding writing materials; such chairs to be placed in their present circular form, maintaining the space now existing in front of the Speaker's table; the present desks, or, in lieu of them, counting-house or library tables, containing drawers, and presenting writing spaces sufficient to accommodate the Representatives and Delegates elect to the Forty-eighth Congress, so that each person may have a drawer and space for his exclusive use, the desks or tables to be placed in the open space behind the chairs, and separated therefrom in the most convenient manner.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Desiring a fair expression of opinion from the House upon this question, I am glad the substitute of my colleague from Kentucky is offered. I ask for the previous question, so as to get a vote first on his substitute, then upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], and then upon the report of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. Will my colleague allow me two minutes to explain my substitute?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman can give his explanation after the previous question shall have been ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am only afraid it may involve further discussion.

Mr. WHITE. I do not desire to debate this matter to any extent, but merely to explain my proposition for two minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have the previous question ordered, and then the gentleman can go on.

The SPEAKER. There will be no debate after the previous question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; I will yield now.

Mr. WHITE. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has said must certainly strike every one as the fact, especially those of us occupying seats in the remote parts of the Hall. What we need is some arrangement by which we can hear what is going on.

My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] has a magnificent voice, but I think I can safely say that not one-half of the members present here this morning have been able to hear what he has been saying. For that reason I have offered this resolution, to enable the members of the House with weaker lungs to be heard when they have something to say.

My proposition is to take out these desks and put them behind the outer railing, or to have substituted instead proper counting-house tables, in which there shall be a lock-drawer, so that any member who may want to write a letter, read a paper, or smoke a cigar can go outside of the railing, while those who desire to stay here can understand what is going on.

It is not necessary that each member shall be allowed all the space which is now assigned him for a chair and desk. Five feet square of space is allowed here now to each member. In order to do that for the few who are fortunate enough to draw seats near the front, the rest of us are obliged to sit farther back. That is not fair to those members.

Mr. REED. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything on this subject; but if the House will indulge me a moment, I desire to say a few words.

I think the idea of the removal of these desks and the substitution of seats is absurd, except upon one plan or purpose, and that is to divide this Hall into two parts and use only one-half of it for purposes of legislation. If we have made up our minds that we want to make that radical change, then we can have a space for desks and have another portion of the Hall reserved in which members can be heard.

But to put desks in the middle of this ten-acre lot in which we are now doing business would be the greatest mistake in the world. It would do neither the one thing nor the other; it would neither give an opportunity to do private business to the exclusion of the public business, nor an opportunity to do public business to the exclusion of private business.

As an individual I might be in favor of dividing this Hall into two parts, and taking one-half of it for legislative purposes, so that every member, whether he has a "magnificent voice" or not, can be heard when he addresses the House. But I do not believe the House is ready for any such radical change, and therefore the wisest thing for us to do is to make the slight change which is recommended by the committee.

I do not believe in having a select committee to attend to this business on the heel of the session. If it is desired to make radical changes in this regard, then let them be begun at the commencement of the next session of Congress, when we can have full opportunity for discussion and when we can arrive at some conclusion to which we will stick thereafter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

The amendment was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 18, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] for the resolutions reported from the Committee on Rules.

The substitute was not agreed to.

The resolutions from the Committee on the Rules were then agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FERDINAND MULLAN.

Mr. URNER. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Ferdinand Mullan, administrator of Charles N. Mullan, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives during the Forty-fourth Congress, a sum not exceeding $173 for funeral expenses of said deceased, and that the same be immediately available.

Mr. ATKINS. I would inquire of the Chair whether if this resolution should be referred to the Committee on Claims at this late period of the session it would not be an end of the matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. URNER. Very well; I will make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution was referred accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. HISCOCK. I now propose to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. Before making that motion I will move that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to limit debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. In deference to the Committee on Military Affairs, from which committee was reported the pending amendment in Committee of the Whole, I will change my motion so as to limit debate to thirty minutes.

Mr. ATKINS. I would suggest ten minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it is due to the Committee on Military Affairs, from which the pending proposition came, to allow thirty minutes.

The motion to limit debate to thirty minutes was agreed to.

DAMAGE BY FLOODS TO MISSISSIPPI IMPROVEMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a telegram from Captain W. L. Marshall, Corps of Engineers, in partial response to the resolution of the House on the 17th instant, calling for information in regard to damage by flood or otherwise to improvements on the Mississippi River at Plum Point Reach or Lake Providence Reach.

Mr. PAGE. I submit that this communication should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Did the Chair mean to refer the resolution to the special or the standing committee?

Mr. HISCOCK. It ought to go to the special committee, as they have asked for this information.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The special committee appointed at the adjournment of the last session.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the communication will be referred to the special committee relative to appropriations for the Mississippi River.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me that as the special committee have made their report——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. They have not; they are waiting for this very information.

The communication was referred to the Select Committee Relative to Appropriations for the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. KASSON in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been limited to thirty minutes. The pending amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 823 add the following:

"That all lands reserved for military purposes which, in the opinion of the President, may be no longer desirable for such purposes, or so much thereof as he may designate, shall be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior to be disposed of: Provided, That said lands shall not be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior until the direction of the President therefor shall have been filed in the Interior Department: Provided also, That said lands shall not be subject to location by warrant or scrip of any description nor to the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States: And provided further, That said lands shall not be sold until they shall have been surveyed and platted under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and appraised by three competent men to be appointed by him and their appraisal approved by the President of the United States. And said lands shall be sold at public sale to the highest bidder for cash, and shall not be sold at less than their appraised value and in such subdivisions as may be most advantageous to the Government, no subdivision to exceed one hundred and sixty acres."

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from California that this amendment was offered last evening by the Committee on Military Affairs. A point of order was raised upon it; but the amendment was decided by the Chair to be in order. The proposition is now open to amendment and further debate in connection with amendments, as debate under the rule has been exhausted.

Mr. HENDERSON. There ought to be some understanding in regard to the division of the time.

Mr. PAGE. I do not wish to debate the question at all, but merely to ask a question of the gentleman who reported this amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs. I wish to inquire whether this provision does away with the necessity for special legislation in reference to restoring to public entry lands formerly occupied as military reservations?

Mr. McCOOK. I assume that it does.

Mr. PAGE. One further inquiry. There are instances where persons have entered upon these reservations which have been abandoned for military purposes. I desire to ask whether there is any provision that persons entering in this way shall have the first right in regard to these lands?

Mr. McCOOK. I will gladly answer the gentleman; but I understand this does not come out of the regular time.

The CHAIRMAN. This is in the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the gentleman the remainder of my five minutes that he may answer the question.

Mr. McCOOK. I can only answer the question in this way: I assume that if any man who has entered on a military reservation has a legal claim this provision, if it should become a law, will not affect his rights. If he is a squatter—has taken possession of land to which he had no more right or title than I have—I assume that his so-called rights will not be protected.

Mr. PAGE. Suppose he has entered upon the land in good faith?

Mr. McCOOK. The question of good faith we can not determine. He had no right to enter until the land was formally abandoned under an act of Congress and restored to the public domain.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we ought to have some understanding as to the division of time.

Mr. McCOOK. I would like, if it be not contrary to the rule, to have fifteen minutes assigned either to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] or myself, so that we may distribute that time as we please.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman who offered the amendment [Mr. McCOOK] to dispose of the fifteen minutes on that side, and perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to assign the remainder of the time.

Mr. WASHBURN. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "homestead or" in the second proviso of the amendment; so as to make the proviso read:

"Provided also, That said lands shall not be subject to location by warrant or scrip of any description, nor to the pre-emption laws of the United States."

Add to the second proviso the following:

"And provided, That the rights of actual settlers entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws of the United States who now occupy in good faith any portion of the lands embraced within the said reservations shall not be interfered with, but shall date from the day of their actual settlement thereon; and in perfecting their titles thereto under the homestead laws the time such settlers have occupied and improved their said lands shall be allowed."

Mr. VALENTINE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he say "such reservations abandoned," &c.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the general purposes of the amendment offered by the Military Committee and accepted by the Committee on Appropriations, having for its purpose the disposal of the military reservations for which there is no further use for military purposes. I am not, however, in favor of turning our backs upon the policy of the last twenty-four years, whereby the public domain has been opened up to settlement and dedicated to the use of the actual settler. This wise and beneficent policy has done too much for my State and the States in that portion of the Union to be abandoned at this time. So far as these reservations are concerned, my observation teaches me they are very little different in value from the other lands of the public domain in the same localities. There are few of them which have any special value more than the rich, broad acres which have belonged to the general public domain. Such is the case I know in my own State.

While I have been in Congress two of these military reservations have been abandoned, and in both instances the provisions of this amendment of mine has been adopted in reference to their disposal and in protecting the rights of the actual settler. Actual settlers have gone upon these reservations years and years ago, in the expectation and belief that they were ultimately to be restored to the public domain, and in my judgment they should be allowed to perfect their homestead claims and secure a preference that a residence on such claims would give them.

There is no good reason, so far as my observation has gone, why these particular reservations should be taken out from the operation of the general policy of the Government so far as the disposal of the public domain is concerned. There may be some rare instances where possibly a portion of a reservation is of special value, but under the power given to the President and Secretary of War such portion can be withdrawn from the operation of the law opening up the lands to homestead claimants.

Now, sir, I hope our friends on this side of the House will not forget that as a party we have been pledged to the principle of the homestead law from its very inception, and we should not forget that its effect has been most beneficent. It has done, Mr. Chairman, more than any other act of legislation to settle up and develop the great empire of the West and Northwest. Let us not turn our backs on it. Let us not forget that the actual settler who has gone out to these public lands in good faith and when he believed he could perfect his right to his home, let us, I say, not forget him, but see to it that he shall have the right to secure his homestead right in preference to the land speculators and sharks who swarm through the country. The amount the Government will receive by the sale of these lands will not be large. The Government does not rely on the sale of its public lands to fill its Treasury. There is no necessity for it. By putting these lands up at public sale the result will be that men of capital, speculators and adventurers, will take up these reservations, and the actual settlers will be compelled to take them second-hand at an advanced price. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, for several years the War Department has been commending to the consideration of Congress the propriety of disposing in some way of the useless military reservations of the country. And I take it there is no man on this floor who does not feel the importance of so doing. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House, having charge of matters of this sort, with perfect unanimity have agreed on a policy to dispose of this public property, and have recommended that it be appraised and sold without being subject to location by land-warrants, land scrip, homestead exemption, or anything else of that kind. That committee proposes, by the amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] has by its instruction offered to this bill, a plan by which this valuable property may bring a considerable revenue to the Government by disposing equitably and fairly of these public lands.

The objection made to it, and the only one I have heard, is that made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], who proposes to amend so that these lands shall be subject to homestead entry, &c. For a moment, sir, let us look at the effect of this modification of the Military Committee amendment. How are you to subject these lands to homestead exemption without doing injustice to the people of the country? It is plain that it would be impossible to do so without the guard thrown around them by the clause in the committee amendment, subjecting them to fair sale to any and all persons, and excluding any special privileges to this army of camp-followers and squatters, who having followed the army for speculative purposes would be sure to secure and gobble up the most valuable of these lands and thus deprive bona fide actual settlers, who will desire them for purposes of cultivation and improvement, from getting them.

We are told that some of these lands have already been squatted upon. By whom, and who are they? They certainly had no right to do so. Sir, I know of no man on this floor or in this country who is not in favor of the homestead law, of opening the public lands to actual settlers and allowing them to perfect their homestead entries. The public domain has been open under liberal and just laws to pre-emption and homestead entries for many years, and will I hope remain so; but military reservations are no part of what is popularly known as the public domain. They have been taken out from the public domain and have been specially reserved and used by the Government for specific military purposes. They are much of them very valuable. Now, when the Government has ceased to use them and no longer wants them for the purposes for which they were originally reserved, should they not in common fairness to the whole people be disposed of for the reasonable price they would bring by being thrown open to public sale?

Now, I do not know whether my friend from Minnesota has any friends among these camp-followers, who have without authority squatted on any military reservation in his State and who would like to gobble up these valuable lands or not. I do not know nor insinuate any such thing. But I do know that they ought to be opened to the people of the whole country without reservation. They ought to be opened fairly to every man who will buy and build up his home upon them under the law. What right had these camp-followers to locate upon these reservations if any of them did so? Can it be that they did so in good faith for the purpose of making homes upon them? No, they could not have done that, because it was notorious that these reservations were not subject to be taken possession of under the homestead laws. They like all others could have gone upon the public lands (not reserved) where in fact they were invited generally to do so; but they had no invitation nor right to go upon reservations. Hence if there is anybody upon these reservations they are, as I have said, a class of men who have no legal authority under the homestead or other laws to do so. They followed the camp for speculative purposes and if they made locations in its neighborhood they acquired no legal nor equitable claim upon the lands, for they knew that the homestead laws did not apply to them. It would now be unfair to the people of the whole country and unjust to the actual settlers upon the public lands generally, who have gone there in pursuance of the law, to permit these parties to hold valuable lands under such circumstances. Justice demands just such a law as that proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which comes from and is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, having charge of the matter, that these lands shall be promptly appraised, duly advertised and sold, and the proceeds turned into the public Treasury as they ought to be.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to permit the following words to be inserted after the word "reservation" in his amendment:

Now abandoned or not used for military purposes.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the gentleman will not accept that amendment, because there are many of these reservations where if that amendment is incorporated the very purpose and object of the proposition of the Military Committee will be destroyed.

Mr. VALENTINE. It has been the custom, as my friend knows, after a reservation has been abandoned, for these persons to move on to it and take possession of the land. Now, this makes provision——

Mr. MAGINNIS. Let the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "reservations" "the words "now abandoned or not used for military purposes;" so that it will read:

"Who now occupy in good faith any portion of the land embraced within the said reservations now abandoned or not used for military purposes, shall not be interfered with, but shall date from the day of such actual settlement," &c.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman will see that I wish to confine this provision to these abandoned reservations.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is all right. I have no objection to that. I misunderstood the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. VALENTINE. I offer this amendment to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, and hope he will not object to it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I accept that modification.

Mr. VALENTINE. Now I ask the attention of the committee for a moment. I can refer to a small reservation in my own State, Fort Hartsuff, which was originally only one or two sections, a small reservation, a two-company post, which was used about eight years for military purposes. It has now been abandoned for some four or five years. They found it necessary to have more territory within that reservation than was originally selected for wood and hay purposes, and consequently they took in some five or six additional sections surrounding it, and took in thereby some actual settlers who were upon adjacent surveyed lands, in accordance with the land laws of the United States; men who had actually settled upon the surrounding lands under the law.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is a common practice in extending reservations, to take in the surrounding settlers.

Mr. VALENTINE. These people, to whom I refer, are prohibited from proving up on their entries if this amendment shall prevail without the modification I have suggested. And if this amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] prevails without such a modification it will prevent these actual settlers from doing so. Now, they ought to be protected. I can well see the force of the proposition suggested by the gentleman from New York as applied to reservations lying within the Eastern States. I think it entirely right and proper with reference to these lands, for they have become very valuable and should only be disposed of in the manner prescribed in the proposed amendment of the Military Committee. But, Mr. Chairman, there are reservations lying in many of the Western States and Territories that should be excepted from its general provisions, as in the case of the one to which I have just referred. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota amply covers and protects these actual settlers with the modification I have suggested upon reservations lying in the Western States and Territories; and I hope, therefore, as modified that it will be agreed to by the committee.

If I have any time remaining I yield it to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has one minute.

Mr. BERRY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that some such amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Minnesota should prevail, and I must say that I am somewhat surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS], for he ought to know that in many instances reservations have been declared where there never was a military post established. The settlers have gone and occupied these lands that are simply military reservations in name; and if some such amendment as is suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Nebraska does not prevail, the actual settlers who built their homes on these lands will be deprived of the opportunity to secure titles.

Further, Mr. Chairman, military reservations have been declared where Government troops were only stationed for one winter, perhaps; or where they have occupied quarters for only a few months in some instances. In these cases we have settlers who have gone and occupied the lands, who have made their entries and their surveys, established their homes, who will be deprived of all opportunity of proving up their titles if this amendment proposed by the Military Committee shall prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON. There ought not to be, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, any question in regard to the adoption of this amendment which has been offered by the direction of the Military Committee.

Mr. VALENTINE. There will be no objection, I think, if you let proper modifications be made to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand perfectly well the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]; and if I believed, Mr. Chairman, that any bona fide claimant of lands was to be protected by such amendment I would be in favor of it. But I do not believe there is any bona fide claimant that is to be protected by that amendment.

So far as California is concerned, as long ago as 1853 it was expressly provided by law that no person should make any settlement or location upon any tract or parcel of land selected for a military post, or within one mile of such post. How can a man in California in the face of this law come now and say he is claiming in good faith any part of a military post or reservation?

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman allow me now to make this statement——

Mr. HENDERSON. I can not allow it out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It must come out of the gentleman's time. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe this amendment ought to be adopted as reported by the Military Committee, from the fact that these military posts have usually been established on the very best lands of the United States, as was stated last night by my colleague on the committee [Mr. McCOOK] who has charge of this amendment. I know that some of them have valuable improvements upon them because the report of the Secretary of War so informs us, and it seems to me that in view of that fact we ought not now to open up these military reservations and subject them to the homestead and pre-emption laws.

There is not a very large quantity of these lands; there are less than 600,000 acres of these lands, as I understand from the report of the Secretary of War, and where the land has been made valuable and held in reservations for so long a time it seems to me just that the Government should adopt this policy instead of allowing it to be jumped or squatted on by any person who may go there in anticipation of its becoming vacant with the intention of stealing it; as is often the case, I fear.

I am in favor of the homestead exemption law. I am an earnest advocate of it. But my faith in it was greatly weakened by a visit last summer to Dakota, when I found that Territory covered all over with claims so that an honest citizen going there with the honest intent of seeking a homestead for himself and family had to purchase a right from some speculator who seemed to have lands in some way to dispose of.

Mr. WASHBURN. Those fraudulent claims are not under the homestead law, but under the pre-emption law, which this House, if it does justice to itself and the country, will repeal before we adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DUNNELL. Has the time been occupied on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, and five minutes remain on the side of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL], who is now recognized.

Mr. DUNNELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. I think enough has been disclosed by the discussion to demonstrate that no general law can be passed here that will be just in its application to all these forts. The conditions vary in almost every case. In the case of some forts the property has become valuable; settlements have sprung up all around such a fort; it has been a fort for years; that ought to be appraised and disposed of at auction with certain restrictions.

One word more. It has been the practice of the Government to treat each of these reservations in the disposition of them upon its merits and pass a law for its disposition. [Here the hammer fell.] I want to add one word with the permission of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL]. I observe by an examination that during the last ten years we have disposed of seventeen of these reservations, and every one of them has been disposed of under the homestead and pre-emption laws excepting four.

Mr. DUNNELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. Chairman, in the Territory of Dakota there are several abandoned military reservations. These reservations were established shortly after the Minnesota massacre in 1862, and they were so far beyond settlement that they were no more valuable than the surrounding public lands. These reservations have since been abandoned by the War Department, and as the settlers have come in and filled up that country a few of them have settled upon these reservations. The land is no more valuable than the surrounding land taken by their fellow-settlers; and these people who occupy these reservations are not camp-followers, but have everything they possess in the world upon these lands. And for Congress to pass any act depriving them of their improvements and rights would be unjust.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RYAN. They are the kind of camp-followers that have settled up the entire West.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] speak of these men settling upon these reservations as camp-followers. A gentleman representing a Western State ought to know better than to affirm that the men squatting even, if you please to use that term, upon reservations or public lands in the great West are to be denominated camp-followers. They are the very men that lead in the development and growth and prosperity of these sections of the country. It was said here last night by the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] that the War Department was desirous of creating a new policy as to the disposition of these reservations. I find here that the Secretary of War proposes to transfer these lands to the Secretary of the Interior "for sale after appraisement or for a disposition under the general land laws."

Heretofore, as I stated last night, we have disposed of every military reservation from the beginning of the Government down to the present time by special act, and in all cases where there have been lands proper for entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws those lands have always been given up to settlers under those laws. It is now proposed to establish an entirely new policy.

There are involved in this proposition a half million acres of land, the great bulk of which is no better than the outlying lands. It is proposed to sell those lands and have the proceeds go into the public Treasury.

I am opposed to this, not because I represent any lands within any military reservation, but because, from my service on the Committee on Public Lands and as representing a land State, I know very well that the old policy we have pursued has been in harmony with the liberal and beneficent homestead policy of the Government which has been in vogue now for so many years.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to favor the amendment offered by my colleague.

Mr. McCOOK. I think the Committee on Military Affairs should be allowed some chance to be heard.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCOOK. The Committee of the Whole may as well understand distinctly that if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] shall be adopted it will destroy absolutely the effect and purpose of the proposition submitted by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DUNNELL. Good.

Mr. McCOOK. The Committee on Military Affairs have nothing whatever to disguise in regard to the action which they propose. Their proposition is that the military reservations of this country, not those abandoned, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] suggests, but those from which the troops have been withdrawn, shall be sold to the highest bidder at auction after due appraisal and due advertisement.

As I stated last night, the proposition is carefully guarded so as to prevent combinations, and it prohibits the sale of any subdivision of land containing more than one hundred and sixty acres. When you talk about the rights of the men who have located on these military reservations, I will say that they are simply trespassers, and in my judgment are entitled to no consideration from the Congress of the United States.

Almost from the beginning of the Government to the present time the President of the United States has by proclamation declared certain of the public lands military reservations, and that authority has been affirmed time and time again by Congress. Judicial decisions have been rendered to the effect that when those lands have been once declared by the President to be military reservations they can not be afterward abandoned for any purpose whatever except by authority of Congress. I therefore again repeat that when any man in the vicinity of a military reservation, no matter whether he goes there in good faith or bad faith, takes possession of any portion of the land embraced within such reservation, he is a trespasser and has no legal or equitable rights before the Congress of the United States.

I deny again that it has always been the policy of this Government, as the gentleman suggests, to open these military reservations to pre-emption or homestead settlement. The military lands of the State of Florida have all been sold, and the proposition reported from the Committee on Military Affairs practically follows the language of the statute in that case, with additional guards and checks thrown around it.

As I understand the law, up to 1858 all of these lands were sold, and then the law was modified. The present Secretary of War, as did also his predecessor, asks us for some general law in regard to the matter, some law which we in our wisdom, if we have any, may suggest.

The Committee on Military Affairs, who had the right to consider this matter, after taking into consideration the value of these lands and also the fact that the men who have gone upon them are trespassers, have come to the conclusion that it is due to the Government of the United States that these lands should be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash.

As I said before, if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] shall be adopted, the action of the Committee on Military Affairs will be rendered nugatory and the whole matter will be left at sea. I hope, therefore, that his amendment will not be adopted, and that the action of the Committee on Military Affairs will be sustained.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It is if under the execution of our land laws a settler has gone on a military reservation whose boundaries are unknown, and there carved out a home for himself and family, does the gentleman think it a wise and generous policy for the Government to oust him from that home?

Mr. McCOOK. I suppose I am as good-natured as the gentleman from Minnesota, and I perhaps would not "oust" him any sooner than he would. But I am not discussing that question; I am discussing the rights of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate upon this subject has expired. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK].

The amendment of Mr. WASHBURN was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "homestead or" in the amendment; and add to the amendment the following:

"And provided, That the rights of actual settlers entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws of the United States, who now occupy in good faith any portion of the land embraced within the said reservations, now abandoned or not used for military purposes, shall not be interfered with, but shall date from the day of their actual settlement thereon; and in perfecting their titles thereto under the homestead laws the time such settlers have occupied and improved their said lands shall be allowed."

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN; and upon a division there were—ayes 18, noes 65.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust the gentleman will not take up time in doing that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon ordering tellers.

The question was taken, and tellers were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN. I raise the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the proper order is to make the point of no quorum before calling for tellers. But the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will withdraw my call for tellers.

So the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN was not agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. I move to amend the pending amendment by adding what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subject, however, to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose," approved July 31, 1882.

Mr. RYAN. If debate were in order, I could explain this amendment so that no one would object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the gentleman say that this is in pursuance of law?

Mr. SPARKS. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order, as it simply proposes to reserve from the operation of the amendment provisions of existing law in regard to training schools for Indian youth.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 20, noes 35.

Mr. RYAN. For the purpose of obtaining tellers, I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. I understand that there is no objection on the part of the Military Committee to this amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. There is objection.

Mr. MCCOOK. I object to it.

Mr. RYAN. I withdraw the call for tellers.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to offer an amendment which merely protects the rights of settlers lawfully acquired in these abandoned reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] that debate is closed. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending amendment the following:

"Provided, however, That Fort Hartsuff military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, be, and the same is hereby, vacated and made subject to entry under the land laws of the United States, reserving priority of entry to any person who has made lawful settlement thereon. Also, that the purchaser or purchasers of Government buildings on said reservation shall have the right to purchase the tract of land upon which said buildings are located, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres, at such price as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SPARKS. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that a point of order does not lie against the amendment. It is simply a modification of the amendment already ruled in order and debated.

Mr. SPARKS. It is identical with the proposition voted down a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. This is limited to a single reservation.

Mr. STEELE. It is certainly special legislation.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to amend the amendment by adding what I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the settlers now residing upon the Fort Rice and that portion of the Fort Randall military reservation east of the Missouri River, in the Territory of Dakota, shall be allowed to enter the land upon which they reside under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Mr. SPARKS. I make a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground?

Mr. SPARKS. That the subject-matter has already been voted upon. It makes no difference that this amendment embraces but a part of the general proposition; the whole proposition has been voted down. An amendment was offered subjecting all these lands to homestead entry; that amendment was rejected. Now I take it an amendment can not come in which proposes the same provision in regard to single reservations. The whole matter has been defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark in reply to the gentleman that because the Committee of the Whole has refused to apply the provision to all the reservations non constat it is unwilling to apply it to one. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "appraised value," near the close of the amendment, the words "which in no case shall be less than $1.25 per acre;" so that the language will read "shall not be sold at less than their appraised value, which in no case shall be less than $25 per acre."

Mr. RYAN. If we are going to sell these lands, that limitation ought to be inserted.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] had better accept this.

Mr. MCCOOK. All right; let it go.

The amendment of Mr. WASHBURN was adopted.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to amend the amendment by adding the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That persons who may at the time of the passage of this act be in possession of any of the lands in Alabama heretofore reserved for military purposes shall be authorized to purchase the same at such valuation as may be put upon the same by the Secretary of the Interior, if such persons shall make application within six months after the passage of this act.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to submit as a further amendment a provision which is usual in regard to all these public sales, and to which I think the committee will not object. I move to add to the amendment a proviso which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That no sale shall take place until notice of the same shall have been published for at least ninety days, once in each week, immediately prior to such sale, in at least two daily newspapers, such papers having a general circulation in the State or Territory.

Mr. MCCOOK. I do not particularly object to that, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let us have a division on my amendment.

Mr. MCCOOK. Strike out the word "daily" and I do not think there will be any objection to the gentleman's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well; I will modify my amendment by striking out the word "daily."

Mr. SPARKS. The question then is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota as modified. Now I wish to say a word on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. WASHBURN's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. CONVERSE. Where is this sale to take place?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to amend by providing for the sale at the reservation where the land is situated.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not think that should be done.

Mr. MCCOOK. The sale is to take place under the general law, and if the checks and guards are not sufficient the committee are willing to accept any additional ones that may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONVERSE. No debate has taken place on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no further debate under the order of the House. Does the gentleman insist upon his amendment?

Mr. CONVERSE. I do not.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the amendment of the committee be reported as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was again read.

Mr. CARPENTER. I offer the following amendment:

That any settler who was in actual occupation of any portion of any one of these reservations prior to the location of the reservation, and continued such occupation to the present time, shall be entitled to locate under the homestead law the land upon which he lives, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. SPARKS. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests the words "provided further" should be prefixed.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the committee will agree to that amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not choose to discuss it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. SPARKS. My point of order is this, and I will do no more than state it: If I understand the reading of the amendment it is nearly identical with the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, offered in the beginning of this discussion, and enables parties located on these reservations to perfect their homesteads. The opposite of that is the object of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois the distinction is this: This limits the application to the homestead settler who came on after its abandonment as a military post.

Mr. VALENTINE. The amendment protects only those who went onto the land prior to its being reserved for military purposes, and who went there under the homestead law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Chair will now hear from the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. SPARKS. I say the amendment offered is, in my judgment, nearly identical with the amendment offered either by the gentleman from Minnesota or the gentleman from Nebraska. It is nearly in the same words. It makes provision for parties locating on these lands, or who were located on them, to perfect their homesteads.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair should have stated that the effect of the amendment is to limit its application to those who had entered upon the lands prior to their becoming military reservations. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 16.

So Mr. CARPENTER'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move, after the word "dollars," in line 817, to insert the following words:

At Fort Niobrara, Nebraska, $24,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not that offered on yesterday?

Mr. VALENTINE. No; $25,000 was offered on last night and this is for $24,000.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was then adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay: For pay of one brigadier-general and ten second lieutenants, $19,500; for pay of one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and three hundred and twenty privates, including payments due on discharge, $200,000; for mileage to officers when traveling on duty under orders, $5,000; for pay of contract surgeons, $3,600; for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters, $7,000; in all, $235,100. And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps, not to exceed eight commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I desire to raise the point of order on the section just read, from line 878 to 892, inclusive. And my point is this: It provides for an appropriation not authorized by law, and is an increase of expenditure. The provision in this section is for the payment of one brigadier-general and ten second lieutenants and others who are already provided for in the regular Army appropriation bill. It is an addition to the amount already appropriated, and which this House deemed sufficient for the service as now constituted. That is all I desire to say on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. HISCOCK. What is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that it makes provision not authorized by law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I deny that as a question of fact.

The CHAIRMAN. What particular paragraph is it to which the gentleman makes the point of order as not authorized by law?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The appropriation made by this House for the support of the Army embraces this provision substantially.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair requests the gentleman to state the clause of this bill which he declares subject to the point of order.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I refer to the whole section, from line 878 to 892, inclusive, the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That the appropriations here made are not provided for by existing law?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. That is one point; and also that it necessarily increases expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The point then, as the Chair understands it, is that there is no existing law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. All I can say in reference to that point of order is, that these officers indicated in this paragraph are the regular Army officers detailed for this purpose, who, according to law, are entitled to the compensation provided in this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is somewhat embarrassed by the indefinite statement of the point of order. We have always appropriated for those employed in the Signal Corps.

Mr. HISCOCK. In reference to this matter I wish to say further, that this is for the purpose of enabling the committee to see precisely the amount of money which is appropriated to the support of the Signal Service; and for that purpose we have eliminated from the Army appropriation bill an amount equal to the amount which has been heretofore expended in the payment of these officers specified in this section and incorporated it here. Every man, every officer, every private indicated in these paragraphs, commencing with "pay," in line 878, has been paid out of the Army appropriation bill, and have been paid for the same services under that bill. This is simply a change in this respect, that they are provided for here instead of in that bill. The committee have simply separated that service so far as it was paid out of the Army appropriation bill by making specific appropriation for it here. And I repeat that there is no man on this list, neither officer nor private, who has not been heretofore paid on the Army bill the amount that is covered by this clause.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am very heartily in sympathy with the purpose of the committee in separating the appropriations for the Signal Bureau from the Army bill; and I will say when we come to discuss an amendment that I shall offer that they have done all that they could to reduce expenditures in this direction, as far as the Signal Bureau is concerned.

But I beg, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the Chair now to the admission made by the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill, that the Army appropriation bill has hitherto provided for every officer and soldier named herein in the regular Army appropriation bill; and this year in that same Army appropriation bill provision has been made for the payment of every brigadier-general, and every lieutenant, and every private in the Army, which would necessarily embrace the payment for the officers assigned to this Signal Corps Service and specifically mentioned in this paragraph of the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from New York to make that assertion, but the reverse.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg the Chair to understand that I took the language of the gentleman from New York to convey a very different idea from what the Chair has suggested. But that there may be no mistake on my part I will ask the gentleman the question: Do I understand that in the Army appropriation bill you excepted the provision for the pay of a brigadier-general?

Mr. HISCOCK. We did.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. And the pay of ten lieutenants detailed for this service?

Mr. HISCOCK. We did.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Specifically?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, not specifically; but we reduced the amount which the various appropriation bills carried to pay these officers and put their pay into this bill in the provision now before us. Further on in the bill a provision will be found which provides that no money may be expended for the service except what is now covered by this bill, with this one exception, that the Secretary of War is authorized to detail certain commissioned officers to this service. We have kept upon the Army bill their pay, because it was preferred to have them upon the rolls of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order upon the statement of the gentleman from New York, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be further heard.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, I made no captious point of order, and upon the statement of the gentleman from New York I withdraw the point.

I now ask to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 888, down to and including the word "law," in line 892, the words:

"And the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed eight commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law."

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I desire to be heard very briefly upon that amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. Before the gentleman proceeds, let me ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Not if it is to come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It must come out of the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg, then, not to be interrupted.

I have recently given considerable attention to the Signal Service. I have studied to some extent its history and organization and the legislation on which it is based. I believe it is a purely civil and wholly unmilitary institution and should be transferred to some civil department of the Government. I gave my reasons for this transfer in a speech which I printed in the RECORD some days ago. I have not time even to epitomize the argument, and it would be of no avail if I should—the bill for that purpose is not under consideration. I also presented at the same time a careful analysis of the estimates which were made for the bureau for the coming fiscal year to show its enormous and extravagant demands. All that I said has been seconded beyond all my expectations by the action of the Appropriations Committee. In the present bill they have cut down the estimates for the Signal Bureau about $600,000, and have reduced the appropriation several hundred thousand dollars below what it was for last year. This reduction has been wisely and judiciously made, and I print herewith a table showing the last year's appropriations, the estimates for this year, and the amount which has been allowed:

*Many of the items which make up this sum are taken from statements of the Chief Signal Officer. It is believed the amount is below the true aggregate of the cost of the bureau.

There remains nothing, therefore, that I can do in this discussion except to try to present such facts as shall tend to secure to the Signal Bureau such an administration as will justify the belief that the large sum we give for the promotion of science and commerce and agriculture will be honestly expended for that purpose. I do not believe this can be expected under the present management of the bureau. I gave some plain reasons for this belief in my printed speech, which were criticised because they had not been enunciated on the floor of the House. In order that there may be no misunderstanding on this subject I have formulated my statements into certain plain and perspicuous propositions which I will now repeat. In this way I will make it clear and plain and easy for General Hazen and his friends.

1. The administration of the Signal Bureau under Howgate was the most corrupt, profligate, and dishonest which has ever existed in the annals of government, civil or military.

2. Howgate's method of operation, among other things, was characterized by the employment of the Signal Service force, and particularly its higher officers, as electioneerers and log-rollers to influence Congress directly by personal importunity and indirectly by securing resolutions and indorsements from boards of trade, chambers of commerce, &c., and procuring puffs from newspapers all over the country, to influence public sentiment and thereby induce Congress to pass legislation for the bureau. In order to show that this was one of Howgate's methods I will print in an appendix a number of letters from that distinguished fugitive to his subordinates.

3. That while apparently expending the full appropriations and apparently keeping up the efficiency of the service, Howgate was stealing hundreds of thousands of dollars. I have had an estimate from an intelligent gentleman that fixes the amount of the larcenies at over $600,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. BELTZHOOVER.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am very much obliged to my colleague.

4. That while these corrupt and felonious operations were in progress in the Signal Bureau Howgate was surrounded by a large number of intelligent, educated, and well-paid Army officers and civil employés, who were either marvelously stupid in not noticing his thefts or criminally culpable in not disclosing them.

5. That no investigation of any kind has ever been made to ascertain and determine the nature, character, and extent of these great frauds; nor has the perpetrator thereof, with all the power of the Government to aid the pursuit, ever been brought to trial. There is some reason for this which some persons around the Signal Bureau somewhere know better than anybody else in the world.

6. That W. B. Hazen, in charge of the Signal Bureau, with a full knowledge of every preceding fact which I have stated, has never brought Howgate to justice, but has kept every single officer, employé, and clerk of Howgate's in as full and complete control of the affairs of the Signal Bureau as they were under Howgate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I can not be interrupted in my five minutes. Let the gentleman take his own time.

Among these it is as clear as sunlight that there are those who are too stupid or too dishonest to be Government employés. In this connection I ask leave to print with these allegations a number of letters from Howgate and a list of the officers and employés of the Signal Service Bureau when Howgate left, and those who are now employed in that bureau.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, is it necessary for me now to object to the gentleman's printing anything but what he says in reference to this subject? I object.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, I will not find fault with any friend of General Hazen for fearing to allow me to print these things; and if the gentleman will not let them be printed I beg to assure him I will not take up the time of this House by reading them.

7. That Hazen not only failed to bring Howgate to justice and retained all his aids and assistants in place, but he adopted precisely the methods of Howgate in using the officers, clerks, and employés of the Signal Bureau to scour the country, under the pretext that they were in the interest of commerce and agriculture, to work up boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and other public institutes, and to importune prominent men and wheedle newspapers into giving careless and improvident indorsements of the Signal Bureau for the purpose of influencing Congress to pass legislation which Hazen then had pending before it.

8. That Hazen not only adopted and followed the methods of Howgate in improperly working up public sentiment in the interest of legislation before Congress, but he enlarged upon this subject by practicing false pretenses upon the War Department to procure the detail of Army officers to be used for that purpose. The official request of Hazen of the War Department for the detail of Story, Powell, Allen, and Kilbourne, and the letters of Hazen himself, and the letters or official reports of three of these officers form one of the most disgraceful chapters in the annals of attempts to lobby through personal legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, with amendments, in which he was directed to request the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just returned from the Senate be printed with the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that copies of the bill with the amendments have been printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CALKINS. I make no objection to an order for the printing of the bill with the amendments, it being my understanding that the House waives no right by consenting to that.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the bill with the Senate amendments be printed, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7193) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] to yield to me that I may request three minutes more.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Not one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield, and will proceed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] asked leave to print, to which I objected. I read his speech printed in the RECORD of the 8th of February in regard to this matter, and, as I can judge of it, he is not entitled on this subject to say anything except what he says with a full responsibility in this House; and I object to his printing anything upon this subject except what he says here. I hope every member of this House has read that speech said to have been delivered here on the 3d day of February. If they have, and if they know anything of the history of this country, they will know that the whole speech is founded on incorrect information; it may be inexcusably incorrect information. This morning, under the pretense of an amendment to this bill, the gentleman makes another assault upon a man that he does not know, a man that I do know.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I do not want to know him.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. You ought to want to. It would help you infinitely if you knew him well and he would recognize you as his friend.

And the burden of his speech this morning is that General Hazen did not prosecute Howgate. Is the gentleman a lawyer? Is he anything by virtue of which he can give information to this House? General Hazen prosecute Howgate! What has he to do with that prosecution, when the prison doors were opened and Howgate went free? It is an unjust charge; it is an unreasonable charge; it is without foundation, and, like the whole tirade of this morning and of the speech which the gentleman has printed, it is founded on false information.

I say to the gentleman that I do know General Hazen, and knowing him I am glad to be acquainted with him. In the speech to which I have referred the gentleman from Pennsylvania charged General Hazen, the chief officer of the Signal Bureau, with being "a general without a battle; a commander without a history." If that gentleman knew the slightest rudiments of the history of his country he would know that General Hazen has been under fire as many times as any officer in our service; that he has been as faithful as any other officer. And yet the gentleman makes that charge.

In connection with it the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that General Hazen "struts upon the stage and wears the muniments of war, shorn of all that makes it honorable and that justifies a soldier's life." Now, I do not know what General Hazen wears; but if he wears "the muniments of war" he wears something that no other general ever wore. [Laughter.] "Wears the muniments of war!" And this gentleman who talks that kind of language is a gentleman instructing this committee what to do about anything. "Muniments of war" and "the muniments of war shorn of all that make it"—what? "Make it honorable or that justifies a soldier's life." My God! what grammar and what dictionary does the gentleman use?

Mr. ATHERTON. Give us the weight of the matter instead of criticising the grammar.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. "Criticising the grammar!" I say that the only foundation for the charge is that General Hazen has not prosecuted Howgate. How can General Hazen as the Chief Signal Officer of the Army prosecute Howgate, or prosecute anybody? That is my answer, and if my colleague from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] wants to know any other facts in regard to him let him inquire.

Mr. ATHERTON. Why are you talking, if not for the instruction of the House?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am talking because I please to talk, as everybody else talks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McKINLEY. I will take the floor and yield my five minutes to my colleague [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. McKINLEY. I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will allow me to yield five minutes to my colleague, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] had ten minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 47.

So (no further count being called for) the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY], who proposes to yield his time to his colleague [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. HISCOCK. I think gentlemen voted on my motion under the impression that I proposed to close debate on this subject. I simply asked that the committee rise for the purpose of getting from the House an order fixing a reasonable time for the debate.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I would ask the gentleman from New York how long he proposes to give us on this side to answer what may be said on the other side?

Mr. HISCOCK. I said a reasonable time; such time as may be satisfactory.

Mr. BERRY. Say thirty minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing to give thirty minutes; perhaps more.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. To be divided so as to allow fifteen minutes on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] asks that debate upon the present paragraph be limited to thirty minutes; fifteen minutes to be allowed to gentlemen on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] to dispose of the fifteen minutes on that side of the House; and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] to dispose of the fifteen minutes on that side.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not want to be deprived of my five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I shall want five minutes myself. I will ask that the time be made thirty-five minutes, and that I be allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the time for debate will be limited to thirty-five minutes, of which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will be allowed five minutes, and the other thirty minutes will be equally divided. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will reserve my five minutes, if I may do so, until I have heard the debate on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] for five minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I would rather reserve my five minutes until later.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate any one to whom he would yield?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I will yield to any gentleman who desires it.

The CHAIRMAN (after a pause). If nobody on that side of the House desires the floor for five minutes, the Chair will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] to whom he will yield for five minutes?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS].

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to direct what few remarks I may make upon the proposition before the committee to two phases of it. I do not care to enter into any discussion with reference to General Hazen personally, except to say that those of us who knew him in the army know him to be a very brave soldier and a very honorable man. That is as far as I care to enter on any discussion with reference to him.

But with reference to the charge that the officers of this bureau were sent around improperly for the purpose of working up a sentiment in favor of the Signal Corps I wish to submit a statement of fact which is well known, or ought to be well known, to every member of the House. There are five officers now in the Signal Corps who are competent to and do make the reports for the Weather Bureau. They have been in that corps almost since its organization. They have made the business of the corps a careful and painstaking study, and have thus become qualified to make these weather reports for the country. These are the captains and lieutenants in that corps, and the provision for these the amendment now pending proposes to strike out.

In the course of the inspection which some of these officers were called upon to make in the Signal Service, they did stop to see some of the boards of trade in the country. Why? For any improper purpose? No. They were endeavoring to have this branch of the service organized into a separate corps, and they called the attention of the boards of trade and of other people interested to their work, which they had a right to do; they asked attention to the great service they were performing.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman think it is proper that the money of the Government should be spent by officers traversing this country for the purpose of getting up public sentiment to influence legislation?

Mr. CALKINS. If anything of that kind was done it would not be proper. But there was not anything of the kind done; and when it is charged that there was the charge, in my judgment, is without foundation. The fact is that in the course of the discharge of their duties some of the officers did stop and call the attention of the different boards of trade to the value of the services performed by this corps and the measure which they thought would make it more efficient. They did as everybody else does when anything is wanted at the hands of Congress. They asked for it. If the corps had been useful that fact should be made known, and there was no harm in it. That is all the foundation for the charge of spending Government money.

Mr. Chairman, for myself I do not care whether the Signal Corps remains a part of the Army or be instituted into a civil branch. I rather incline to the latter plan. But the fact remains that if this amendment be adopted the only men competent to make the reports now recognized as so valuable by the country will be sent from this Signal Corps to their respective regiments, and the corps will be stripped of its usefulness.

One word further. So far as regards the attack which has been made upon the lieutenants, and I believe one of the captains in that corps, I say that I do not know any of these gentlemen except one; and as to him I know there is not a more honorable gentleman in the whole country. I am glad to bear testimony to his high character and worth.

Mr. WILSON. Who is he?

Mr. STEELE. Lieutenant Allen.

Mr. CALKINS. If I have any time remaining I yield it to my friend from Maryland [Mr. URNER].

Mr. URNER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to throw any light on this subject by debate; but I hold in my hand and will ask the Clerk to read a paper from the president and secretary of the Maryland Academy of Science. These are gentlemen of the highest character for integrity and scientific knowledge.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARYLAND ACADEMY OF SCIENCE,
Baltimore, Md., February 19, 1883.

Considering the concerted attacks against the military organization of the Signal Service, indicated by certain bills lately presented in Congress urging the transfer of its meteorological work to the Interior Department, as decidedly injurious to its efficiency and unmindful of the laborious efforts of those who have brought the service to its present well-recognized condition of excellence, we, the members of the Maryland Academy of Science, desire to respectfully submit the following as our unbiased judgment:

1. That the Signal Service has, in the field of practical and scientific meteorology, made rapid progress and achieved results of the highest importance.

2. That it is hardly possible in a civil organization, even under the most favorable circumstances, to successfully perform the peculiarly exacting duties consequent upon the multiform and extended operations incident to the observation and report of storms over a vast extent of country such as the United States present.

3. That the short record of the past twelve years, compassing the existence of the Signal Service, presents in its achievements results the influence of which have called forth the appreciation not only of this country but that of European nations. Progress is necessarily slow in a science where the factors entering each determination suffer such an endless variety of change as in the field of meteorological research.

4. In view of the above statements we take pleasure and much earnestness, as a scientific body engaged in allied work, to urge that Congress refrain from passing any measure that will either destroy or seriously impair the present existence of the Signal Service.

Approved unanimously.

P. R. UHLER,
President Maryland Academy of Science.
EDWARD STABLER, JR.,
Recording Secretary Maryland Academy of Science.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire how much time the other side has consumed?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. POUND). Seven minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. And I still have my fifteen minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Now, I desire to inquire whether, having the affirmative of the proposition to strike out, I am not entitled to close the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. That must be a matter of agreement, the Chair presumes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I do not claim it by virtue of any agreement, but as a right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole is now proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I desire to reserve ten minutes of my time to conclude and to answer gentlemen who may speak on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, as the Chair understands, the gentleman will be permitted to speak only five minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. We are proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. But I have control of fifteen minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There will be no objection to the gentleman speaking ten minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. In conclusion?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Now.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. In conclusion.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I would object to that.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I ask the ruling of the Chair on the question. I have moved an amendment; the debate is limited to one half hour, fifteen minutes on each side; the other side has occupied the first five minutes, and in alternating I shall be entitled to the last five minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There can be only five minutes for each speech.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, each speech must, in conformity to the rule, be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg to differ with the Chair on that point. Nobody on this side of the House desires to speak on this question but myself, and therefore there is nobody else to consume the time which belongs to this side.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman's time is being consumed now.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The discussion of the point of order can not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that each speech must be limited to five minutes under the rule.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I can yield the floor to another gentleman who can yield it back to me. I will now consume five minutes of my time and reserve five miutes for reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already consumed two minutes of his time. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. That can not be taken out of my time, as it was in reference to the order of business. I do not want any unfairness in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I will resume the point at which I was interrupted by the expiration of my time.

9. That Hazen has by vicious rider legislation run up the expenditures of this bureau until he asks double what it cost under Howgate, without any apparent increase in the efficiency of the service. He demands this year over $1,555,000, and accompanies his demands by precisely the same recitals of the great exigencies and importance of the service, as Howgate did. He follows Howgate in this respect. The Appropriations Committee have decided that there shall be no surplus for the further pursuit of Howgate's methods in spending the public funds.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I say it is less than what Howgate spent.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg the gentleman not to interrupt. If he has anything to say let him say it in his own time.

10. That Hazen's petty frauds are even more bold and infamous than Howgate's. His very latest act is to issue a foolish compilation embracing about ninety-three pages and to charge the men in his service $2.50 for the book, which costs him only 27 cents, and to add tyranny to the petty imposition he exacts of each poor subordinate the onerous task of committing the whole thing to memory. Who gets the difference between 27 cents and $2.50? Belknap's post-traderships are not a circumstance to this little private speculation of Hazen.

11. Some of the other petty frauds of Hazen, I am credibly informed, are: paying 2,000 francs to publish a fulsome puff of his Department in a journal called Nature, in France; the printing of all these innumerable resolutions and puffs and editorials, &c., at the expense of the Government and mailing them at the expense of the Government in penalty envelopes; the employment of a paid editor at $1,500 a year, whose sole business is to varnish up the "shop" resolutions, &c., which are issued from the bureau; the sending of his favorites to college in America and Europe at great expense.

12. That Hazen was found, practically and morally, guilty by the Hazen-Stanley court-martial, composed of those distinguished officers, Hancock, Augur, Pope, King, Vogdes, and Brown, of base cowardice; and the records of the War Department and the testimony of prominent and reliable persons taken before a tribunal under oath and on file prove that he was also guilty of fraud and dishonorable conduct as a soldier and is therefore not qualified by his standing and character in the Army to be the chief of the important military bureau which he now controls.

The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph of February 20, 1883, says:

In answer to this, Secretary Lincoln expresses surprise and regret that General Hazen should feel that justice could not be done him by means of a court of inquiry and intimates very plainly that if the Chief Signal Officer does not ask for such a court he, the Secretary, will lay the matter before the President and will ask him to appoint a court. At the same time General Hazen in reality has excellent reason for his evident dislike of military courts. His reputation was very far indeed from being bettered by the proceedings and findings of the last military court before which he figured, and the results of his controversy with General Stanley were so decidedly damaging as to make his nomination by the President and his confirmation by the Senate for the office which he now holds a scandalous performance on the part of all concerned in it. It is no wonder, therefore, that General Hazen should prefer to be investigated by a committee of Senators rather than by a military court. The chances of his having his preference, however, are apparently not particularly brilliant.

13. That Hazen's management of the Signal Bureau has not only been profligate and extravagant almost beyond parallel, but it has been utterly without adequate results either to science or commerce and agriculture. It has not only not given any contribution to meteorology either by discovery or treatise, but it has not added to the knowledge of storms and hurricanes so as to help commerce.

For these reasons, sustained by what I believe to be clear and convincing testimony, I do not think that this House should hand over a million of dollars for disbursement to such an administration.

I now reserve the balance of my time for reply.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word, and will give three minutes of my time to my colleague [Mr. CONVERSE].

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take any part in any personal controversy. My acquaintance with General Hazen is limited, but I deem it a duty to make some suggestions of what I know and have learned of his public character.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] speaks of General Hazen's cowardice. A man who carries a musket-ball in his body received in honorable warfare ought not to be lightly spoken of. In General Hazen's case the ball that broke his wrist passed through his body and lodged near his spine, causing a wound apparently as dangerous as that of the late President. Yet he survives and is arraigned and traduced by a man who never saw a battle.

Why, if I wanted proof I could appeal to the gallant General WHEELER who has a seat on this floor. On more than a dozen hotly-contested battlefields he could, and if called on would, testify to the gallantry and bravery of General Hazen, who stood in his front and led the opposing forces. I could appeal to his war record as it stands in the War Office to-day, written by other hands, for bravery, energy, long and active service. That record will show that he has few equals in the Army.

What is the meaning of all this clamor and vilification of General Hazen, who is not here to answer for himself? I can tell gentlemen what it means. It is the remnant of a quarrel that began years ago when a colonel of the Army was brought before an investigating committee of this House and dared to give testimony in relation to a matter which convulsed the whole country and threw from the highest military seat in the United States, save one, the man who occupied it. That quarrel has been continued from that hour to this. General Hazen has never seen a day of peace or of rest from the time he gave that testimony before the investigating committee of this House. He has been pursued in a most disreputable manner by vilification, insult, and falsehood.

And I believe for that reason, on the recommendation of General Garfield, he was by President Hayes removed from the immediate charge of the Army and put in the place which he now occupies, where it was supposed he would have some rest and some peace and comparative independence. But how has it been since the change? Spies have surrounded him; they have gone into his very office. Scavengers have been employed to go into his spittoons and into his waste-basket to pick out and paste together even the remnants of paper which have been used in lighting his cigars to see if something could not be discovered against him. The eavesdropper, the common informer or spy maintains an honorable character in comparison to such creatures.

A great deal of this stuff that has been printed and scattered broadcast to the country against General Hazen comes from no more honorable source than I have indicated. This work has been done largely by persons who have been themselves under charges.

A single word more, Mr. Chairman. So far as the Signal Service is concerned that service ought not certainly to suffer on account of anybody's ancient personal quarrels. If General Hazen has not honestly administered the moneys which were appropriated for the support of that service then gentlemen should ask an investigation. Why do they not do it? Why do they not ascertain, as in honor bound to do, after using such terms as they have, whether he has spent a dollar improperly? If he has done so let him be properly punished for it. But give him a chance to vindicate himself from the foul aspersions cast upon him. Scandalous charges, without at least an effort to investigate and an opportunity given for him to respond, ought not to be indulged in here, because General Hazen can not be heard in response to them upon this floor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I would prefer to hear from the other side, and reserve my ten minutes until after they conclude.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I think, Mr. Chairman, that he is bound to use his five minutes now, and I insist upon it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Then I will use five minutes of my time now and will still have five minutes to reply to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain this House to criticise the reply of the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat to the remarks which I have already submitted. It is said to be the best defense of some lawyers when they have a very bad case to abuse the counsel on the other side. The information upon which I based the charges made in my speech, as printed in the RECORD of this House, is derived largely from record and from documentary evidence, and from evidence and information which I have every reason to believe to be true. The justness of the conclusions that I drew from the letters and other matters and from the record evidence in this case every gentleman can test for himself by an examination of my speech and the appendix. When I charged that General Hazen had been guilty of cowardice I did not call to testify a gentleman like General WHEELER, who was referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, who is a noble and gallant man, but certainly knows more about the conduct of General Hazen's troops in the fight than he knows about the courage of General Hazen himself.

I adduced the record of the Hazen-Stanley court-martial, on which I based my statement. I found that that distinguished court-martial had been presided over by an officer of the high rank, character, and standing of General Hancock, and was composed of the most distinguished and gallant officers of the Army, who, after full investigation, although not technically, yet practically and morally, found General Hazen guilty of cowardice at the battle of Shiloh.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is now undertaking to cite the findings of that court-martial?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am speaking from my understanding of the record and with it before me.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I say, in response, that there is no such record.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am speaking from the record itself.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And I claim that there is no such record.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I printed it in my former speech. And the gentleman who charged General Hazen with cowardice is well known in the Army of the United States as a man against whom cowardice has never been even insinuated—I refer to General David S. Stanley, one of the fighting officers of our Army. And I beg gentlemen to remember that the records of that court-martial are open to the inspection of every living man. Before that court General Philip Sheridan and other witnesses charged General Hazen, and swore to it, with taking two pieces of artillery at the battle of Missionary Ridge and keeping them until they were taken from him by force; and General Hazen sat under that charge and in the face of that court as mute as the grave.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Two pieces of artillery captured from the rebels, and I suppose he would not give them back. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the face of the finding of such a court as that, and in the face of such testimony as that, I repeat that the conclusion of every intelligent man must be the same. The finding of that court-martial must be accepted as true. There is an adjudication on the subject and no one can fairly deny that General Hazen was guilty of the charges alleged against him.

Now, a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, the colleague of the preceding gentleman. Does he mean to say that either that distinguished and gallant officer, General Hancock, who presided at that court-martial, or the General of the Army, or the President of the United States, or the Secretary of War, are in a conspiracy to break down a poor little colonel of infantry because he made the charges which brought Belknap to trial?

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him now?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Certainly.

Mr. CONVERSE. Then I will say in response to the gentleman that I have never made such charges as he repeats here; but I do believe that men have been set upon General Hazen's track to use foul words and foul means in order to drive him into a fight and get into a difficulty so that they might kill him.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, so far as the gentleman's beliefs are concerned he is welcome to them. In the investigation I know no man living but one sergeant, who was formerly at General Hazen's headquarters; no one. I have had no consultation with the Secretary of War or any of the gentlemen that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] insinuates I have conferred with.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania is he not in consultation with a man who has been discharged and was under arrest? And does he not get all these facts from that man who lives in his neighborhood?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am glad to answer the gentleman's question. I got some of the information from a gentleman who has been in General Hazen's employ and whom he arrested and incarcerated in a dungeon for twenty-six days on the bare suspicion that he had criticised his superior. [Here the hammer fell.] I reserve the remaining five minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield five minutes, the balance of my time, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is recognized.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I had anticipated that some assault would be made on the Signal Service; but I little dreamed it would take this form. I little thought that the head of that service, who has struck more blows for his country than his assailants have spoken words, would be subjected to such gross assaults as these.

The quality of the service has not been assailed. That it is needful to the country is not questioned. But a gentleman rises in his place here and testifies, not in the interest of the public, whose servant he is, but in the interest of a clan and faction who have dedicated themselves to the work of hunting down the superintendent of the Signal Service. If it be true, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has asserted, that General Hazen has been guilty of peculation, he has been derelict in the discharge of his duty in not rising in his place before this House and the country and presenting formal charges against that officer, and thus afford him an opportunity to make answer and be judged according to what he has done or omitted to do, and not solely in the light of the ex parte statements against him made in a place, at a time, and in a manner which precludes him from making defense.

The value of the testimony of a witness depends very largely upon whether he testifies solely in the interest of truth or whether he is enlisted in an uncharitable service which has its promptings in malice and malignant hate of the man against whom the testimony is borne. I assert that my friend from Pennsylvania places himself in no enviable light before this House and before the country in speaking of a gallant officer, who is not here to answer for himself, as if he were a common thief instead of presenting to the House and to the country charges properly formulated and ask to have them investigated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as General Hazen's bearing as a soldier is concerned, there are men around me and men who fought upon the other side against him who are here to bear testimony to his gallantry, which was conspicuous. The gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about the larceny of two cannon. Does he know the history of that of which he bears witness? It happened in a certain engagement during the late war that under the gallant leadership of General Hazen eighteen cannon were captured from the enemy. It occurred that a division fighting by the side of General Hazen's claimed that they were entitled to the honor of having captured two of the eighteen cannon, and about this a dispute arose, Hazen insisting that his troops had made that capture. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania is prompted to say that in making that claim General Hazen was guilty of the larceny of two cannon.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is the whole of that transaction. That is all there is of it. And more than that, I am just reminded by a gentleman who was in the battle where those cannon were captured, an officer who bore himself with admirable courage, an officer who did not fight upon our side, who is present upon this floor, that he can testify to the gallant bearing of General Hazen on that occasion.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That was at Missionary Ridge.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, at Missionary Ridge. And I wonder that my friend from Pennsylvania, under the guise of an amendment which would ruin a meritorious service, avails himself of the opportunity which that amendment affords to assault that man. It is worthy of note that although he has been pregnant with this information for a long time he has hesitated until the last hour, until the sun is about to set on this Congress, before he makes the assault, and then under the license granted to him by this House to publish some remarks. He does not stand on this floor and proclaim these charges, but publishes them in the RECORD and sends them broadcast to the country.

I hold that common fairness to this service requires that if the gentleman has aught to charge against the officer in charge of it he shall put it in tangible shape or present it to the House in such manner as to enable the officer to make his defense. If he has been guilty of any misconduct I shall not defend him.

I wish to say in conclusion the amendment offered is simply to ruin the service; not because the service is not worthy; not because it is not needed; but because of the gross assaults upon General Hazen of a gang of malcontents one of whom while a member of the Signal Corps deemed it dishonor to march with his troop down Pennsylvania avenue to attend the inauguration of James A. Garfield, and having refused was commanded by the officer in charge to take his place in the ranks. For that he became disgruntled, and is now one of the sources from whence the gentleman from Pennsylvania is filled with pent-up indignation. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KASSON). The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is now entitled to five minutes.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Have I five minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes of the time allowed for debate has already been exhausted, and the remaining five minutes is assigned to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg the pardon of the Chair; I understood I was to have five minutes to close the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that by unanimous consent the committee agreed that the entire debate upon the pending paragraph should be limited to thirty-five minutes. Of that time thirty minutes have been consumed.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. While the present occupant of the chair was out of it for a few moments, some five or ten minutes' time was consumed in desultory debate on a point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to state that but ten minutes of the fifteen minutes allowed to my colleague [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] have been occupied by him, and he still has five minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the Chair will take it as the understanding of the committee that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] be allowed five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I do not believe that gentlemen have apprehended clearly the witten allegations which I read in their hearing. I did not charge General Hazen with cowardice any further than is justified by the Hazen-Stanley court-martial, which I have published in full in the appendix to my former speech on this subject.

I sought the floor to-day to enunciate the propositions contained in my printed speech, partly for the reason that I had been criticised because I published it without having spoken it. Sir, I never published anything in my life, and do not believe I ever will, that I am afraid to utter in the face of the whole earth.

General Hazen is not unrepresented here on this floor to-day. On the contrary, I, who got this information only two or three days before the 8th of the present month, have been myself confined to the investigation unaided and alone, and not a single gentleman on this floor has been apprised of the facts so as to aid me now, except perhaps some one who may have done me the honor to read my speech, as the gentleman from Ohio seems to have done. General Hazen is not now unrepresented here, but he is well represented, ably represented, by four or five of the oldest members of the House.

As to the declaration of the gentleman from Ohio that the Hazen-Stanley court-martial does not sustain what I said about General Sheridan's testimony, I beg to say to him that I am not mistaken, but if he thinks otherwise let him get the testimony and print it. I have given it as I believe it to be on the best information which any man could have.

I did not hesitate until the expiring hours of the session to make these charges. I made them at the very earliest moment that I believed I was justified in making them. I printed my speech because I anticipated just this contingency: that we would have no time to make an elaborate presentation of anything in the expiring hours of Congress.

The very day after my speech was printed I called on the Secretary of War for the records, and they were delivered to me only yesterday. I intended to present a resolution for an investigation, and if we had time enough remaining of this Congress to give the remotest hope on earth of a full and fair investigation by Congress, the gentleman can be assured that he would have investigation to his utmost satisfaction.

When I saw the Secretary of War he said that a correspondence was pending between him and General Hazen, and he begged me to desist for a day or two. That correspondence is before the country. Why does not General Hazen ask for a court of inquiry or court-martial? This gallant man, who confines one of his subordinates in a dungeon, a poor, consumptive, dying man, a man who perhaps will never see the apple-blossoms again; this man General Hazen put in a dungeon under military law on suspicion——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What is his name!

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. His name is Van Heusen—put him in a dungeon on suspicion of criticising General Hazen, his superior officer. And yet this gallant man, that thus incarcerated a poor subordinate under military law, does not dare to ask for a military trial of himself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YOUNG. I was going to ask the gentleman a question, but did not want to interrupt him.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am much obliged to the gentleman, and will answer him if I have time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 347) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Godlove S. Orth;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 349) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, of Illinois; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 356) accepting the invitation of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to attend the inauguration of the statue of Joseph Henry.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. 2486) to authorize the requirement of an oath as to age from recruits for the Navy before enlistment, and in the case of minors from their parents or guardians, and to empower certain officers of the Navy to administer such oaths; and Joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, New York.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. None. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entitled to the remaining five minutes allowed for debate upon the pending paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope I may be pardoned for calling the attention of the committee to the real question now before it. The vice in the Signal Corps, if there be a vice there, is not and has not been owing to the management of General Hazen. It has consisted in this alone, that for the last six years at least, and I do not know but for all the time this service has existed, Congress has been accustomed to make appropriations in gross for that service. The result of that has been that year after year the service has reached out to grasp power and to grasp jurisdiction.

What is true of this service is true of many others in the Departments here at Washington? So far as General Hazen is concerned, while I have devoted very much time to the investigation of the management of his office, I must certainly bear witness to the fact that there is nothing I can criticise in its management except that he, like his predecessor, has reached out for power in order to extend this service beyond the limits intended, as I believe, by Congress.

We have been accustomed year after year to give a million dollars and upward to this service. In order to popularize it, it has invoked the aid of boards of trade and institutions of learning, which, I believe, gave encouragement to it thoughtlessly. Yet this was not criminal on the part of the gentleman who had charge of this service or any of those associated with him. It was the business of Congress to make specific appropriations for the service, and to see precisely how the money was expended.

The Committee on Appropriations has gone carefully over this question this year. Last year it attempted to possess itself of all the facts in connection with this service; but it failed for want of time. We have carefully eliminated from the service the performance of that work which in our judgment does not properly belong to this bureau. We have to a large extent circumscribed the jurisdiction which this bureau has heretofore assumed; but I believe under the organization which we have perfected in this bill it will do a work which the country requires to be done and that there will be no abuse either of power or of the public money.

I am opposed to transferring this bureau to any other branch of the Government. I believe that in many respects it is best that the bureau should be under military discipline. I believe also that General Hazen or any other officer who may be detailed to take charge of the service can do quite as good work, so far as the executive branch of it is concerned, as any scientist who might be placed at the head of it. As a matter of course, in this service as in others the officer in charge has been compelled to surround himself with men who are proficient in the scientific knowledge which is called for in the work of the bureau; and this is all that is necessary for the proper execution of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate as limited by order of the committee has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 888 to 892 the following:
"And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed eight commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, He may in his discretion make a further detail of officers for service in the Arctic Sea expedition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: For horse and mule shoes, and so forth, $500; blacksmiths' tools, and so forth, $550; veterinary supplies, $300; fire apparatus, disinfectants, and so forth, $125; in all, $1,475.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I move to amend by striking out the words "and so forth" wherever they occur in this paragraph. I beg to be heard one moment in support of this motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I consent that those words be struck out.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The courts have held that they amount to nothing at all; and there is no use of their being in the paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. The estimates came in in this form; that is the reason the language found its way into the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the phrase "and so forth" will be struck out in the two places where it occurs. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For commutation of quarters to enlisted men of the Signal Corps, $84,108; work and supplies at Fort Meyer, Virginia, $1,800; in all $85,908.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For extra-duty pay to 220 enlisted men, at 35 cents per day, $28,105.

I understand that this pay has always been allowed heretofore——

Mr. SPRINGER. I make a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. This has always been allowed.

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not make any difference; I make the point of order it is not authorized by law. It is extra pay, and is so stated on the face of the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt that the point of order is well taken. I will state the facts as I understand them in reference to this extra-duty pay. It has been the custom—I believe without warrant of law—to give to these men what is called extra-duty pay, the amount being fixed arbitrarily and not by statute, and the payments being made to whomever the officers please. We declined to insert a provision of this kind in the bill. I do not believe there is any law which warrants it.

Mr. BAYNE. The Army law of last year goes on to recite among other items for which appropriations are made, "extra-duty pay to enlisted men in hospitals" and for paymaster's clerks and veterinary surgeons, &c.

The difficulty is that heretofore Congress has made appropriations in the Army appropriation bill for the Signal Service, and the particular objects to which the appropriations were to be applied have not been indicated. They are indicated in the present bill. It has been the practice heretofore to authorize this appropriation. It has been the practice to pay for the extra service to these employés. I am told by some of them that unless this appropriation is made some of the best will have to resign and leave their positions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who makes the point of order to the act of June 20, 1879, which seems permanent in its character. It is there provided that Signal Service men shall not receive extra-duty pay unless specially directed by the Secretary of War. This would imply they might receive extra-duty pay when so authorized by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Secretary of War could not make payment beyond the appropriation for the purpose, and if there is no appropriation to pay these men, of course we may be assured there is no law for it.

Mr. BAYNE. The authority is given by the previous law, and this merely proposes to make an appropriation to pay in accordance with that law.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Secretary of War pays out of the existing appropriation and by the law he is not authorized to grant this extra pay beyond appropriations for that purpose. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania can authorize the Secretary to pay these extra-duty men but it can not be done otherwise. It is in violation of existing law; it increases the amount covered by this bill; it increases the salaries of those who are now in the service at a fixed salary. On all these grounds I insist the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion it is authorized by law under the permanent provision of the act of 1879, which implies authority in the Secretary of War to allow extra-duty pay. Of course he would not do it unless the money was appropriated for it. The question is whether there is existing law authorizing the object for which this money is appropriated. If so, it comes within the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair must observe the amount appropriated for the Army and the Signal Corps are here made as prescribed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is whether there is previous authority of law for the appropriation.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no authority within the existing appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary of War can not pay the Army their regular pay unless the money is appropriated therefor. The question here is, Is there authority of law authorizing this extra-duty pay?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Yes; there is authority for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question is whether the Secretary has authority to make this expenditure unless the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is passed. Unless that is done the Chair knows he could not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair also knows that he could not pay anything to the regular Army officers unless there was an appropriation to authorize him to do so. If there is provision of law for it it is in order, if not it is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no law authorizing the expenditure of this particular money covered by this amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold under the authority already referred to that there is authority of law for it, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am told by some persons who are employed in this service that the present pay is $57 a month, and that if this amendment should pass it would be about $67 a month, or an aggregate amount of $804 a year.

These men to whom this extra-duty pay is given do important work. They are telegraphers. One has charge of telegraphic matters going from the city of Washington, and others at other points do similar work. They are highly educated men, who do to-day very valuable work. I fear the Committee on Appropriations, when it seeks to retrench in every way it can, will make a mistake if it tries to reduce the wages of men of this kind, as such men will either be driven out of the service or prevented from living comfortably on their pay.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said a short while ago during the progress of his speech it was not required that the Chief of the Signal Service should be versed in the technicalities and science of the work over which he presides, because he had competent and capable subordinates under him. He draws a large salary, and it is for these subordinates I now appeal that they may receive this extra-duty pay.

I think that if the chief of the bureau does not understand his business, does not know all of the details of the business, and is unfamiliar with the scientific operations conducted and executed by those under him, it would be a gross injustice to pay him a very much larger salary for exercising merely a military discipline over those subordinates who are under him than it would be to cut down their pay from $804 a year to the rate of $57 a month as proposed by this bill. I do not think it is right to do so; and I believe it is but due to these men who render this service which is so efficient and valuable to the Government that they should be paid an amount equal to the high order of work which they are called upon to perform. I think that this bureau ought to be under the charge of some scientific expert who has made a study of the subject; and I am amazed at my friend from New York who submits the proposition here for the adoption of this committee that because the subordinates in that Department know their business, it makes very little difference whether the chief of the bureau knows anything about it or not. I entirely disagree with him in that conclusion. I think the chief ought to be the best qualified man in the whole service; and he ought not to receive high compensation for performing a duty for which he is not fit or qualified by education. I believe that is a species of favoritism, and I have no doubt that in many instances incompetent men have been placed in high positions in the service of this Government, not because they are qualified to perform the duties of the offices to which they are assigned, but because of the fact that political pressure has been brought to bear in their behalf, in which cases subordinates are required to do the work while the chief gets the pay.

Now let us vote and declare by our votes here that the subordinates who are required to do the work shall receive something like an adequate compensation for their services, especially in view of the fact that these men at the head of it receive some seven or eight thousand dollars a year, I believe, simply because they are placed at the head of the department or bureau, when the men who confessedly do the scientific work receive only about $600 under the provisions of this bill. I hope, therefore, my friend from New York will not object to this amendment. It is a duty which we owe to a deserving class and we ought to vote it in. I do not think it is fair or just that discrimination should be made against these men and in favor of the heads of these bureaus.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, what I said and to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called the attention of the committee was that in a service of this kind executive talent, executive ability, is of about as much consequence as scientific education or technical ability in that direction. This Signal Service is an army in itself. It is organized as an army; it is organized entirely upon the plan and theory of a military service. I would hesitate a long time before I would turn the service over to a scientist, no matter how able he might be in that regard, until I had some positive assurance of his executive ability. Without that his scientific attainments would be of very little value in the management of that bureau.

Now, the Book of Estimates came in carrying, I believe, $1,200,000 for this service. I think for the first time the estimates were given in detail. The service has been accustomed to cost the Government a million to a million and two hundred thousand dollars during the last four or five years. Last year we reduced it to about a million of dollars. I find in the Book of Estimates this item, not for the number of men as I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicates, but for two hundred and twenty men——

Mr. BAYNE. That is my amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Book of Estimates provides:

The extra-duty pay to two hundred and twenty enlisted men, at 35 cents per day, $28,105.

Mr. BAYNE. That is the identical amendment I have offered.

Mr. HISCOCK. We struck that estimate out and refused to put it into the bill. Now I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he knows how much these men are getting to-day?

Mr. BAYNE. I know what they tell me they are getting.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me say to the gentleman that they are getting precisely the same amount that enlisted men get under the War Department and which in the past they have been accustomed to receive. But these were not entitled to any extra-duty pay at all. They get commutation of quarters and they get their regular pay. They get allowance for rations, or commutations of rations, until it runs their pay up to an ample compensation for the service, as I believe. The Committee on Appropriations in preparing this bill did not intend to cripple or pinch these men in any manner. We made what we believed to be a fair allowance for the service. I may be permitted to say that I sat down with a not illiberal man, and in no illiberal spirit myself we made up this part of the bill, and I do not believe we should change the compensation or allowance that we have fixed by the bill in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 955 to 965, as follows:

Medical department: For medical attendance and medicines for officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps, $3,500; medical attendance and medicines for officers doing duty in connection with the Signal Service, $100; medical and hospital supplies at Fort Meyer, Virginia, $900; medicines furnished to officers and enlisted men from purveying depots and Army dispensaries, $1,000; materials for repairs of hospitals at Fort Meyer, Virginia, $200; in all, $5,700.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I move to amend by striking out of this paragraph the words in lines 955 to 959, from the word "department" to the word "dollars," namely, these words:

For medical attendance and medicines for officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps, $3,500; medical attendance and medicines for officers doing duty in connection with the Signal Service, $100.

I beg to be heard for one moment. This is not a captious amendment. I think the appropriation in the clause I move to strike out is a duplication of an appropriation in lines 884 and 885, where an appropriation is made—

For pay of contract surgeons, $3,600.

Now, when you come to the lines I have moved to strike out you give $3,500 and $100, making $3,600, exactly the same amount. And there is nothing in the bill in any way to indicate they are not for exactly the same thing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not profess to remember everything with critical accuracy. But as I remember the item to which the gentleman has called attention, it is to cover the pay of surgeons who were on the Arctic expedition; and this is to cover the force which is located here in Washington. And I am quite sure I am right about it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. HISCOCK. I know I am right about it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I call his attention to the fact that the committee have been very careful and explicit in making the appropriations. And I do not want to make any captious exceptions; but if it is for the medical attendance in the Arctic expedition, I think he should go back and insert the words "for the Arctic expedition." For the difficulty with the appropriation heretofore has been that it has been in bulk, and the Chief Signal Officer has had a fund of hundreds of thousands of dollars that he could appropriate at his discretion. And the object of the committee is to limit him so as to compel him to pay the amounts to the specific objects for which they were appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations had better examine that a little.

Mr. HISCOCK. I know I am right about it. I have no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] offer an amendment?

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir. I rose simply to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that on page 37 of the bill he will find the item, "for pay of contract surgeons, $3,600," in addition to the amount to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] has called attention. Then here on page 40 is an appropriation for contract surgeons again. Now, may not the gentleman from New York be mistaken? Why repeat it twice?

Mr. HISCOCK. What lines does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. ATKINS. I refer to lines 884 and 885 on page 37 of the bill:

For pay of contract surgeons, $3,600.

Now, on page 40 of the bill are the lines to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred:

For medical attendance and medicines for officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps, $3,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. Where else do you find it?

Mr. ATKINS. Then it is to be found again at the point alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is what he alluded to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania applied his amendment to the lines on page 40 of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. There are only two items in this connection. I have no doubt I am right in my recollection.

The question being taken on Mr. BELTZHOOVER'S amendment it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 966 to 974, as follows:

And there shall not be expended from any moneys appropriated by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes," approved ——, 1883, any money for the support of the Signal Service or Corps except the pay of such commissioned officers as the Secretary of War may detail for service in that corps.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask permission to recur to the paragraph commencing on line 802, appropriating for the building for the State, War, and Navy Departments, that I may offer an amendment at that point.

There was no objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 807 insert the following:
"And so much of the appropriation for furniture, carpets, file-cases, and shelving for the north wing of said building contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 7, 1882, as shall remain unexpended June 30, 1883, is hereby reappropriated for the same purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from New York whether in line 970 the blank should not be filled by inserting the date of the law?

Mr. HISCOCK. The act there referred to has not become a law yet; that is the trouble. It is an appropriation bill which has passed this House but has not yet become a law; and we can not fill the blank in this bill until the Army appropriation bill has become a law.

The Clerk read lines 976 to 980, as follows:

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, $100,000, not more than $1,000 of which shall be used in constructing a wharf at Chalmette national cemetery, New Orleans.

Mr. DIBRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 980 insert the following:
"To complete the road from the city of Chattanooga to the national cemetery near that city, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish said road."

Mr. DIBRELL. The officer in charge estimated it would take $15,000 to finish the road. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated. The committee last session refused to give more than $5,000. The work has gone on and the road is not completed. I am told it will take at least $2,500 to finish it. I think there is not a gentleman on the floor who would vote against a proposition of that kind. There are 15,000 soldiers buried there.

Mr. HISCOCK. What communication does the gentleman from Tennessee have to show that $2,500 more is required?

Mr. DIBRELL. From citizens of the city.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no estimate from the War Department for anything of the kind.

Mr. DIBRELL. In the amendment are the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." If the whole of the amount is not necessary it will not be expended. It will do no hurt to make the appropriation. We want the road finished. Friends of the dead buried there want to visit the cemetery and it is almost impossible to get there until this appropriation is made to finish the road.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do protest against moneys being put on the bill to be expended on public highways beyond the limit of law already fixed, without any estimate from a Department, or from any officer of the Government that any such sum of money, or any sum of money, is required.

Mr. DIBRELL. In answer to that I want to say to the gentleman that he himself assured me at the last session of Congress, when the $5,000 was appropriated for this purpose, that that was all we would ever get. I notified the authorities of Chattanooga that they could not expect any more. But the officer in charge of the work has gone on and expended the $5,000, and the Board of Trade of Chattanooga has asked me to try to get an additional appropriation. Now, I am as much opposed as the gentleman from New York to wasting money; but I am also opposed to seeing the work on this road stopped. If it had been let to the lowest bidder, I have no doubt it would have been done within the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not a question of wasting money, but of repairing a public highway which has not been asked for by any officer of the Government or by any Department of the Government.

Mr. ATKINS. Will my colleague [Mr. DIBRELL] inform me whether this was not originally estimated for?

Mr. DIBRELL. Yes; $15,000 was asked for.

Mr. ATKINS. And the estimate sent to Congress?

Mr. DIBRELL. It was sent to Congress at its last session, but only $5,000 was appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. The fact that this is not called for in the estimates sent to this session of Congress I do not think is a good reason for refusing to make this appropriation. Gentlemen are very well aware that estimates are being constantly sent in here almost daily by the Department. The Department has simply neglected to send in this estimate. I do not doubt that had the attention of the Secretary of War been called to this matter he would have sent in the estimate for completing this road. I think it is important that the road should be completed.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. DIBRELL by a viva voce vote, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for a division on that vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 10.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Miscellaneous objects:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For printing and issuing charts for use of navigators, electrotyping copper-plates for chart-printing, and completion of office-work, $3,000.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For seventy-five copies of Hunter's Port Charges of the World, for the use of the principal consulates of the United States, $1,875.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] on the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I ask permission to make a remark or two. The Secretary of State last year, as he has done this year, requested authority to purchase only seventy-five copies (although it is supposed a greater number ought to be purchased) of this work for the guidance of shippers and our consuls abroad.

This is a very elaborate work, prepared by a learned gentleman of Brooklyn. It has been submitted to the leading merchants of New York and to scientific and literary men, and they say it is a work of absolute necessity to all our principal consulates. By a single glance at this work, which is nearly as large as Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, any shipping merchant can tell exactly what he can obtain at any foreign port for a cargo back, everything connected with port charges, and a mass of information such as has never been before collected together.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman refer the Chair to any existing law authorizing what is proposed by his amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I would refer the Chair to the item last read, and also to the one immediately following. They are of the same nature as the amendment I have offered, making appropriations for the publication and distribution of works which are not half so necessary as this.

But allow me to conclude what I have to say. The Secretary of State requested this from the last Congress, and he now requests it from the Senate. The request made at the last session is in possession of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and the Secretary of State has at this session written to the Senate asking that this provision shall be put in the appropriation bill, as this is most valuable information for consulates of the United States. I have no doubt that if my amendment is not allowed here it will be allowed in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question submitted to the Chair is whether the proposed amendment is one in order under the rule. The Chair finds nothing in any existing law authorizing the purchase of such a book or document. Unless the gentleman can point the Chair to some existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of this work, the Chair will be obliged to sustain the point of order. If the point of order is withdrawn, of course the Chair will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I beg the Chair to state whether any authority can be found for the paragraphs already in the bill any more than for the amendment I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a law authorizing the making and distribution of charts, &c. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order, without referring at all to the merits of the proposition.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 5380) supplementary to an act approved December 17, 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River and to prescribe the dimensions of the same;"

An act (H. R. 7050) making appropriation for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 109) to admit free of duty a monument to General Washington; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to provide for the binding of the Compendium of the Tenth Census.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For continuing the publication of the official records, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, of the war of the rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, $36,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

For the collection, preparation, and printing of the orders of General Anthony Wayne, $1,000.

This amendment is offered at the instance of the Adjutant-General of the Army, who informs me that the orders issued by General Anthony Wayne during his famous campaign in the Northwest have only recently been discovered, having been lost for a long time. A single copy of these orders, in manuscript, is now in the library at West Point. These documents are rich in historical interest to the States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin—the territory affected by the military operations of General Wayne after the defeat of General St. Clair. All who have looked into American history remember how completely the whole country was prostrated by St. Clair's defeat, and how, under the leadership of Wayne, hope dawned upon the American people and success crowned his military operations.

There is but a single copy of these orders in existence. That is in manuscript, and is in an insecure building at West Point. These documents ought by all means to be printed and distributed to the historical societies of this country, so that if the original papers should by any accident be destroyed these interesting historical materials will not be lost.

I have offered this amendment at the instance of the Adjutant-General of the Army, who informs me that there is no appropriation out of which these papers can be printed. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For appliances for disabled soldiers: For providing surgical appliances for persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States and not entitled to artificial limbs, $2,000.

Mr. HOGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1036:

"For payment of the amount reported by the Chief of Engineers to be due from the United States to James Allender, $2,350."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order against this amendment. In the first place, I do not see how it is germane to the pending provision, and I do not know any law which authorizes this payment. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. That amendment certainly has no place on this bill. There is no law which authorizes the payment; and there is a bill before the House for the same purpose and carrying the same amount.

Mr. HOGE. As I understand the point of order, it is that there is now pending in this House a bill for the same purpose as that contemplated by this amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is one point.

Mr. HOGE. And that the amendment is not germane. Is there any other?

Mr. HISCOCK. That it is a private claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the additional point of the gentleman from New York to be that there is no law authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. HOGE. Now, the point which I wish to make is one which has not been ruled upon, so far as I know, at any time in this House. There is a bill embracing this proposition—not pending in the House at all, for the reason that the Committee on Commerce having favorably considered the application of Mr. Allender for relief, have reported back the bill to the House; and on their recommendation it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of making an appropriation of the sum named. The bill is now in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not on any calendar. It can not be reached in any way except upon a report of that committee, because under the instructions of the House it is in their possession.

This is not a claim. This matter was submitted to arbitration, and the award which was made in favor of Mr. Allender would have been paid but for the single fact that there was no appropriation out of which compensation for these damages could be made. In the course of the improvement of the navigation of the Monongahela River by the Government, under a river and harbor act, Mr. Allender's mill property was, in the language of Major Merrill, the officer in charge of the work, "drowned out by the construction of a lock and dam." The engineer in charge of the work at once entered into an arbitration to determine the value of the property, and the arbitrators reported $2,350 as the amount of the damages. But the Engineer Bureau was unable to make payment because the law prohibits using for a purpose of this kind the appropriations made for that bureau. Ten years ago this man was driven from his property and his home. Every Department of the Government that has examined the case and every committee of Congress which has considered it during a period of eight or ten years has reported upon it favorably. A bill for the payment of this money was once passed by the House; and in this Congress the Committee on Commerce has reported that the amount should be paid, and the bill has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations that provision might be made for payment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that there is any denial of the statement of the gentleman from New York that a bill covering the substance of this amendment is pending before the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is simply a claim against the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears also to be in the nature of a private claim for the payment of which there is no authority of law. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HOGE. The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and is not before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

For the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, as follows: For current expenses, including construction and repairs, at the Central Branch, at Dayton, Ohio, $653,945.81.

For current expenses, including construction and repairs, at the Northwestern Branch, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $160,933.57.

For current expenses, including construction and repairs, at the Eastern Branch, at Togus, Maine, $142,191.13.

For current expenses, including construction and repairs, at the Southern Branch, at Hampton, Virginia, $150,017.52.

For out-door relief and incidental expenses, $15,000; in all, $1,122,088.03.

Mr. BROWNE. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of line 1131:

That section 2 of the act of February 26, 1881, be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. All pensions payable, or to be paid under this act, to pensioners who are inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be paid to the treasurer or treasurers of said home upon security given to the satisfaction of the managers to be disbursed for the benefit of the pensioners without deduction for fines or penalties under regulations to be established by the managers of the home. Said payment to be made by the pension agent upon a certificate of the proper officers of the home that the pensioner is an inmate thereof and is then still living. Any balance of the pension which may remain at the date of the pensioner's discharge shall be paid over to him; and in case of his death at the home the same shall be paid to the widow or children, or in default of either, to his legal representatives. And in such case, and in cases where pensions which heretofore have been paid to the treasurer of said home for the benefit of inmates of the home who have since been discharged or have died at the home or on furlough, any balance of the pension remaining at the date of such discharge or death shall be paid over to the pensioner, or in case of his death to the wife, children, or legal representatives."

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve the point of order on that amendment until I can understand precisely what it is.

Mr. BROWNE. While the amendment is somewhat long, Mr. Chairman, yet it changes the existing law only in one particular. If the committee will pay attention to the original section of the bill it will be seen that the treasurer of the home is required to pay the pension to the representatives of the deceased soldier only in case he dies at the home. That is the language of the law. I will read it:

Any balance of the pension which may remain at the date of the pensioner's discharge shall be paid over to him; and in case of his death at the home, the same shall be paid to the widow or children, or in default of either, to his legal representatives.

If he died on furlough or after his discharge away from the home the balance of his pension still remains in the hands of the treasurer at the home; and the board of managers hold under the law they are not bound to pay the pension over to the widow or children or the legal representatives. That is all the change which is proposed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Indiana what they do with it?

Mr. BROWNE. I do not know further than they do retain it at the home. I am frank to say, while this amendment is to be general, there is a case exactly in point. The pension was paid to the authorities of the home. The soldier lived at Evansville, in my State, and was allowed to go to his State on furlough and while there died. Not at the home, but absent from the home on furlough. And now they hold that under this law they are not required to pay the balance of his pension over to his widow.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have such an abiding faith in the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana on these matters I will not insist on any point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BROWNE. That is all there is of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall apply the excess above $5 monthly of the pensions of all inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the support and the objects and purposes of said home: Provided, however, That the above provision shall not apply to any inmate of said home who, having at the time of his admission to said home, wife, minor child, or parent dependent upon him for support, shall apply the excess of his pension above said $5 each month to said support. The said board of managers shall annually report the amount of pension-money received by them under the above provision: Provided, That in addition to the persons now declared by law to be entitled to admission to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, any person who served during the war of the rebellion in the Navy of the United States and was honorably discharged therefrom, who is not otherwise provided for by law, and who is incapacitated by reason of wounds incurred in the line of duty or disease contracted during his said service from earning his own support, may be admitted to said home in the same manner and under the same conditions as volunteer soldiers. And section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1881, is hereby repealed.

Mr. DAWES. I make the point of order that that changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I can cite a decision on that point of order which will be all-controlling. I believe the present Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, presiding when this sundry civil bill was under consideration at the last session, ruled that this was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know whether the gentleman from New York sustains that decision?

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe the decision at that time was right.

Mr. DAWES. My attention was called away and I did not hear what the gentleman from New York stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recollect the decision referred to; but the precedent is a good one if verified. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. I make the point that this provision does not retrench expenditures, either by a reduction of the number or salary of officers of the United States nor by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. For, sir, a pension is not a compensation; it is a gratuity, and has been so held by the courts. Nor is it a retrenchment of expenditure by the reduction of the amount covered by this bill. It goes beyond it. This bill carries the full amounts of the estimates made for the purposes of the home. It is clearly repugnant to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is a precedent the Chair will be glad if the gentleman from New York will refer him to it.

The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York if this changes the existing law?

Mr. DAWES. It repeals existing law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not catch the question of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York in what way this provision changes existing law?

Mr. HISCOCK. Substantially it changes existing law, as will be seen in the first five lines of the paragraph on page 47, in the following words:

That from and after the passage of this act the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall apply the excess above $5 monthly of the pensions of all inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the support and the objects and purposes of said home.

That is a provision which radically changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. In what respect does it retrench expenditures?

Mr. BROWNE. Why, if the gentleman from New York will permit me to answer, under existing law the Government of the United States maintains the homes and pays the pensions of the soldiers in addition. There is an expense for keeping up the homes outside of the payment of the full pension. This will do away with that expense.

Mr. HISCOCK. The adoption of this provision must reduce the amount the bill carries for the support of the homes. Of necessity it must work out the result of reducing the aggregate to be appropriated for the purpose of keeping up these homes.

Mr. DAWES. It changes the whole system of the pension laws. It repeals the bill, the title of which is given in lines 1154 to 1159, being an act making appropriations for the payments of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes. It changes the existing law completely.

Mr. DEUSTER. I desire to be heard for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order?

Mr. DEUSTER. Yes, sir. On page 48, beginning with line 1154, we find this clause:

And section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1881, is hereby repealed.

This is the last clause of the paragraph just read. I refer here, as the Chair will perceive, to the repeal which this bill contemplates of an act for the payment of invalid and other pensions, which is the repeal of an existing law. I believe therefore that according to the provisions of Rule XXI, section 3, which provides "nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order," that this provision is entirely out of order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds the decision made at the last Congress to which reference has been made, but has not had time to examine what provision of the bill was then under consideration when that decision was made. He deems, however, that the provision in contemplation at the time tended to retrench the expenditures of the Government, or the amount covered by the bill. The Chair will take the assurance of the gentleman from New York that the material point at issue is the same.

Mr. HISCOCK. It was precisely the same as the present paragraph of this bill, as the Chair will find upon examination, or rather I should say the same point was at issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, in view of that precedent, will rule on the assurance that it relates to the same point and effects a retrenchment in the expenditures of the Government, that the provision is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. Instead of appealing from the decision of the Chair I shall offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Insert after the word "provision," in line 1144, the following words:

"Provided also, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to any inmate of said 'home' who is drawing a pension for the loss of one leg, one arm, one hand, or one foot, or who draws a pension at any rate over $24 per month."

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I have followed, as will be seen in the language of this amendment, the $40 law passed by the unanimous vote of this House, a law which proposes to give a pension of $40 per month to every soldier who has lost a leg or a foot, a hand or an arm in the service, and including beyond that, that class of pensioners who draw over $24 per month. Now, the effect of this provision, if adopted without my amendment on this class of pensioners, is this:

The boards of managers of these homes will be authorized to retain for the uses of the homes of the pension drawn by the soldier all of the amount to which he is entitled, excepting $5 a month. Now, there is a great class of pensioners who draw from $8 a month to $10 or $12 a month; and a great number of the inmates of the homes who draw no pensions at all. But here is a class who draw $18 and upward because of such disability as entitles them to it. They are mulcted by this provision—the man who draws a pension of $18 to the amount of $13. The pensioner who draws $24 a month is mulcted $19 a month, and the man who draws $8 a month for chronic diarrhea is mulcted but $3 a month. This is an outrageous discrimination against that class of men who have lost a leg or an arm in battle, or been utterly disqualified from manual labor.

The Legislature of the State of Ohio has unanimously adopted a resolution approving of this $40 bill, and it meets also the unanimous approval of the sentiment of the country. That, however, is a bill that can not pass in this Congress. Here is an appropriation bill that will inevitably pass; and if the Congress of the United States really desires to do anything for this class of pensioners here is an opportunity, instead of adopting a provision which takes away from them almost their entire income.

And worse than that, there is another class disqualified from manual labor whose pension is mulcted $45 a month. There is another class of pensioners who draw $72 a month because they are entirely helpless and require the attendance of another person. They will be mulcted $67 a month.

The existing law is this, that the managers of the home can hold for these pensioners all of their pensions, but hold them for their own benefit. They still remain their property. And if the pensioners are drunken "dead-beats" as some gentlemen seem to think they are, and some of them no doubt drink too much liquor, the existing provisions of law enable the managers of the home to regulate and control all that matter and preserve the soldier's money for him instead of pouring it into the coffers of the Government, which does not need it and does not want it. The law now takes care of the property of the soldier and maintains the discipline of the home by enabling the managers of the home to withhold the pension from the soldier, but not confiscate it to the uses of the home.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. The argument for this provision of the bill is found in the provision itself. It is proposed to take the money of the pensioners and apply it to their support; and the very class of pensioners that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES] refers to are those that it is intended by the amendment to reach—those who receive the larger amounts.

Mr. DAWES. Those with their legs shot off.

Mr. HISCOCK. They are cared for; they are supported by the Government. And it is the intention of this bill that they shall continue to be cared for. What would the gentleman from Ohio have done with their money?

Mr. DAWES. I would have it given to them or kept for them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Where would it go? To what purpose would it be devoted?

Mr. DAWES. It would go to their heirs or legal representatives after their death.

Mr. HISCOCK. We are not here legislating for their heirs unless their heirs need this money. And if a soldier has a widow or minor children he is safe from the operations of this law. We have taken great care of the heirs and of the widows in this bill. The exception is made in their favor; but I am frank to say when you reach out beyond the dependent relative to the collateral heirs of the pensioner, the appeal of the gentleman does not touch my argument.

This provision is recommended by the managers of the home. I certainly should not have reported it here unless the most eminent soldiers in the land had recommended it; those who are as careful of these men as fathers are of their children. In the interest of the Government, in the interest of the home, in the interest of the soldier himself, it was proper this amendment should be incorporated in the bill. And the love of those men for the soldier and their fidelity to their comrades in arms the gentleman from Ohio will not question. The trustees of the Soldiers' Home are men who stand too high to have either their patriotism or their loyalty to the soldiers questioned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another thing is sought in this provision. The effect of this provision will be this: There are scattered all over the country soldiers that do not receive a pension, soldiers that are not entitled to admission to this home. They were referred to the other day upon the floor. There are soldiers that to-day are in the poor-houses and are supported as paupers, and the effect of this provision may be to open the door of the home to that class of people dependent on public charity for support. And, sir, I confess I have as much sympathy for them as I have for the soldier that received a pension sufficient to support him.

Another class will be introduced into the home possibly if this amendment prevails. Thus far these homes have been closed to the volunteer sailors. This may have the effect to make vacancies in the homes, and we have provided that these vacancies may be filled from that service. And are they not equally entitled to this bounty being extended to them? Are they not equally entitled to be cared for and supported by the nation? We are not, Mr. Chairman, attempting here to strike down this system of public homes in the interest of naked, bare, mean, niggardly economy, but are simply seeking to take in a larger class of people and extend the scope of the benefits of the institution.

Mr. DEUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I was opposed to this virtual confiscation of pension-money last year, and I am still opposed to it now, although the confiscation is to be only a partial one hereafter, while last year it was proposed to re-enact the old scandal of stealing pensions in the shape of fines and penalties. The reasons for which I was opposed to this robbery are as valid to-day as they were then. We are fishing in very shallow water when we propose, after appropriating over $1,000,000 for the support of these institutions, to make almost in the same breath poor invalids unwilling contributors to the support of "national" institutions which a "generous country" has so "liberally" provided for its defenders in their decrepitude and infirmity.

Thousands of pensioners are to-day in the employ of the Government, some in very high positions; but no one is so unreasonable or unjust as to demand that they should give up their pensions because they are salaried employés of the Government or give one cent for the maintenance of these homes out of their pensions. On the contrary, the law provides that they shall have, when honorably discharged soldiers, a preference over others. Yet these crippled, often hopelessly diseased, invalids, who are, one and all, slowly tottering toward the grave, shall be robbed of their pension-money, which these unfortunates in many instances apply for the purpose of paying transportation and expenses in visiting their families and friends who live at a distance. If this money is taken from them the hope of ever getting home to see their friends would be cut off. Again, the pensioners of the homes pay, as I am informed, for all the clothing they draw—tobacco, stationery, postage, and, in fact, nearly everything they obtain from the home. Besides, the pension is their just due, granted them under a contract that would be considered too sacred an obligation by any just government under the sun to be violated in such a mean, roundabout, penny-business way.

Do not let us forget that these veterans who shall be robbed of their pension-money are a part of the men, the armies, whose gallant deeds will live in a thousand songs in the history and hearts of our people so long as the praise of valor and heroism will re-echo in the warm hearts of our youth. And it is too much like robbing Peter to pay Paul if we take his meager pension from one invalid in order to assist another one. If we can not support these institutions altogether, let them go under; but if we can, we ought to support them in such a manner that such small business need not be resorted to. I think we can support them as we ought to do; and if the number of applicants is too large for their present capacity, and worthy soldiers are unable to gain admittance, then let us establish two or three new branches; but no necessity can ever serve as defense for so gross an injustice as the curtailing of the pensions of these poor men would be. We have no more right to touch their pension-money than we have to cut down the national debt; the payment of both is made in accordance with obligations which admit of no cavil at this late day and which ought to be held inviolable. I enter my protest against such injustice now, as I have done before, and I hope the proposition will not receive the sanction of this House.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the committee will look at this question dispassionately. The Government of the United States have provided pensions for those who have become disabled in its military service. It pays or intends to pay a sum equal to the disability. In addition to the payment of pensions it has provided palatial homes to which a certain class of soldiers are admitted; and when admitted, the Government not only furnishes them with homes, not only furnishes them with shelter, but furnishes them with clothing and food and everything. The inmates of the Soldiers' Home—and nobody complains of it—have what that term "home" implies—everything that is necessary for their comfort and convenience. A large portion of those that are admitted receive no pension whatever from the Government. Now, the present law does this, and here is the inequality and injustice of it to a certain class of pensioners in this country.

I have two neighbors; each of them has been disabled by the loss of an arm, and each is drawing a pension of $24 a month. One of them remains at home and does what he can with his remaining arm for the support of himself and family. He supports himself and family by his own exertions, excepting so far as he is assisted by the $24 a month pension given him by the Government. The other is in a national home for disabled soldiers, and the Government of the United States supports him—furnishes him with a home, with fuel, wearing apparel, food, medical attendance, and everything necessary for his comfort, and in addition to that gives him a pension of $24 a month.

Now let me ask if that is fair? That is what the law does as it now stands. It pays the pensioner who is in one of these homes his pension and supports him besides.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. Why not make it a uniform rule? If you are going to make a charge against the pension of a soldier for his support, then make a uniform rule.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman asks why not make a uniform rule? I say this, that a pension is given by the Government in lieu of a support as a support, to enable the pensioner to support himself. That is what the pension is given for. The home is provided for the same thing; but if you give the disabled soldier a pension and a home, too, you give him a double support.

Mr. DAWES. Not more than he deserves.

Mr. BROWNE. Now, there is no law compelling a person to go to one of these homes. A soldier may draw his pension and remain with his family and among his friends; or under the provisions of the law he may go to a home and have a maintenance there and $5 a month of his pension besides.

Mr. MAGINNIS. And the effect of that is to exclude others who have no pensions and no means of support.

Mr. BROWNE. As the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] very properly remarks, are we to fill our homes with a class of persons who receive pensions, giving them the benefit of the home besides, and in that way fill up these homes and exclude worthy persons from their benefits who have no pensions at all?

I would not be in favor of this proposition if I did not believe it was absolute justice. It is generous to the soldier and is but just to the people of the United States. If we provide a home with all the necessaries of life for the soldier, that is enough. If we are to help the soldier in a home, let it be done there; if we are to help him by means of a pension, let it be done by the pension. Let us give the soldier the choice of the pension or the home, but not both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the time for debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. DEUSTER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I renew the amendment. I want the House to understand exactly what this amendment is, and then we can see how the argument of my honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] applies to it.

It affects only soldiers who draw $18 a month, $24 a month, $50 a month, or $72 a month. I believe I have stated all the classes. A soldier draws $18 a month pension for the loss of an arm below the elbow or a foot below the knee, and $24 a month for the loss of an arm above the elbow or a leg above the knee.

Now, if this provision is enacted into a law without my amendment the effect of it will be to drive out of these homes, and that is the purpose of it, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] has admitted, not these men who draw $8 and $10 and $12 a month——

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not my purpose to drive anybody out of these homes.

Mr. DAWES. That is the effect of the provision, and I understood the gentleman to state that it would make room for sailors or somebody else.

Mr. HISCOCK. I said that if it did have the effect of driving any out of these homes it would make room for those of another meritorious class.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; but not for the men who have lost a hand or a foot or those who, because of extreme disability, received $50 a month, as being totally disabled for manual labor, or those who receive $72 a month because they are so disabled as to require constant personal attendance.

By a unanimous vote of the House of Representatives, including the votes of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] and of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], these soldiers so disabled were to receive $40 a month. Now, it would be unjust to them to adopt this provision and refuse to adopt my amendment.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. I want to know if it is justice to the hundreds of thousands of pensioners who are out of these homes to be allowed simply their pensions, while you give another class of pensioners the benefits of these homes and a support and their pensions besides?

Mr. DAWES. This great nation has a surplus in its Treasury of $150,000,000. Let us build homes enough for our disabled soldiers; we are abundantly able to do so. Do not vote on one day to give these disabled soldiers $40 a month and let the proposition go to the Senate, where it may be defeated, and then on an appropriation bill place a provision which will take away from them the pension which Congress has given them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES].

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 5, noes 34.

Mr. DAWES. No quorum has voted, and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. HISCOCK were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 15, noes 92.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "rebellion," in line 1148, insert the words "in the Army or;" so as to read, "any person who served during the war of the rebellion in the Army or in the Navy of the United States," &c.

After the word "soldier," in line 1154, insert the words "are now admitted."

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BISBEE. I move the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "support," in line 1141, insert the words "or shall, after such admission, become dependent upon him for support;" so that it will read, "having at the time of his admission to said home wife, minor child, or parent dependent upon him for support, or shall after such admission become dependent upon him for support."

Mr. BISBEE. Mr. Chairman, the pending paragraph contemplates that all pensions exceeding $5 a month, payable to inmates of the National Soldiers' Home, shall be applied by the managers for the support of the home, subject, however, to this proviso:

Provided, however, That the above provision shall not apply to any inmate of said home who, having at the time of his admission to said home wife, minor child, or parent dependent upon him for support, shall apply the excess of his pension above said $5 each month to said support.

Now, this proviso as it reads would prevent the soldier from contributing from his pension to the support of his wife, minor child, or parent in case that wife, child, or parent should become dependent on him after his admission to the home. As the provision now stands his right to contribute to their support is limited to the case in which they are dependent upon him at the time of his admission. If at that time they are by reason of their own exertions or by the aid of friends or because of the possession of property not dependent upon the soldier, he can not contribute to their support if subsequently, on account of loss of property, loss of friends, or (in the case of the wife or parent) by reason of old age, they should become unable to support themselves. The only effect of my amendment will be to enable the inmate of the home to make contribution for the support of his wife, child, or parent, no matter at what time they may become dependent upon him for support.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this provision, after having been carefully prepared when the last bill was under consideration, was submitted by the Committee on Appropriations to the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home. It was also submitted to other gentlemen standing high in the confidence of the soldiers. It was submitted to gentlemen upon the committees of this House who have this matter specially in charge. This particular clause excepting from the operation of the general provision a soldier having a wife, minor child or parent, dependent upon him for support was the result of deliberate consideration.

A MEMBER. Is this paragraph agreeable to the soldier?

Mr. HISCOCK. As the question is asked, I will say that I have not the least idea in the world that it is agreeable to the soldier. We were told that these soldiers have passed the period of life when they are likely to have parents dependent upon them for support, and that there is no difficulty so far as minor children are concerned. We were told, however, that there is a certain percentage—I do not say a large percentage—of these soldiers who are and ever have been the victims of designing women; and if you include in this provision the language proposed by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BISBEE] you offer a premium to designing women to fasten themselves upon these men, to marry these soldiers in order to get the benefit of their pensions, the last women in the world to whom this Government would wish to extend its bounty. A gentleman near me, and a soldier, too, says that he knows this to be true. I had hoped that I might not be called upon to make this explanation. It is an unpleasant duty for me to discharge. But "I tell the tale as it was told to me." This provision should be preserved as reported in the bill if you would save these men—I will not say from what.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BISBEE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that so far as this amendment applies to the parent or child of an inmate of this home it certainly can do no harm, and if a parent or child should become dependent upon him after his admission to the home he should be enabled to contribute to their support.

In regard to the provision for wives who subsequently become dependent upon these soldiers by reason of misfortune or otherwise, the amendment does not contemplate enabling any soldier to contribute any portion of his money to the support of any woman who may become his wife after his admission to the institution. A careful reading of the amendment will show that on this point I am correct. If at the time of his admission to the home the soldier has a wife not then dependent upon him, but who subsequently by misfortune or otherwise becomes dependent upon him, he ought to be permitted to contribute to her support.

Therefore the amendment is not obnoxious, nor is it subject to the criticism made by the gentleman from New York upon it.

Mr. BROWNE. May I ask the gentleman from Florida a question?

Mr. BISBEE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. These soldiers are discharged frequently from the homes, and can again be readmitted. There is no difficulty about procuring an order of readmission. Now, suppose that one of them who is not now married procures a discharge from the home, and while out on the discharge gets married. Subsequently he makes application for readmission to the home. Would he not in that case come within the conditions suggested by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BISBEE. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana I will suggest to him that it can be provided for by law, giving the same discretion and power of admission to the board of managers in this case that is given in other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DEUSTER. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all from line 1132 to line 1160, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that that motion has been decided once.

Mr. DEUSTER. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the impression that the gentleman from Ohio had made a similar motion.

The motion, however, will be submitted to the committee as in order.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the expenses and services of the civil commissioner and the incidental expenses of the commission appointed by the Secretary of the Navy under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882; to report upon the question of advisability of sale of any of the navy-yards, $2,500; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to report to Congress at its next session such part of the lands of the United States, if there be any, upon which the New York navy-yard is situated as is not needed for public purposes, together with an appraisement of the value of the same, such appraisement to be made in such manner as in his judgment will give a true estimate of the market value thereof.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by the insertion of what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 1194 insert the following:

"And said commission shall also report in reference to each navy-yard the sale of which is not recommended by them, whether it is in their opinion specially adapted for any specific purpose, and whether it should be retained in active operation or otherwise used; whether it is fully equipped and provided with all necessary appliances for the prompt and economical execution of such work as may be required, and if not, in what respect it is defective, and what will be required to place it in proper and effective condition for any probable demands in time of war, and the estimated cost of any additional requirements; and also whether, in their opinion, improvements can be made in the system of performing work at the navy-yards which will promote efficiency and reduce expense."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard upon the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Only for a few moments. I desire to state as briefly as possible the purposes and objects contemplated by this amendment.

This amendment is offered for the purpose of obtaining from the commission now authorized by law to make an examination of these navy-yards in efficient form the information they have obtained with reference to these yards in the manner suggested by this proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is a little late.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. It appropriates no money.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It provides no additional expense in connection with the commission already authorized by law to examine into the condition of these various navy-yards. It simply calls upon the commission to report more fully than the law now requires them to do.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I shall not detain the committee further, as I believe this amendment will commend itself to their judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I now offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be laid out in convenient lots for building and commercial purposes, with convenient streets, avenues, and wharves in substantial accord with the recommendations and report made and submitted by Commodore John H. Upshur, all that land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, included within the present limits of the Brooklyn navy-yard and the United States naval hospital grounds which is bounded and described as follows:

Parcel A, containing about thirty-three and one-quarter acres, beginning at the northwest corner of Washington and Flushing avenues; thence westerly along the line of Flushing avenue 848 feet; thence northerly along a line parallel to the line of Washington avenue to the north line of the property of the United States, being about 1,900 feet; thence easterly along the line of the property of the United States to Washington avenue, being about 940 feet; thence along the line of Washington avenue to the point of beginning.

Parcel B, containing about twenty-four and a half acres, beginning at the northeast corner of Washington and Flushing avenues; thence northerly along the line of Washington avenue to the northerly line of the property of the United States fronting on Kent-avenue basin; thence easterly along the line of the property of the United States parallel with Kent-avenue basin to the easterly line of Hewes street extended; thence southwesterly along the easterly line of Hewes street extended about one hundred and fifty feet; thence westerly on a line parallel to the course of Flushing avenue west of Ryerson street to a point five hundred and twenty feet from Washington avenue; thence southerly to Flushing avenue, seven hundred feet; thence westerly along the line of Flushing avenue, five hundred and twenty feet, to the place of beginning.

And the Secretary shall cause the said lots, when so laid out as aforesaid, to be appraised by three appraisers of experience and competent knowledge, to be selected by him, and after said appraisal he shall advertise the same for sale at public auction in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the Government, either at one sale or at several different sales, at not less than the appraised value of each, subject to such reservations and limitations as to use as he may deem best; and he is hereby authorized and empowered to make and execute, in the name of the United States, deeds of such lots to the purchasers, upon the payment of the purchase-money in full; and at such sale or sales he may give to the purchasers of any single lot the election to take at the same price per square foot any number of unsold lots within the same block or square. After deducting the cost of all surveys, plans, appraisal, advertisements, and sale he shall pay or cause to be paid into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds of said sale: Provided, That the city of Brooklyn may purchase, at not less than the appraised value thereof, so much of the northerly end of parcel A, hereinbefore described, as said city may desire for market purposes, the southerly line of said purchase to extend from Washington avenue westerly to the westerly line of said parcel, and in a line parallel to Flushing avenue.

Mr. ATKINS. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HARRIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in this bill, in lines 1195 to 1202, inclusive, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized—

To report to Congress, at its next session, such part of the lands of the United States, if there be any, upon which the New York navy-yard is situated, as is not needed for public purposes, together with an appraisement of the value of the same; said appraisement to be made in such manner as in his judgment will give a true estimate of the market value thereof.

I have moved to strike that out and insert the amendment which has been read for the reason that the information called for in that provision of the bill has already been obtained.

Yesterday, during the debate upon this question, I rose to ask the privilege of publishing certain letters, upon which the Chair remarked I was somewhat out of order; but I have been permitted to publish them for the information of the House. There is a letter from Commodore Upshur, commandant at that yard, giving careful estimates of the value of the property, and stating that out of one hundred and ninety-three acres of land connected with the New York navy-yard there are fifty-four acres which might be as well sold as kept, and better. And he returns with his report made to the Secretary of the Navy carefully prepared maps, showing the manner in which this property may be cut up and sold. He estimates that property, now utterly worthless to the Government, would bring $1,500,000.

I have myself been over that land, and the condition of it is simply this: There lies east of the navy-yard and between that and the naval hospital this large vacant tract of land for which the Government has no use. It lies absolutely in front of the city of Brooklyn, between that city and the city of New York, and is certainly a great obstruction to communication between the two cities. It is worthless to the Government. It always will be. It will bring a million and a half of dollars, and some say $1,600,000. It is recommended to be sold. Estimates have been made and the plans are here.

I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after the Committee on Naval Affairs gave notice of the amendment I now offer, wrote to Mr. HEWITT, of New York, that he might have ample information; and Mr. HEWITT wrote him a letter, which is published in this morning's RECORD, which any gentleman may read. This amendment was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, having the subject under charge by reference of the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York; and the result is in obedience to that bill. I now yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLISS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLISS] in his own time.

Mr. BLISS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the recommendations of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House and the acceptance on the part of the Appropriations Committee of it as an amendment to their bill, I do not think it will be necessary for me to enter into a lengthy explanation to show the wisdom of the adoption of this provision, but at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I will briefly give the history of the matter and the reasons why I think the amendment should be adopted.

The Government has long held possession of a tract of land in the city of Brooklyn adjoining the navy-yard proper, which, so far as the requirements of the public service are concerned, is utterly worthless.

In the Forty-fourth Congress I introduced a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report to the Secretary of the Navy and to Congress the propriety of selling this unoccupied property to the city of Brooklyn for market purposes. The bill was passed, the commission appointed, and its findings and recommendations in favor of the disposal of the property are on the files of this House.

Bills subsequently introduced by me in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses to confirm the sale recommended by the commission failed to pass; in one instance because there were opposing influences and there was not time to thoroughly discuss it, and in the other instance because under the new rules of the House it never was reached during that session.

The proposition now made, Mr. Chairman, will, if adopted, be not only of benefit to the third city in the Union, with its population of nearly seven hundred thousand people, but a positive advantage to the General Government.

According to a survey made some time since, under direction of Government officers, there are fifty-three acres of ground adjoining that part of the yard in active use that can be sold with advantage to the Government. During the late war, at a time when the naval stations of the Government were taxed to their utmost capacity, the land which it is now proposed to sell was never used. A large part of it lay under water, the localities adjoining were unhealthy, and the commercial interests of the city of Brooklyn at that time were not such as to require its use.

It is not now probable, if the local authorities of Brooklyn should decide to establish a public market on the property recommended to be sold, that more than fifteen or twenty acres would be required for that purpose. The remainder, according to the amendment, would be sold, under proper restrictions, to the highest bidders, to private parties, and the total amount realized from the sale of the entire tract would not, in my opinion, based upon the judgment of experts, be far from $1,000,000.

The improvements that would be immediately put upon the property by the city of Brooklyn would greatly enhance the value of the navy-yard adjoining, and not only would the sanitary condition of the yard and of that portion of the city be improved but their commercial worth would be greatly advanced.

It may be asked if the condition of affairs has not changed since the first proposition to sell this property was made. In answer I have to say that as the commission appointed under the original bill introduced by me recommended the sale of the land in question, so the present commandant of that yard, Commodore Upshur, and the Secretary of the Navy are agreed that it is the wisest thing to do. The mutual advantages of the proposed transaction are conceded by all who have fairly and thoroughly investigated the matter.

This is a practical way of doing something in support of the proposition to cut down the expense of maintaining our numerous navy-yards and for the improvement of the Navy, as it not only lessens the expenses largely at that point but it would furnish a sufficient amount of money to construct and equip a new model fast steel cruiser.

The land referred to in the bill is not now and never will be required for navy-yard purposes, and its sale in the manner proposed would be not only of great advantage to the commercial interests of two of the largest and most important cities in the Union, but will lessen very considerably the expenses of the Government and place a large sum of money in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ATKINS. I reserved the point of order because I did not hear the amendment very distinctly, and I think now it is liable to the point of order. I shall not make that point. But I ask the gentleman who has offered the amendment if he has provided in it that these lots shall be sold at public auction? And is there not—I heard the amendment indistinctly—a proviso that where any one shall buy a lot he may duplicate his lot or take other lots on the same basis?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I will say that in the first place it was recommended that a portion of this land be exchanged for other lots that the city of Brooklyn might be allowed to purchase for market purposes under an appraisal. But the Committee on Naval Affairs determined to do nothing of that kind, but to require that the whole property be divided into lots and that the lots be sold for cash.

Where the property is divided into squares, supposing that possibly the city of Brooklyn might desire to purchase for certain market purposes more than a single lot, it was thought advisable to provide that a purchaser of one lot in a square might, if he chose, take four lots at the same price.

Mr. ATKINS. The city of Brooklyn or any other corporation or person can do that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Yes. Then we provide that the entire sum shall be paid into the Treasury after deducting the expenses. We permit the city of Brooklyn to take a piece on the north end of one square for the purposes of a market, for instance, at the appraised value, but it is obliged to conform the lines to those established for the streets.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. I move to insert that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public auction, in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the Government, either at one sale or at several different sales, the property known as the naval hospital at Chelsea, Massachusetts, with the grounds thereto belonging. And the Secretary shall cause the said property to be appraised by three appraisers of experience and competent knowledge to be selected by him; and after said appraisal he shall advertise the same for sale, subject to such reservations and limitations as to use as he may deem best. And he is hereby authorized and empowered to make and execute in the name of the United States deeds of lots to the purchasers upon the payment of the purchase-money in full. And at such sale or sales he may give to the purchaser of any single lot the election to take at the same price per square foot any number of unsold lots within the same block or square. After deducting the cost of all surveys, plans, appraisals, advertisements, and sales, he shall pay or cause to be paid into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds of said sales; and, further, that $50,000 of the sum so realized shall be placed to the credit of the Navy Department for the selection of a new site and the erection of a suitable building thereon, if thought advisable.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will reserve all points of order on that amendment.

Mr. MORSE. This proposition is on the same principle as the one just adopted by the Committee of the Whole. I have a petition here [unrolling a petition down the middle aisle of the Hall] signed by a large number of the people of Chelsea, where this property is located. It is signed by the mayor, the aldermen, the councilmen, and all the prominent men of the town to the number of several hundred. They state that their interests require that this property shall be sold.

I have the authority of the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer this amendment, and I have the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy to the effect that it will be in the interest of the Government to sell this property. I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I send to his desk, and which will complete, I think, about all that is necessary to be said on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1883.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the House of Representatives passed February 10, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform this House, as soon as practicable, whether or not in his judgment it would be in the interest of the Government to sell the naval and marine hospitals and grounds at Chelsea, Massachusetts, and whether any injury would be done to the service by such sale."

In reply to the above resolution the Department has the honor to state that the United States hospital grounds at Chelsea were purchased September 22, 1823. There were originally one hundred and fifteen acres; thirty acres are occupied by the Ordnance Bureau for a naval magazine, ten acres were transferred to the Treasury Department for a marine hospital, so that about seventy-five acres remain for the use of the naval hospital. The hospital building was completed and occupied January 7, 1836, and a wing was added in 1865.

It is the judgment of the Department that it would be for the interest of the Government to sell the naval hospital grounds and that no injury would be done to the service by such sale. The institution engrosses many acres of valuable land constituting a very large portion of the area of Chelsea. The land is too valuable to be thus withheld from the market, and the naval hospital might be wisely transferred to a less expensive spot. Any bill authorizing the sale should be carefully guarded so as to secure full prices to the Government, and if the whole land is to be sold provision should be made for reserving enough of the proceeds to purchase a new site and erect another hospital thereon.

The views of the Treasury Department as to the sale of the marine hospital are not known to this Department.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary.

To Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If I understood the amendment as it was read, it provides that the purchaser of one lot may take any amount of additional square feet at the appraised value.

Mr. MORSE. In the same square or block.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not insist upon my point of order. I think it probable that if this property can be fairly and honestly sold, it will be for the interest of the Government to sell it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I renew it. I am opposed to the Government selling its property in such manner as this. As stated in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, any proposition presented for this purpose should be carefully guarded.

Now, here by an amendment to an appropriation bill it is proposed that we shall sell seventy-five acres of land near the city of Boston. I find as a general rule that when the Government sells its property it gets but a small price for it, but if it wants to purchase land it must pay two or three times its value.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. This property if sold will bring half a million of dollars, probably ten times what it originally cost the Government. It is comparatively of no use to the Government now, and if it can be properly sold, as it will be under this amendment, it will yield a valuable consideration to the Government.

The proposition is to appraise and sell this land at not less than the appraised value, the money to be paid directly into the Treasury, with the exception of $50,000 to be reserved, if thought desirable, for the erection of another hospital on a better location.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The very reason given by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] I think should lead us to be very cautious in this matter. This property is very valuable, and, as the Secretary of the Navy intimates, we should be very careful and guarded in any proposition to dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a little hesitation upon the point of order. When a point of order has been reserved and then withdrawn after considerable debate, and another gentleman renews the point of order and then goes on to debate the merits of the proposition, it occurs to the Chair as questionable whether the point of order should be entertained.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the Chair hold that a point of order can be prevented by one gentleman making it and then withdrawing it?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not. The Chair holds that any member of the committee at the proper time can raise a point of order. What the Chair calls attention to is this: This point of order was reserved, and then not pressed by the gentleman reserving it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] renewed it after it was withdrawn, and then proceeded to debate the merits of the bill. The Chair always desires to preserve the right of any member of the Committee of the Whole to make a point of order; but that right should be restricted within reasonable limits.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the Chair hold that the point of order is made too late?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire now to call attention to the decision made yesterday upon a similar proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] to sell military reservations belonging to the Government. The Chair in that case overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In that case the amendment came from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. And this is offered by the authority of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear it so stated until this moment. As the Chair is now informed, this amendment is reported from the Naval Committee under the proviso of Rule XXI.

Mr. MORSE. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair trusts that under the circumstances he will not be obliged to rule upon this point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations desire that the point shall not be made, I will not press it; but it strikes me this is an unwise way of disposing of Government property.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 50, noes 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Potomac Steamboat Company is authorized to bring suit against the United States in the Court of Claims, to establish and recover actual damages, if any, sustained by their steamboat Excelsior, in consequence of an alleged collision with the United States tug Fortune, in Hampton Roads, Virginia, on the 4th day of December, 1882.

Mr. URNER. I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on this paragraph, that it is new and independent legislation, and out of place in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it altogether probable that the provision is subject to a point of order. The facts of the case are substantially stated in the provision itself—that one of the vessels of the Potomac Steamship Company was run into by a Government vessel and destroyed. There is no question about the facts. If there had been but a partial loss of the vessel the amount of the damage would probably have been paid by the Department from the contingent fund, without troubling Congress with the question at all. I understand that such payments have in times past been made to some extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is now addressing an appeal to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; I am appealing to the gentleman from Indiana. This vessel was a total loss. In the first place, a provision was prepared authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the matter fully; but afterward the committee unanimously thought that, in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, we should let this party go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would yield to the gentleman's appeal with great pleasure but for the fact that several gentlemen having claims of the same character against the Government are insisting that a discrimination should not be made against them. That is the trouble in putting private claims upon an appropriation bill. Other citizens having like claims which had not received the same treatment feel that injustice is done to them. I think that all matters of this kind should be provided for by some general enactment. I must therefore insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the point of order be insisted upon, I have no doubt it must be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. URNER] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the petition of George H. Plant for damages sustained by the Lady of the Lake, in 1874, by a collision with the United States steamer Gettysburgh, be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with power and jurisdiction hereby conferred on said court to entertain the same; that said court ascertain whether said collision was in consequence of any fault of the Lady of the Lake contributing thereto, and if not that they allow the petitioner the actual damages done to his vessel, if any, caused by the fault of said steamer Gettysburgh, but no damages for loss of business or trade.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment must be ruled out for the same reasons applicable in regard to the paragraph.

Mr. URNER. I wish to state that this is the identical language of a bill now on the Speaker's table. I was induced to offer it as an amendment at this time because I saw that the Committee on Appropriations had included a similar provision in this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving the Capitol grounds: For continuing the work of the improvement of the Capitol grounds, including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings, pay of landscape architect, one clerk, and wages of mechanics, gardeners, and workmen, $65,000.

Mr. WILSON. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "work of," in line 1227, and the words "of the Capitol grounds, including," in same line and line 1228.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to stop this eternal work on the Capitol grounds. The despoiler has been here for ten years to my knowledge. The beauty and symmetry of these grounds have been in a great measure destroyed. Those who have carried on these so-called "improvements" have removed the most beautiful forest there was about the city of Washington—a forest containing shade-trees which can not be replaced in less than a quarter of a century. In winter and in summer, in spring-time and in fall these grounds are being dug up, trees cut down, and changes everlastingly made. This damage to the public grounds around the Capitol has been going on for a series of years. I think any man of taste must fail to discover that any improvement has been made, though thousands of dollars have been expended.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the office of the surveyor-general of Minnesota: For fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$2,000," which I understand was the amount appropriated last year, and certainly these contingent expenses will not be less for the coming year than for the present.

Mr. HISCOCK. This item carries precisely the same amount as the law for the current year. I will say frankly that I have never been able to see how fuel, books, stationery, and incidental expenses at one of these offices can require more than $1,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I made the motion under the impression that we appropriated last year $2,000 for this purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. My memorandum is otherwise.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have not time to refer to the statutes. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp-lands, and for indemnity for swamp-lands, $15,000.

Mr. RYAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the following paragraphs relating to the survey of the public lands be passed over for the present, and we proceed to the consideration of the paragraphs under the heading of "Indian affairs," with the understanding that we shall return to the preceding paragraphs when the bill is concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK. That takes all the paragraphs from line 1338 to line 1377. When the bill is concluded we can return to these paragraphs for the survey of the public lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend a sum, not exceeding $2,500, out of the accumulated fund in the Treasury belonging to the Winnebago tribes in Wisconsin, for the purpose of completing the census provided for in the act approved January 18, 1881.

That $1,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of presenting the question of jurisdiction to the United States Supreme Court, by habeas corpus proceedings, in the case of the United States against an Indian called Crow Dog, convicted in the first judicial district court of the Territory of Dakota for the crime of murder, in the killing of another Indian called Spotted Tail, including costs of transcript, printing the same, printing briefs, and counsel fees for said defendant.

Mr. CASWELL. I move the following amendment, to come in after line 1394.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the modification of the treaty and the agreement made with the Sioux Indians under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 7, 1882, is hereby approved, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to enter upon the execution of said treaty: Provided, That the title to lands for railroad purposes heretofore surveyed and paid for under agreements with said tribe, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, is confirmed in said companies.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not able to hear clearly the first portion of the amendment, and I ask that it be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve the point of order. If this is a continuation of any public work, that is to say, a continuation of legislation heretofore enacted, I presume it will be in order. Waiving the point of order for the present, I hope information will be given to the committee as to the nature of that treaty. I was unaware it had even been published.

Mr. CASWELL. I will with great pleasure give the gentleman the information he asks so far as I have been able to obtain it.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as the point of order is pending the Chair hopes it will be applied to it, showing this is in continuation of such public work as is already in progress.

Mr. CASWELL. Do I understand the point of order is pressed?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve it until I have some information as to the nature of this treaty.

Mr. CASWELL. I wish to state to the committee that if gentlemen understood the exact situation of this treaty there is not one on this floor who would raise the slightest objection to this amendment.

Indeed, it is of vast importance that this treaty should be confirmed. At the last session of Congress we made a small appropriation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate this treaty with these Indians in Dakota Territory. There are about 25,000 Indians. They occupy a large tract of country right in the center of Dakota, a tract twice the size as the State of Indiana, being some 34,000 square miles. We authorized a commission to make a treaty with these Indians as between the tribe and the Government. There are five bands of these Dakota Indians. They are broken up, discordant, and quarreling among themselves. Each desires to be settled on separate portions of this reservation. They have ceded under this treaty to the United States about one-half of that reservation, leaving to themselves some 17,000 square miles of land, equivalent to about three-quarters of a section for each soul. They cede a like quantity to the United States. Surveys have been made. The several tracts of land have been set off (as will be seen by the colored portions of this map) which are to be occupied by the different bands of Indians. This treaty is said by the Secretary of the Interior to be very beneficial both to the Indians and to the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the main purposes of the treaty?

Mr. CASWELL. That the Indians shall settle on their separate portions of the reservation in severalty. There are five bands of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are to be five reservations, then?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes; five reservations. The Government of the United States is to pay to them for these lands 25,000 cows, to be delivered in that country where they are herding cattle, and a thousand bulls, with a view to leading them to engage in stock-raising, and if possible to civilize them. No money is to be paid to them. These cows are to be purchased from time to time and delivered to them as they settle down. It is thought to be very beneficial.

Unless this treaty is ratified all this labor will be lost, and these Indians will be left roaming over this vast tract of country without making settlement. In addition let me say this tract of country lies in the center of Dakota. It is excellent land, nearly all of it. Railway companies have already projected lines across it to Deadwood, a distance of one hundred and eighty miles. They have already selected their right of way.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me for a moment I will make this suggestion: That as there are two points in this bill which will doubtless involve considerable discussion, and also the question of a quorum, one being in reference to the surveys of the public lands and the other the pending clause, that the committee now rise informally, and that the order of the House providing for a recess to-night at half-past 5 o'clock until 7.30 be rescinded, and then we will sit until 6 o'clock and go on with the balance of the bill; in the meantime to recur to those clauses after the remainder of the bill is concluded.

Mr. CASWELL. Let me complete one sentence and make a single statement first.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin is nearly exhausted.

Mr. CASWELL. I merely want to add that this matter came before the Committee on Appropriations at the request of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, as I understand it, has their unanimous approval. Hence we took it in hand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the order providing for a recess to-night from half past 5 o'clock until half past 7 be rescinded for this day.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, before submitting the motion, to lay before the House a letter from the National Academy of Sciences and some executive communications.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following letter from the National Academy of Sciences:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 14, 1883.

SIR: In conformity with the requirements of the act of incorporation approved March 3, 1863, I have the honor to submit herewith a report of the operations of the National Academy of Sciences during the past year.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. C. MARSH,
Acting President of the National Academy of Sciences.

To the honorable THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt whether this communication, which is accompanied as stated with the report of the National Academy of Sciences, should be first referred to the Committee on Printing, or whether under the law it can now be ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN HORN. Under the law it should be ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, I object to that; let it be referred.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Printing can examine into the matter later for the purpose of determining that question. The letter and accompanying papers will therefore be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRECIOUS METALS, UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Director of the Mint upon the statistics of the production of precious metals for the year 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

TEST OF CERTAIN INVENTIONS, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending an appropriation of $1,000 to enable inquiries to be made concerning certain inventions; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. KASSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, on which the point of order has been made.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the portion of the bill to which this amendment is offered be passed over informally to be returned to hereafter, and that we proceed to that part of the bill making appropriations for the Geological Survey.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Before that is done, I have an amendment which I would like to offer and have printed in the RECORD upon that part of the bill which it is now proposed to pass over informally. I ask that the amendment to which I refer may be printed in the RECORD in connection with some letters accompanying it.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MAGINNIS is as follows:

Add as a new section to the bill:

"For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to examine into the grievances and to reconcile the differences of the various Indian tribes in the Territory of Montana, and to make such modifications of existing treaties or agreements and to make such new agreements as may be deemed desirable by the various tribes of Indians in Montana on the one side and the Secretary of the Interior on the other, $10,000: Provided, That any such agreement shall not take effect until ratified by Congress.

The communications referred to by Mr. MAGINNIS are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 15, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I inclose a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, transmitting with my approval the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending the appointment of a commission to settle the grievances and differences of the Montana Indians. I should be glad to have you lay these papers before the committee.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. MARTIN MAGINNIS,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 15, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommending an appropriation in the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to examine into grievances and to reconcile the differences of the various Indian tribes in the Territory of Montana and pay the expense thereof; also inclosing a draught of an item to be included in the sundry civil bill providing for that purpose.

The measure has my approval, and the appropriation requested is respectfully recommended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK,
Chairman House Committee on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 15, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference, of a letter from Hon. MARTIN MAGINNIS, dated the 13th instant, in which he states that it is absolutely necessary to take immediate action looking toward a permanent settlement of the Indians in Montana, and to reconcile difficulties which may result in serious trouble, and with that end in view he requests that the necessary steps be taken for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of negotiating with the several tribes in that Territory.

If the Indians desire to enter into negotiations for the modifications of existing treaties and agreements, I know of no objections to such proceedings.

I inclose a draught of an item to be attached to the sundry civil bill providing for the appointment of a commission for the purpose indicated, and appropriating the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expense incident thereto, with the recommendation that the same be transmitted to Congress with the request for favorable action thereon.

The letter of Mr. MAGINNIS is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

The honorable THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to offer an amendment to this portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 1400:

"That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause to be sold all the lands now belonging to the North Carolina Eastern Band of Cherokees outside of the boundary known as the 'Quella Boundary,' situate in the State of North Carolina. And that the proceeds of such sale shall constitute a fund in the hands of said Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be devoted to the use of said Eastern Band for educational and such other purposes as their situation, necessities, and expenditures may require."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. VANCE. If the gentleman from New York will hear a statement, I think he will not press the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am very sure that I will. I have investigated this Cherokee matter thoroughly.

Mr. VANCE. This has nothing to do with the Western Cherokees. It is a local matter recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Indian Committee. It is a matter of great importance to these people.

Mr. WILSON. As this part of the bill is to be informally passed over, let the amendment go into the RECORD, and we can examine it hereafter.

Mr. VANCE. Very well; I have no objection to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point of order is still reserved against it.

It is understood that the point of order is still pending against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order has not been withdrawn. It was reserved by the gentleman from Indiana.

If there be no objection, that portion of the bill relating to the Indian affairs to which the gentleman from New York refers will be informally passed over, to be returned to after the remainder of the bill shall have been completed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read lines 1401 to 1417, as follows:

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $259,080. And there may be expended therefrom for the engraving of maps (in order that they may remain in the possession of the Government) and the necessary expenses thereof, $25,000; and for the engraving of illustrations on wood and the necessary expenses thereof, $6,000, said work of engraving to be done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1409 and 1410 strike out "$259,080" and insert "$240,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer this amendment because the amount given by this bill is about that difference in excess of the estimates.

Mr. BAYNE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not understand that to be the fact.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing to give all the estimate calls for.

Mr. ELLIS. If the gentleman will do this, if he will change every clause of these paragraphs so as to give the whole estimate, I will agree with him.

Mr. HISCOCK. My motion is about right. It simply reduces the appropriations to the aggregate of the estimates as contained in the Book of Estimates. Let it be at the amount of the estimates. Do not put it above that.

Mr. ELLIS. I will consent very cheerfully if the gentleman will give the estimates throughout in all the paragraphs.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say we have got in this bill the aggregate of the estimates. It is put in a different form from what is contained in the Book of Estimates, because our appropriations are made in detail.

Mr. ROBESON. That is so.

Mr. BLACKBURN rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will allow this to be done with the view of perfecting the text by reducing the amount so as to make it $240,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not agree to that, because I want this Committee of the Whole, before it goes further, to understand it is dealing with a matter on which—although I attribute no such purpose to the gentleman from New York—it is very liable to be misled.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not want any one to be misled.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said you did not.

Mr. HISCOCK. And no one will be misled by me. I want simply to reduce the amount covered by the bill to the amount of the estimates as the text of the bill, and then let amendments be predicated upon that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And that I do not want to agree to, because I want to reduce the amount $100,000 more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now offer a further amendment to this clause to strike out the figures just inserted, which I ask the Clerk to read, and to insert $222,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1409 and 1410 strike out "$240,000" and insert "$222,000."

Mr. BLACKBURN. In support of that amendment I desire to say but one word. If gentlemen of this committee will notice carefully, under the very innocent phraseology employed in this paragraph in lines 1405 and 1406 they will find covered appropriations which year by year are swelled until there is not a gentleman upon this floor who can tell whether it takes $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 to meet the demands. The words to which I call attention run as follows:

And to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States.

When the sundry civil bill was pending last year a proposition was made to authorize the carrying of the geological survey into all the States of the Union. It was resisted upon various grounds. First the enormous expense that would necessarily attend the effort. Secondly, the absence of any authority whatever to authorize such a work excepting in two States where the United States Government held public lands. The proposition was pressed and it was beaten. And the very thing which I have quoted from this paragraph of the bill was then resorted to under which, as a guise, the authorities in charge have claimed since the passage of that bill to be authorized to carry the geological survey into every State of this Union whether the public domain was there or not; and that in the face of the express declaration of the officer in charge of it made to the committee of conference when it was in dispute, that such was not the purpose and would not be the construction of the law.

Now, if you mean to make a complete geological survey of the thirty-eight States in this Union I speak inside the mark when I say $50,000,000 will not do it and one hundred millions of money will scarce suffice. I appeal to you and demand of you to show me the warrant and the authority in the Constitution of this country for such an appropriation as that. I grant you that you have the right and it is your duty to make a survey of the public domain in this country. But you have neither the authority nor the warrant, nor in my humble judgment will the object justify you, in undertaking to enter upon a gigantic expenditure like this.

I find that for the present fiscal year the sum of $222,000 was appropriated. The estimate for this year is $389,000. The proposition as it reads in the text of the bill originally is to appropriate $323,000. Reduced by the amendment of the gentleman from New York the amount will be $304,000. I ask now, why jump nearly $100,000 over the bill of the present year in this paragraph except it be explained upon the theory that it is a concession of $100,000 increase as compared with the present year for the illicit purpose that has been introduced into that paragraph, carrying the geological survey into every State in this Union without regard to the location of public domain under the specious guise of preparing or continuing the preparation of a geological map of the United States?

I warn this committee that trouble with the Senate is coming if they do this. For the conferees who met us from the other end of the Capitol have already told me since this bill was prepared to report to the House that it was an imposition, bad faith, and a repudiation of an implied if not an express agreement. You see the first fruits of it in an increase of $100,000 in round numbers, as compared with the act for the present year, when you come to consider the recommendations of the bill I hold in my hand.

If this Congress is prepared or this country is prepared, without warrant or authority either in Constitution or law, to undertake the gigantic and stupendous work of making a full geological survey of all the States in this Union without regard to public or national domain being located there, if you are ready to inaugurate that system which is to be counted by millions if not hundreds of millions of expenditure, then I simply ask that you will be fair enough to come out from under cover and state upon the face of your bill what it is you propose to do with the money.

Mr. ROBESON. The Committee on Appropriations by a very large majority voted to put this full amount in the bill. To-day we have agreed without dissent to reduce the amount to the estimates made by the proper Department. This sum is necessary, if this work is to go on; $240,000 is not a large sum.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Three hundred and four thousand dollars.

Mr. ROBESON. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars. I thought my friend was working from a wrong standpoint.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I took the figures as I heard the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. The aggregate of all the appropriations is about $303,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I am not incorrect. I am exactly correct.

Mr. ROBESON. Does all this come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It certainly comes out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. ROBESON. The amount appropriated for all the purposes of the survey in this bill is $303,000. The amount originally recommended in this paragraph of the bill for the doing of this work is $259,000. We have put it down to $240,000.

Now, the objects of this survey are, first, to establish accurately and beyond the power of dispute the initial lines and standpoints from which the surveys of the public lands are to be made, from which the boundaries of States, the lines of counties, the lines of townships, and from that point the lines of individual possessions are to be fixed by accurate and lasting surveys. That one object would far more than repay to this country and to this people all the expenditure contemplated by this clause.

The second object is to give to the country the topography of these lands. That includes the possibility of their settlement, the lines of their streams, the altitudes of their mountains, the possibilities of penetrating into these lands by railways and by roads.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will my friend from New Jersey allow me a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How does that apply to a State within whose borders the Federal Government does not hold a foot of land?

Mr. ROBESON. If my friend will pardon me, I will reach that part of the subject directly.

We determine the condition of these lands and their status; we determine their topography; we determine their availability for settlement, and for the purposes of the great progress of the country. We determine their geological structure and show their mineral wealth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. I thank the gentleman. We determine their geological structure, showing what they will produce under cultivation, for what the soil is adapted, what mineral wealth is beneath that soil, where the coal, the iron, the gold and silver are to be found.

Mr. DUNN. And where the fertilizers are.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, where the fertilizers are. Then, after having determined all that and ascertained the means of entering them, the streams that flow over them, we can determine their value. This is for the benefit of that civilization which follows the sun across our continent and which, when it shall cease, I hope will go down with all the glories of the declining orb of day.

I will say that there are certain States in this Union which have public lands within their borders for which these surveys are to be made. Those public lands are within the scope of this survey and properly so, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will not deny it.

There are other States which have not these public lands, but they were original proprietors of public lands, and do not desire to be deprived of the benefits of this great national enterprise merely because they have given up their public lands for the purpose of national improvement.

If I properly understand it, this is about the best appropriation contained in this bill for the interest of the progress and development of this country. It not only will contribute to the general sum of human knowledge by the researches which will be made, will make this addition to science and to learning, but it will reveal to us what our country is worth, give to us all these riches of the present, and all these possibilities of the future.

When I look upon this appropriation of $240,000 to be applied to this great work, I can but recall the story which Macaulay tells of that Eastern dervish who gave up willingly the camels loaded with gold and silver to his more greedy but less thoughtful comrades and reserved to himself only that box of mysterious use which revealed to his knowledge all the hidden treasures of the world.

What is the sum of $240,000 compared to the practical application of the scientific knowledge and investigation which will reveal to us and to our children all the wealth which God has bestowed upon this great country?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Allow me just one moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want to say a word now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I only want to submit some figures. As the gentleman from New York has had his time extended, I take it for granted I will not be denied time to reply.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman will have full time. When this question was before the committee last year I discussed it upon its merits, and I must say I was suprised that the committee voted to increase the sum recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for this purpose.

I can understand a theory which will spend the money of the Government for the purpose of developing the resources of the country; I can understand the philosophy which would appropriate the public money to investigate the mineral resources which belong to the United States; but I could not then, and I can not now, understand, or at least I can not appreciate as a member of this House the wisdom of the policy that would take the money of the Government and apply it to the purpose of investigating the lands of private individuals in order to find out how much hidden wealth is contained in them.

I concurred last year most heartily in the views expressed upon this floor by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Although I have been beaten upon this question in Committee of the Whole, and also in the Committee on Appropriations, yet I have not been convinced. It is well to talk about the wealth which we may discover for our posterity and the posterity of our neighbors and friends, but I believe that corporations and individuals that own private property which would be benefited by the expenditure of this appropriation if left to themselves would discover that wealth for their own posterity.

It is barely possible that we may be justified in the expenditure of public money to develop private property under certain circumstances, upon the theory that there is to be a large benefit to the United States derived from it. But those circumstances involve this fact: that it would not be developed without such expenditure of the public money.

I, for one, am thoroughly convinced that if not a single dollar of this appropriation was voted private capital and private enterprise would explore the bowels of the earth and exhibit to the sunlight all the wealth that will be developed by means of the expenditure of this appropriation.

There is only one thing that reconciles me to this—I withdraw the word "reconcile"—I am not even for that cause reconciled to it. There is but one thing in connection with it that renders it humorous to me; that is, that gentlemen on the other side of the House, almost without exception, save the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, are in favor of this proposition. They are ready to abandon their own doctrine of State rights, to repudiate their own theory that the public money should not be expended for private or even for State purposes; and now they come here trampling their old theories under foot and crying out for an appropriation of the public money to develop their own private interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, for one I thank the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] for what he has said.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would say more if I had another five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman can have my time if he wishes.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I had more time I would not fail to say that I honor and shall continue to honor the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that on this question he stands by the principles which have guided him in the past.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I threw the gage down fairly and asked that any advocate of this proposition would cite to us any warrant or authority in the Constitution for such an expenditure of the public money. The able gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] saw fit to answer in doubly extended time; but that proposition he never yet has deigned to notice. If you have the right to take money from the Federal Treasury for the——

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman will permit me I wish to say that I did not forget to answer. The real answer which I meant to give was in asking the gentleman whether the currents of rivers, the veins of coal and other minerals, and the ledges of precious metals are bounded by State lines?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is no answer to my proposition. The gentleman from New Jersey is not to be blamed for such an answer; for with all his astuteness, all his culture, all his recognized professional ability as a constitutional lawyer, neither he nor any other man can answer the question successfully. There is no warrant to be found in the Constitution for this raid upon the public Treasury to make geological surveys of States in which this Government does not own one foot of land, so that the expenditure must inure to the benefit of States or individuals—no one else.

I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] for having stated, and stated better than I could, the grounds upon which we place our objection to this appropriation, and for having called the committee back to the figures embraced in this bill.

I have offered no radical amendment. I have not sought to cripple this service in the slightest degree. I have simply moved to adopt as an amendment the provision of the law to the present fiscal year. The estimates made for this service for last year's bill amounted to $389,700. The appropriations made in that bill were $222,000. That was the aggregate for this service. The recommendation of the present bill is $323,000, which, reduced by the amendment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stands on record now for adoption by the Committee of the Whole at $304,000, as against $222,000 carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the current fiscal year. I ask, whence this increase? For what purpose do you ask it? To what purpose do you propose to appropriate it? No man, from the officer who made the estimate down to the lowest clerk in his division—no man upon this floor—can offer any explanation except that the money appropriated in the clause I have read—lines 1405 and 1406—is to be used "to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States." That language is meaningless; it bears upon its face nothing to guide this House as to the purpose of the appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we may now agree on the time to which this debate shall be limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to pass from side to side in the recognition of members; but will now recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who rises, as the Chair understands, for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that debate——

Mr. ATKINS. You can not get unanimous consent now to cut off debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I only want to fix a time. I will be liberal. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee want?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know that I want any.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations requests that by common consent debate be limited to thirty minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not object in time. The Chair was waiting for objection, but the conversation among gentlemen went on.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk-Horn Valley and Missouri River Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the debate is limited on the paragraph and all the amendments thereto to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the committee.

Mr. ELLIS. I objected to that and objected in time.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair asked whether there was objection to limiting the debate to thirty minutes he made the usual pause, and as there was no objection at that time he said it was ordered accordingly. The gentleman from Louisiana and others were engaged in conversation. No objection was made at the time.

Mr. ELLIS. I distinctly said I do not consent to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to say that after the order had been entered. If the gentleman now states that he objected before the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. ANDERSON. I heard him.

Mr. ELLIS. I said so before the arrangement was made.

Mr. BELFORD. I understood the Chair recognized me.

Mr. ELLIS. If you agree to make it forty minutes I will not object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will if you will go on with it to-night.

Mr. ATKINS. We do not wish to go on with it to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any agreement?

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that all further debate on this paragraph and pending amendments be limited to forty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that proposition. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly, and debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to forty minutes.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does that contemplate adjournment at 6 o'clock, and going on with this in the morning, or finishing it to-night?

The CHAIRMAN. It is subject to the rising of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I take it that the forty minutes will be used now, or, if we should now rise, when the committee is again in session.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not affect the power of the committee to rise. The Chair understands the pro forma amendments are withdrawn.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move in line 1404, after the word "mineral," to insert the words "agricultural and other industrial," so it will read:

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For the United States Geological Survey: For the geological survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral, agricultural and other industrial resources and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, &c.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that amendment is so perfectly fair when the public domain is under consideration that it ought to be accepted by the chairman of the committee. If but one-fifteenth part of the benefits result from this Geological Survey which the gentleman from New Jersey indicates, then it is certainly well the bill itself should define that this survey shall inform us as to the agricultural and other industrial resources of the public domain. I am frank to say I have a glimmering idea there is a great deal of altitudinous poppycock about this Geological Survey business. If what the gentleman from New Jersey has stated be taken as a fair indication of the true work of this Geological Survey, then the word "geological" is a misnomer, because a survey of the geological resources of the country can not fairly and properly include one-half of that information which he suggests as sought to be obtained by this survey.

Furthermore, if it is intended to build up a new department, which new department shall have for its purpose a survey of the resources of the States, then that is another thing. If that is sought to be done, it should not be adopted under the guise of a geological survey of the public domain. But if this survey is really to be of the public domain, then, in addition to the geology of the public domain and as being of infinitely greater moment than the geological structure underrunning the public domain, should be information as to agricultural capacity, as to water-power, as to the mineral resources, or, in other words, something practical. A geological survey carries with it high scientific ideas in contradistinction to that class of information which men in a new territory look for in respect to the capacity of that territory.

Mr. Chairman, this is intended to be one thing or the other. If it is intended to be a bona fide survey of the public domain, then these men should be compelled to give us information as to the agricultural and other industrial resources of it. If on the other hand it is intended to be a geological survey of the States, it has no business to be here, in my judgment, before this committee. If that is the point, I am ready to vote to strike the whole thing out for the simple reason that the States of the Union can do that for themselves.

The State of New Jersey has money enough to burrow down under its sand and mosquitoes and get to the general geological structure underrunning it.

The State of Pennsylvania has money enough of its own for this purpose. If this is to be a geological survey of States, then let gentlemen say so and I shall vote against it. If it is to be a survey of the public domain of this country, then in the name of common sense, in addition to that geological information, in addition to that high scientific duty which you are going to impose upon the men that you here provide for, let them also examine and give to these people who have gone there and developed this western country, let them give to the frontiersman, to the homesteader, the man who develops the milling resources of the West, some of the information which they need to enable them to be properly guided.

And, Mr. Chairman, I can not forbear calling attention to this one contrast, that when there was asked a hundred additional clerks in order to turn out your contested cases in the General Land Office the Committee on Appropriations failed to give that number or to make any provision for any of them because, forsooth, they would have to hire another building. But when you come here asking for a geological survey they largely overrun the estimates. You did not give an additional clerk in the Land Office, but you gladly overrun the estimates for the Geological Survey; and I call the attention of this committee and the country to the contrast between these items in the bill.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I always admired an agricultural statesman. He is generally on one side of the field when we discuss tariff and free trade; but he is always in the middle of the field when his special interests are concerned. That may be regarded, I suppose, as disinterested patriotism. [Laughter.]

What is the object and the subject of this paragraph in this bill? It is, sir, to survey the public lands of this country; to ascertain their worth and wealth in coal and iron, in gold and silver, in copper and in nickel; and yet this distinguished gentleman from Kansas who has just addressed the committee, who seems to float on the top of a spear of oats or to smell the aroma of a head of wheat in all of his expressions upon this floor, is voting for their interest in this House.

I desire to say something that has grown out of my own practical experience and personal knowledge of affairs in connection with this matter in the West. I know that these geological surveys have been of vast, of immeasurably vast, of infinite advantage to the pioneers who have made great States and built up thrifty communities where a desert has heretofore existed. I know that the hardy miner who has been covered with buckskin has taken the map issued by the Government of the United States and indicated upon its face the location of these mines, and from that and in the light of this "science," as the gentleman from Kansas calls it, he has gone on into the wilderness and discovered mines that have poured into the lap of the people of this country treasures untold, millions and millions of dollars. That is what these hardy pioneers of civilization and the march of progress in the West have done.

I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to ascertaining the amount of water supply in that country. We have unfortunately an immense amount of it at Cincinnati now, and a large surplus at Cairo and other points on the rivers there. I said the other day here that for the last four weeks I was paying 40 cents a barrel for water. I got a letter from one of my little kids the other day and he said that it had gone up to a dollar a barrel. [Laughter.] I would like to extend this thing up to the point at least of ascertaining the possibilities of getting water on the arid plains of this region. There is a vast region of country there that may not now be occupied by man or animal because of the want of water, but this is still a region that must in time be occupied by the citizens of this Republic. It is a vast, an immense country in itself, where the highest statesmanship of this Republic must center in the solution of the great question of bringing the empty hands and the empty lands together.

But when these surveys have been so advantageous in the development of the mineral interests of the country and in the advancement of all of its material prosperity, I say that we should stand solidly by the recommendations made by the Committee on Appropriations, and say God speed to the achievements of science and to the victories of the General Government whose beneficent influence contemplates the advancement of all of its individual citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2490) to change the name of the First National Bank of West Greenville, Pennsylvania, to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania;

Joint resolution (S. R. 137) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 347) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Godlove S. Orth;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 349) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, of Illinois; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 356) accepting the invitation of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, to attend the inauguration of the statue of Joseph Henry.

SEA-WALL, GOVERNOR'S ISLAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 19th instant, inclosing a copy of one from Major George L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, dated the 15th instant, referring to the insufficiency of the sum, $39,000, appropriated by the sundry civil bill of August 7, 1882, for building the sea-wall on Governor's Island, New York Harbor, together with a copy of the indorsement of the Chief Engineer, showing the necessity for an additional appropriation of $15,000 for this purpose. The Secretary of War recommends that said additional sum of $15,000 be appropriated at the present session of Congress for the object stated.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 20, 1883.

PRE-EMPTION AND HOMESTEAD LAWS.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4993) to repeal the laws allowing the pre-emption of the public lands and amending the homestead law be taken from the House Calendar and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with power to report it with or without amendments as an amendment to the bill making provision for the sundry civil expenses of the Government. The bill is for the purpose of preventing frauds in connection with the public lands.

Mr. ELLIS. I suggest that the bill had better be read.

Mr. RYAN. It is the same that we have reported.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not insist on the reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of dealers in butter and cheese of the city of New York, for passage of bill to regulate the exportation of articles made in imitation of butter and cheese—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. C. BURROWS: Two petitions, signed by the keeper and crew of life-saving station No. 10, and of merchants, owners, and masters of vessels of Saint Joseph, Michigan, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—severally to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. S. S. FARWELL: The petition of Joseph M. Carriere; of Elisha Andrews; of T. J. Bird; of A. H. Castille, administrator; of T. C. Dewilliers, jr.; of Andrew D. Mayer; of William G. Knox; of Wesley Steen; of Charles C. Pickett; of A. J. Norwood and Joseph E. Norwood; of James Ray, administrator; of John Posey, administrator; of John Fahey; of Clement Hollier, jr.; of Joseph P. Colamb; of Francis L. Petre, administrator; of Charles Bertrand; of Saint Anne L. Fontenot; of Louis Guidry, administrator; of Adolph Stagg; of Agnor Sessassier, administrator; of Philip Stagg; of H. Fontenot, administrator of O. L. Petre; of D. P. Lafleur; of Henry Young, sr., administrator; of Henry Young, sr.; of A. L. Petre; of Andrew Meche; of Julia G. Wikoff, administratrix; of John B. Ardoin; of Etienne Daigle; of John Roy; of Edgar T. Vanhille; of Jacob Lyons; of L. Guillory and Q. Q. Guillory; of Theo. S. Richard, administrator; of Jesse Behm; of M. Lafleur, jr., administrator; of Joseph E. Daigle; of Francois Mourland; of Joseph Rayon; and of Alex. Burnet—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FLOWER: The petition of the Maritime Association of New York, protesting against the proposed transfer of the Signal Service from the War Department to the Department of the Interior—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation Company of New York, asking for repeal of all internal-revenue taxation, except on tobacco, beer, and distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey, for relief and protection to citizens along the seacoast of New Jersey from fishing with purse-seines—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. H. S. HARRIS: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey, asking for relief from steam-yacht menhaden fishing with purse-seines along the coast of New Jersey—to the same committee.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of 75 citizens of Michigan, for the enactment of a general bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. R. M. McLANE: The petition of the Maryland Academy of Science, protesting against the transfer of the Signal Service from the War Department to the Department of the Interior—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PRESCOTT: Paper relating to the pension claim of Orinel Gillette—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROSS: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey, asking relief from steam-yacht menhaden fishing with purse-seines along the coast of New Jersey—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of D. B. Ford and others, for the establishment of a mail-route—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the resolutions adopted by the Legislature of North Carolina urging the return of certain taxes collected from the State in 1865-'66—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina urging the improvement of Bay River, North Carolina, &c.—to the same committee.

By Mr. WATSON: The petition of J. D. Smith and 8 others, protesting against the extension of the Roberts torpedo patent—to the Committee on Patents.

The following memorials and petitions relating to tariff legislation were presented and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. W. R. COX: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of North Carolina.

By Mr. ERRETT: Of workingmen employed in iron and steel works at Pittsburgh, and of certain lodges of amalgamated iron-workers of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. HUMPHREY: Of L. Smith and others, citizens of Douglas County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. TUCKER: Of citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia.

By Mr. VANCE: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of North Carolina.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 22, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 8 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SLATER presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 5.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully ask your honorable body to make the necessary appropriation for the erection of a light-house at the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon.

Your memorialists represent that the mouth of the Umpqua River affords a safe and commodious harbor for vessels of the capacity annually employed in the carrying trade of this coast, as your memorialists believe; that it is of easy access from the head of the Umpqua Valley, being but thirty-five miles from the railroad and Umpqua Valley to the navigable waters of the said river. That the distance is traversed by a wagon-road, through a comparatively level pass in the Coast Range of mountains, by means of which the river and the valley have a close and constant intercourse, and, in the judgment of your memorialists, this natural outlet to the waters of the Pacific is destined to become one of the principal highways for the commerce of the Umpqua Valley.

There are a large number of small vessels running upon the coast of this State carrying valuable lives, and during every winter season many of them are wrecked and missing, and, in the opinion of your memorialists, these dangers and losses might be greatly lessened by the erection of light-houses at suitable points. Vessels that are caught in the terrible gales so frequent here during winter are compelled often to ride the storm or go to the bottom, when a beacon to mark the entrance to this river would enable them to find shelter.

To vessels going up and down the coast a light-house at this place would be of incalculable benefit. These are often beset by fogs and drifted by currents and gales from their course, and under such circumstances the mariner can truly appreciate how good it is to see a light.

Your memorialists would further represent that there are two large steam saw-mills near the mouth of said Umpqua River, and several salmon fisheries, and to carry the products of which there is a line of vessels continuously plying between San Francisco and the said mouth of the Umpqua River.

Your memorialists therefore most earnestly pray that such an appropriation as may be necessary for the erection of a light-house at the mouth of the Umpqua River may be made by your honorable body.

Adopted by the house October 9, 1882.

GEO. W. McBRIDE,
Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate October 9, 1882.

W. J. McCONNELL,
President of the Senate.

Mr. SLATER presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1 praying for aid to encourage a railroad company to construct a railroad from the seaboard to The Dalles, commencing at Crescent City, at the seaboard, thence to Rogue River Valley, Jacksonville, Jackson County, thence to Prineville, thence to The Dalles, in Wasco County.

Resolved by the house (and senate concurring), That the annexed memorial be directed to the Senators and Representatives of Oregon in Congress assembled, and that they be instructed to urge upon Congress early action thereon:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that Southern and Eastern Oregon and the northern portion of California, a country that has been settled for nearly thirty years, shut out from any market or outlet for their produce, a large agricultural and stock and mining country, with large and rich valleys, rich in their productions, while the mountains are covered with forests of cedar, fir, spruce, sugar pine, maple, ash, and oak, and possess vast deposits of coal, iron, and cinnabar of value beyond estimate, it is absolutely necessary for a railroad to begin at the seaboard, at Crescent City, Northwestern California; thence to The Dalles, in Oregon, which would be one of the most useful railroads on the Pacific coast, running through and over a rough, mountainous country, which is near six hundred miles in length and expensive road to build. That while we respect the efforts being made to retrench upon public expenditures, yet we fully believe a liberal appropriation and donation to encourage a company to take hold of said line to construct a railroad would cause thousands of acres of Government lands to be settled that never will be unless there is a railroad built. To take mines and other resources into consideration, the money thus appropriated would soon be repaid back to the Government for its aid. We earnestly pray Congress to donate every odd section of Government land for five miles on each side of the road line, so that it may be ten miles wide, including the odd sections only, and nothing in the memorial to be so construed as to apply to land that has been settled and held under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States at the time of the commencement of the construction of the railroad; and we further ask Congress to appropriate $70,000 to be used in constructing the work of the road.

Trusting to the justice of our petition, your petitioners will ever pray for a favorable and speedy consideration of the same.

Adopted by the house September 25, 1882.

GEO. W. McBRIDE,
Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate October 9, 1882.

W. J. McCONNELL,
President of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a memorial of writers of books, remonstrating against the reduction of the existing tariff of 25 per cent. laid on books, signed by E. V. Smalley, H. E. Scudder, and by Edmund C. Stedman, the latter of whom says: "In the absence of an international copyright law, I am compelled to sign this." As the bill has passed the Senate, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department. I submit a report now upon that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed under the rule.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2471) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint Dr. A. Sidney Tebbs an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2502) to extend the provisions of the act of March 2, 1855, to lands selected as swamp lands by the State of Louisiana under the act of March 2, 1849; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McPHERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2503) to change the name of the steam-tug Zouave to that of William Hogencamp; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FISH AND FISHERIES REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882 be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882 be printed, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 copies for sale by the Public Printer at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

DUPLICATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to bind duplicate sets of bills and resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, said bills and resolutions to be furnished him from the files of the Senate document-room, and the volumes when bound to be kept there for reference.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. Some years ago the Senate, not very wisely I think, ordered that all the accumulated bills and reports that were in the document-room should be sold for waste paper, reserving ten copies to be bound. The object of the resolution is to continue that compilation.

Mr. HOAR. What is the present number that we reserve?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think ten sets.

Mr. MORRILL. Ten would not be any too much for the different libraries.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will modify the resolution so as to read "a number equal to the number of preceding Congresses."

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he designs to have it indexed? The compilation would not be of service without an index for reference.

Mr. ANTHONY. They are indexed in the Journals. These are the bills that are left over.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island to let the resolution lie over, so as to ascertain what the present number is that we reserve, and have that inserted in it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over for the present.

THE PORTLAND EXTENSION.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire whether the extension of the building known as "The Portland" is being erected upon any portion of the adjacent public reservation, and if so by what authority.

CATTLE SHIPMENTS TO CUBA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to institute negotiations with the Government of Spain for the restitution of the money unlawfully taken from Captain James McKay and others, shippers of cattle from Key West, Florida, to the Island of Cuba.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GARLAND. If there is no further morning business, I ask to take up the resolution which I submitted yesterday.

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that may excite debate.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the Secretary read it as modified. I have made a slight modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. GARLAND was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to examine into the works now in progress for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, and the methods employed in making such improvements, and the contracts touching the same, and the application of the appropriations made by Congress for that purpose.

Also, all matters pertaining to and the feasibility of the outlet system for the improvement of said river.

Also, in the improvement made at the mouth of said river, the system of jetties, and the extent to which the same have facilitated the navigation of the river to the Gulf, their permanency, and the method now employed in the improvement thereof, and into all matters touching said improvement, the methods and effects thereof, and contracts touching the same.

The said committee may hold its sessions during the recess of Congress, at such places on said river or elsewhere as may be necessary for full inquiry into the matters above referred to, may send for persons and papers, examine on oath any of the persons employed on the Mississippi River Improvement Commission, or by the same and others if deemed necessary, including all river men and river residents.

The said committee shall report to the Senate the result of such inquiries at the earliest day practicable of the next session of Congress.

The actual expenses of said committee, including pay of a clerk and witness-fees, shall be paid out of the item of the contingent fund appropriated for "expenses of special and select committees" on vouchers therefor, duly approved by the chairman of said committee. And said committee shall have power to employ a stenographer, if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas what reason he thinks there is for the re-examination of that question. I understand that a committee last summer went down the river and examined very fully all classes of persons in reference to the matter, and that during this session of Congress they have had before them not only members of the Mississippi River Commission but gentlemen representing the outlet system. There has been a very full and exhaustive examination of the subject. I suppose we shall have access to all that evidence, and I confess I scarcely see the necessity for a re-examination of the question.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Indiana I presume was not in his seat, I do not remember that he was, yesterday when I submitted the resolution. I stated then the reasons I had for introducing it, which I will repeat now, and probably will add some others.

The committee of the House which was sent down has made no report. We know only of the existence of that committee and of what it has done from the public prints. It is evident now that if a report was made and printed we could do nothing with it at this Congress. I think as the House have had a committee of this sort and as no report has been made, it is proper for the Senate to have a committee to make this examination for itself. I can express no opinion as to the report of the committee of the House, because I have not seen it, and I do not know the line of their examination or of their investigation; but it is very certain, in view of the flood that is now coming upon that country, that an investigation of this character will be necessary if we expect to legislate at the next session of Congress. It is with a view of legislating then that I ask for this investigation.

As I said yesterday, I think the fault in Congress in creating the commission relative to this improvement has been, generally speaking, in not putting members of the Senate and of the House upon it, so that they might feel the responsibility of making their report at the next session of Congress, and that there might be some members upon it to defend that report and explain it when it came up. We have a Mississippi River Commission without any members of Congress of either House upon it; we have a committee of the House that has not yet made a report; and as it is hoped, if not expected, at least by some, that legislation will be had at the next session, I think the Senate should make an examination for itself and have a report by that time. That is the sole and the only purpose of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course we have no official information in reference to what was done by the committee of the House, but we all have been advised from the public prints of the fact that they made a tour down the river, stopping at various points on the river and examining witnesses, river-men and others who had views to express in reference to the question. They went to the mouth of the river and examined the jetties and the officers in charge of them. I think that during this winter every member of the Mississippi River Commission has been severely examined and cross-examined before that committee. While they have made no report as yet, I think we may safely expect a report, and in the accompanying evidence we shall have the views already expressed at great length of all those persons who would be summoned before a Senate committee; and it would be simply duplicating that testimony. But yet if the Senator from Arkansas feels that there is an interest to be subserved in this matter I do not desire to antagonize it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2490) to change the name of the First National Bank of West Greenville, Pennsylvania, to the First National Bank of Greenville, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 7193) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 347) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Godlove S. Orth;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 349) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses upon the life and character of Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, of Illinois;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 356) accepting the invitation of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institute to attend the inauguration of the statue of Joseph Henry; and Joint resolution (S. R. 137) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone the Calendar, my object being to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I now move to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] has a matter which he assures me will take no debate; and so also has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have several matters that ought not to take any debate and I have a bill already up waiting for the naval bill to get through. I only want a fair understanding whether there is to be a general scramble to get all our little bills through and to take just so much time, or whether we are going on with measures of great public importance until we get them disposed of. If the Senator from Maine wishes to give way I want him to give way to me as well.

Mr. HALE. Under these conditions, of course, it being important that the appropriation bills should be put through, and everybody, I suppose, shares in that feeling, I can not consent to give way if the Senator from Vermont insists on bringing other things in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do because I think it fair. We ought to do one thing at a time and have fair play.

Mr. JONAS. The bill which I desire to call up is a matter of some public importance, and it will take but a moment. It is a bill to provide for the sale of a Government arsenal and grounds. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and the General of the Army. It is Senate bill 2278.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist upon the regular order. There is just as much time after the naval bill is disposed of as there is before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Louisiana is not in order.

Mr. HALE. I can not, as the Senator from Louisiana sees, give way under these circumstances. I move that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached in their order in the reading. The Chair hears no objection to that course, and that will be the order of proceeding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose it is not necessary, but to guard against any misapprehension I wish every point of order about legislation, &c., to be reserved, so that it shall not be insisted that it is too late. I do not suppose that is necessary in the way we do business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A point of order can be raised at any time, but it saves great waste of time if it is made at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; but I did not wish to have anything lost if the bill should happen to be read over a place where a point of order could be made.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 9, before the word "rear-admirals," to strike out "eleven" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

For the pay of the Navy, for the active-list, namely: For one Admiral, one Vice-Admiral, ten rear-admirals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "masters," in line 12, to strike out the following clause, extending to line 21:

The title of which grade is hereby changed to that of lieutenants, and the masters now on the list shall constitute a junior grade of, and be commissioned as, lieutenants, having the same rank and pay as now provided by law for masters, but promotion to and from said grade shall be by examination as provided by law for promotion to and from the grade of master, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to increase the pay now allowed by law to any officer in the line or staff.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I inquire of the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if it has been the intention of the committee, and if that intention is embodied in the amendments, not to disturb in any way the status of any of the officers of the navy?

Mr. HALE. That is precisely the effect of the bill as reported from the committee with its various amendments. All legislation—and the House attempted several pieces of legislation—has been struck out by the report of the committee, leaving the bill a clean bill, covering appropriations for the maintenance of the old Navy, and separate and distinct items for the increase of the Navy in the latter portion of the bill, drawn apart and separated from the different bureaus, so that at a glance these two features may be seen by every Senator or by any person reading the bill. The status of no officer in the Navy as existing to-day is disturbed or meant to be disturbed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. VOORHEES. In regard to that amendment a statement has been placed in my hands which I shall ask the Secretary to read. This states the reason why the provision of the House bill should be stricken out much better than I can myself. I ask that the statement be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

REASONS WHY MIDSHIPMEN SHOULD BE MADE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS AT THE END OF THEIR SIX YEARS' COURSE.

1. There is no grade either in the Army or in any staff corps of the Navy corresponding to that of midshipman. The graduate of West Point, after a four years' course, is commissioned a second lieutenant (rank of ensign in the Navy, but greater pay); the graduate of the Naval Academy who enters a staff corps on the completion of his six years' course is given a commission and ranks with an ensign, receiving $1,700 per annum, while the ensign receives but $1,200; the civil appointee to a staff corps of the Navy receives a commission, $1,700 per annum, and a precedence in rank of six years.

2. The rank of midshipman in foreign navies corresponds in point of age and length of service with that of naval cadet in our Navy; their duties are of even a less responsible character than those of our naval cadets, and they are given commissions generally after four years' service, on passing a professional examination.

3. There are at present midshipmen on our Navy list who have been in the service nearly nine years, and many midshipmen now on the list can not hope to obtain commissions till they have been thirteen years in the service. During this time they perform the duties of ensigns, without enjoying the benefits of a commission, and are borne on the Navy Register under the anomalous title of "other persons," being neither commissioned nor warrant officers.

4. Under the present law the graduate of the Naval Academy who enters the engineer corps on the completion of the six years' course receives a commission as assistant engineer (relative rank of ensign), and a pay of $1,700 per annum, while a member of the same class who enters the line, though he be the highest graduate of the class, will remain for years a midshipman, an appointed officer, with a pay of $1,000 per annum.

5. It is the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, of a sub-committee of the House Naval Committee who investigated the subject, and generally of the officers of both the line and the staff of the Navy that midshipmen should be commissioned as ensigns on the completion of their six years' course.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will make no debate on this matter. I thought it proper to present these reasons, as they may be useful to the committee of conference which will necessarily have to pass on these amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after "midshipmen," in line 21, to strike out the following clause, extending to line 31:

The title of which grade is hereby changed to that of ensign, and the midshipmen now on the list shall constitute a junior grade of, and be commissioned as, ensigns, having the same rank and pay as now provided by law for midshipmen, but promotions to and from said grade shall be under the same regulations and requirements as now provided by law for promotion to and from the grade of midshipmen; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to increase the pay now allowed by law to any officer of said grade or of any officer of relative rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 34, after the word "shall," to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

Two assistant surgeons, not in the line of promotion (who shall hereafter, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive, as annual pay, when at sea, $2,100; when on shore duty, $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders, $1,600).

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge what is the signification of that term "hereafter?" Does it change the pay of the officers where the clause applies after date?

Mr. HALE. The object of inserting the word "hereafter" was to prevent the necessity every year of putting in this classification, so that it may run on under the general law which now exists, and not encumber every appropriation bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. No change in pay, then?

Mr. HALE. No change whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 43, after "cadet-engineers," to strike out "(graduates;)" so as to read:

Sixty-two cadet-engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 49, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That when vacancies occur hereafter in the Paymaster's Corps there shall be no original appointments to fill such vacancies, but promotions may be made according to existing regulations, from those remaining in said corps. Officers in the line shall be detailed to perform the duties of paymasters under the same rules and regulations as are now required of paymasters, but such officers shall not be entitled to increased compensation in consequence of performing such duties.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out from line 57 to line 74, inclusive, in the following words:

That the various boards constituted and provided by law for the examination (other than physical) of officers of the Navy for promotion to a higher grade in the service, shall conduct such examinations, as far as may be, in writing, and make a record thereof, and shall certify the same, and their conclusions thereon, under their hands and upon their honors. They shall prosecute and carry on such examinations strictly in all the branches and requirements necessary to the discharge of the duties of the higher grade, and particularly as to the professional fitness of the officer examined to perform all the duties of the higher grade at sea. That hereafter all the vacancies which shall occur in the various grades of the line and staff of the Navy shall be filled by promotion, as follows: For each two vacancies there shall be one promotion in each of the lower grades until such grade shall be reduced below the numbers fixed by the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to inquire of the Senator who has charge of this bill if he does not think it would be advisable to allow that portion of the paragraph which has just been read, commencing in the fifty-eighth line to the end of the paragraph, to remain?

Mr. HALE. I do not. It changes materially the existing law.

Mr. ROLLINS. Not as applied to the line. It simply puts the line and staff on the same footing.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire to have the bill, when we finish it, have any particle of legislation touching the organization of the Navy.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I would leave that elsewhere.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senator if it is not deemed important that the line and the staff in this regard should be treated exactly alike?

Mr. HALE. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that there are several provisions in the House bill that in themselves are to me commendable and good, but the committee has known no line to draw. It desires to have a plain, simple, unencumbered appropriation bill, and therefore it struck clean off all the legislative provisions of the House bill, because I know that if the committee first and the Senate afterward yields and adopts any of these provisions it opens the door wide to a vast sea of amendments that will be thrown upon us here, delaying the progress of the bill, and in the end making it a legislating bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. In the main I agree with the Senator from Maine, but I desire to ask him if he does not consider this one of the desirable things that should remain in the bill if any general legislation is contained therein?

Mr. HALE. I think the legislation of last year should be adapted to the staff corps as well as the line corps. I do not think this provision does it. I think this provision, if adopted, would materially lessen the effect and would debilitate the legislation of last year.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator may be right about that; but I am not certain. I desire to make this further inquiry: In this bill all general legislation has been stricken out on the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, by agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, do we simply put these provisions that are incorporated in the bill by the House in the hands of the conferees on the part of the Senate and House and simply give them the power to shape this as they please; or will the Committee on Appropriations consider themselves instructed to resist all the general legislation that has been ingrafted on the bill by the House of Representatives? That is the point at issue, because if the Senate is to have anything to say about the legislation on that subject, now is the time to say it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator must confront the situation as it is. He is an old Senator. He knows how it is that appropriation bills are finally passed. There is no way under the rules except that finally they go through the crucible of a conference committee of three members from each body. I can only say that the Committee on Appropriations is dead set and in earnest against legislation, and I shall be very glad when we come back with the conference report on this bill to be able to report that the House has receded from everything of legislation and allowed us to have a plain simple appropriation bill. I hope that will be the case, but I am by no means prepared to say that the Senate conferees can drive the House to that. We will do the best we can.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The whole matter will be before the Senate when the report of the conference committee is submitted.

Mr. HALE. Certainly. The conference committee can not pass any report.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from New Hampshire can have the opportunity of raising the whole question at that time.

Mr. ROLLINS. If we are to have any voice in this matter I think it is for the Senate rather than for the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out from line 58 to line 74.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 78, after the word "midshipman," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-two;" and in line 79, after the word "directors," to strike out "three surgeons-general;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of the retired-list, namely: For forty-six rear-admirals, twenty-one commodores, eleven captains, ten commanders, sixteen lieutenant-commanders, nine lieutenants, eleven masters, six ensigns, one midshipman, twenty-two medical directors, two medical inspectors, two surgeons, four passed assistant surgeons, seven assistant surgeons, seven pay-directors, two pay-inspectors, four paymasters, two passed assistant paymasters, one assistant-paymaster, ten chief engineers, twenty-one passed assistant engineers, twenty-five assistant engineers, eight chaplains, six professors of mathematics, one chief constructor, three civil engineers, eleven boatswains, nine gunners, eleven carpenters, and nine sail-makers; in all, $703,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next ammendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 89, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active-list shall be from the grades of commodore and captain, according to seniority, and under the regulations as now provided by law; and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made, that grade being hereby abolished: Provided, however, That no commodore now in the service shall be reduced in rank or be deprived of his commission by reason of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Navy," in line 120, to strike out "in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service;" so as to read:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should be very glad to hear from the Senator from Maine, who has charge of this bill, the reason for striking out those two lines.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire an explanation now?

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator wishes me to specify more particularly the reason I call for the explanation I shall do so.

Mr. HALE. I know the Senator has been investigating the case and I should be very glad to have him state first just what his point is if he believes the clause should remain.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will do so. My attention has been called to this matter by parties who consider themselves aggrieved by the fact that the clause from line 115 to line 122 has been construed by the accounting officers so that it is inoperative and void.

The fact about the matter is this: In 1867, when the Army and Navy had accomplished their main purpose, a great many persons in each branch of the service sought to go into the regular service; for instance, out of the volunteer army into the regular Army, and out of the volunteer navy into the regular Navy. It is known to Senators that officers of both branches obtain what is known as longevity pay, that is according to the time they have been in the service, and it was the purpose of legislation to give officers going out of the volunteer service either of the Army or Navy after they entered the regular service the benefit of the time they had served as volunteers in the gradations of each. In other words, a man who has become a veteran in either branch of the service should get credit for that time in either branch of the service. After serving five years in the regular service a man gets a certain increase of pay. The object of the legislation has been to credit a man in the service with the time to a certain extent that he had served in the volunteer service of the country. This clause as it stands on page 6, commencing at line 115, is as follows:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy.

In the act of March 2, 1867, it is provided:

That the officers of the volunteer naval service who are, or may be, transferred to the regular Navy, or Marine Corps, shall be credited with the sea-service performed by them as volunteer officers, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty, in the same manner as if they had been during such service in the regular Navy or Marine Corps.

When the accounting officers came to look at the clause that was put in the bill last August, and which is now under consideration, they construed that it must relate to men who had been transferred, that is the man must have been in the actual volunteer service when he emerged as it were into the regular service, so that an officer who had been mustered out, honorably discharged, was denied the benefit of this provision. The intention of the act as passed last August, and which is copied again into this bill, was to put these persons who had been out, we will say a day or a week, on the same footing with those who were transferred under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1867. It was done purposely to cure this hiatus; but when the accounting officers came to take the bill of last August to execute it they found a difficulty in fixing the grade on which this credit should be placed. A naval officer's credit now is given from the date of his commission, and unless a grade is fixed to which this credit is to be given the legislation on the last naval appropriation bill in August fails, and the ground and the purpose of Congress at that time fails, and so the Comptroller has determined.

The clause put in by the House was for the purpose of enabling the accounting officers to execute the law as it stands, and this clause is not new legislation. On the contrary it is legislation made necessary by the existing law and for the purpose of executing that law, and without it the accounting officers can not carry out the law as it now stands. The law, as it now stands and as it was passed at the last session of Congress, is that—

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy.

That being the law, the Comptroller's difficulty is in finding the grade to which that credit shall be given, and the object of this provision as put in by the House is that that credit shall be in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since entering the service. That is modest and is very liberal toward the Government. It puts this credit, which Congress has declared shall be given to all officers going out of the volunteer service into the regular service, at the lowest grade they hold now. I confess that I am at a loss to know why there should be any objection to this provision. There stands the law, and that says they shall have this credit. The accounting officers say they can not execute the law because they can not determine what grade to give the credit upon, and this line and a half or two lines simply provide that this credit as to time which is already provided for, shall be given to the officer in the lowest grade that he has held since he went into the regular service.

The point now is before the Senate, and upon that I shall be very glad, with the greatest possible deference and respect to the superior knowledge of the Senator from Maine on naval affairs, to know why this provision is objected to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is a curious thing about appropriation bills that two or three lines somewhere that seem to be very innocent or in the direction of good legislation will excite more attention than the main leading provisions of the bill. I have had more letters, more interviews sought with me, since this bill was reported, upon these two lines, 121 and 122, than upon all the rest of the naval appropriation bill, including the million of dollars appropriated for new ships, and the persistency with which the clause was urged led me to seek a thorough investigation into the meaning of this clause. I sent for the Secretary of the Navy and I asked him if he knew just what those two lines, "in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service," meant, or what they would effectuate. He said that he did not, that he would require time to study it. I told him I did not know. I had the impression, as the Senator from Indiana has, that they were innocent and were only needed to really carry out existing law; but I was suspicious from the very fact that it was urged in so many quarters. The Secretary took the subject-matter and investigated it, as I did.

There is something more in the matter than the Senator from Indiana has discovered; there is something more than I discovered at first; there is something more than the Secretary of the Navy discovered at first; and I know that when the Senator sees it he will join with me in saying that the lines ought not to remain there or that they ought to be guarded. The first part of this legislation takes care of those meritorious officers who served in the volunteer Army or Navy either as enlisted men or minor officers and were afterward brought into the regular Navy, so far as their promotion, so far as their longevity, is concerned. That is already taken care of by the provisions of the bill heretofore passed and the provision in this clause of the present bill down to line 120. The language, "And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy," was in the bill last year. The words should, if it be necessary to repeat them, be in the bill this year, if they did not become general law then. I think they did; I think there was no need of putting that language here again; but this being an appropriation bill they were inserted. The sting lies in the next two lines, and this is the operation of them:

And shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service.

If a man was a seaman or a mate or a master's mate in the volunteer Navy, doing good service and receiving small pay, $15, $20, $25 a month, and was mustered out honorably, and then after the reorganization of the Navy was commissioned as a lieutenant, these words would give him the pay of a lieutenant retroactively all through the time that he served as a seaman or a mate or a master's mate; and that is what is behind this clause. It is, as the Secretary says, a claim agents' clause—not that he discovered that; not that the Senator from Indiana discovered that, or the Secretary until he investigated it. Now, to show that this is so; that it would give retroactive pay; that it would give the pay of a superior officer now in the Navy for the time when he served as an inferior officer, let me, for the benefit of the Senator from Indiana, read this again:

And shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects—

That is, such service when he was in the volunteer Army or Navy—in the manner as if all said service—

That is, all service in the volunteer Army or Navy—

had been continuous and in the regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service.

In other words, he shall receive while he was seaman or mate or master's mate all the benefits in every way that he would have received if during that time he had been serving in the rank of the lowest graduated pay where he goes into the Navy afterward, to wit, a lieutenant. The Secretary of the Navy, in reply to my request for an investigation, sends this letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 10, 1883.

SIR: In response to your request, I have to state that the words in lines 121 and 122 of the naval appropriation bill as reported February 19, 1883, "in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service," which the Senate Committee propose to strike out, were undoubtedly intended to lay the foundation for claims that an officer who, at some previous time had served in a grade below the lowest grade in which he served upon last entering the service, shall receive additional back pay for the whole period of such previous service at the same rate as if his service had been continuous in the superior grade.

It will also be noticed that by the prior clause an officer of the Navy is to be credited as an officer with the actual time which he may have previously served as an enlisted man. Therefore the effect of the clause which the committee propose to strike out would, if kept in, give him additional back pay for all the time of his service as an enlisted man equal to the pay which he received when first an officer.

Last year this clause about crediting officers with all their actual time of service was first placed in the bill without the proviso that it should not authorize any change in dates of commission or in rank of officers. The proviso was added during the pendency of the bill, and the clause and proviso became a part of the law of August 5, 1882, and are to-day in force. There is no occasion for now re-enacting them, except to make a cover for the insertion of the words which the committee propose to strike out, and to invite unjust claims against the Treasury.

Unless this result is desired those words should be stricken out as proposed; or, what is better, the whole clause, beginning on line 115 with the words "and all officers of the Navy," &c, should be stricken out.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now, Mr. President, I had not the remotest thought or idea or purpose of legislating to accomplish what the Secretary seems to think is to be accomplished by this clause.

Mr. HALE. I know the Senator had not.

Mr. VOORHEES. I never thought of such a thing. Persons who have talked to me about this have one single purpose, not to carry any pay according to the grade they served in in the volunteer force, but to get credit for that time in the grades they are now serving in; that is all. If this provision is obnoxious to that kind of construction something ought to be placed there to remove it. The Senator from Maine must know that according to the construction of this clause, without these two lines, given to it by the accounting officers, a large number of men who served in the volunteer force can get no credit for that time, because the grade is not fixed on which that credit should now be given. The Senator from Maine is so well versed in naval affairs that it is not worth while to explain to him the value of this credit as to time. It puts a man forward as if he had served longer in his present place. It is a credit as to time, not a credit as to money. It amounts to something to him on his pay as he goes along, but not as back pay, and it has no relation to his pay or rank in the volunteer service; and all my object is to fix the grade at which these men, whether they were seamen or officers in the volunteer force, shall now receive the credit which the law declares is theirs.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator, then, if there is any difficulty by the Comptroller's decision in these men getting what they should have the benefit of, time in their grade now, and pay for the future, some clause can be devised that shall cover that. I suggest that the Senate agree to our amendment striking out these words, and then I will ask the Secretary to prepare some clause, and will also look into it myself, that shall remedy any difficulty that now exists in the Comptroller's office touching the future benefit that this may have upon their present rank.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well. That is very fair and liberal, and I would suggest now to the Senator that I give notice of an amendment, but if he offers anything better or that is acceptable I shall only be too glad to accept it. I call his attention to an amendment which I had prepared in the event of his satisfying me that these two lines were not safe where they are. I had prepared this amendment to be offered at a future time; I do not know whether it is in order now to offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments are first to be considered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is not an amendment to the committee amendment in order now?

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would for my benefit read his amendment, so that I may think of it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] informs me that an amendment to the amendment has to be made now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. That is in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. The amendment of the committee is to strike out a line and a half, and I will offer, for the purpose of eliciting an expression from the Senator from Maine, the following amendment, to follow the word "Navy," at the end of line 120:

But the time of such prior service shall be credited, and its benefits computed upon the lowest commission or warrant held by such officer since the passage of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled, "An act to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy."

The Senator from Maine says that a good many persons have addressed him on this subject. A good many have addressed me also, so that I reluctantly went to work and looked into it. I did not want to do so, but there were a good many persons who addressed me, and I will state the reason why. It was because a good many persons have had injustice done them. There are a good many persons who served gallantly and faithfully through the volunteer period of our Navy who are now in the regular service getting no credit at all for the time they served in the volunteer force, although the law declares expressly that they are to have that credit, and they are not getting it simply because the accounting officers can not, under the law, determine and fix the grade on which to give them credit.

For instance, I know a man who serves as a boatswain, and in the volunteer service he was an ensign and a master, which are higher than the present grade he holds now. He is not asking for anything because of having been an ensign or master in the volunteer service; he is simply asking that the time he was in the volunteer service shall be credited to him as a boatswain. That is the lowest grade he has held in the service; he is holding it now. He gets nothing of credit on account of his former service, because the accounting officers say they fail to find by law a method of fixing the grade. Nobody is asking here to fix a grade held in the volunteer service, or any pay on that account. If this line and a half are obnoxious to such construction, they ought not to stay in the bill; but something else ought to go in so that men should fare alike. A large number of persons served well in the volunteer service who are now in the regular naval service, and who are getting nothing of credit under the bill as it stands. I know the Senator from Maine does not want that, and I know that the Secretary of the Navy does not want that. I could stand here and cite a dozen instances of men who have made complaint that they are getting nothing to their credit because of their volunteer service, while thousands of others are. It is simply to remedy this injustice and correct this inequality that I took it upon myself to examine and look into the matter, and for no other reasons in the world than to give simple justice. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment I propose.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana a question.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the amendment be read first, and then I will answer any question I can. I do not know whether I can.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of line 120, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to add:

But the time of such prior service shall be credited and its benefits computed upon the lowest commission or warrant held by such officer since the passage of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy."

Mr. VOORHEES. The reason why I use the word "warrant" is because a boatswain is not a commissioned officer. He serves by warrant, as a good many others do. I will hear the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I understand, I wish to be informed if I am incorrect about it, that the sole object of this is to effect what is called the pay for length of service that is increased by law at every five years, or a certain number of years of service added. There is an increase of pay by the law as it is now, and all that this does, if I understand it, is to provide that actual service shall be reckoned.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is it; computed.

Mr. CONGER. It does not pay them anything?

Mr. VOORHEES. Not at all. The Senator is right.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the amendment is to allow men to have the benefit of their services, although there was an interval between their service in the volunteer force and the time when they came to the regular Navy? They are to be credited with actual service in making up what you call longevity pay?

Mr. VOORHEES. That is it. The Senator understands it.

Mr. CONGER. It is an increase of pay allowed for length of service?

Mr. VOORHEES. That is as I understand it.

Mr. CONGER. It does not give any back pay for anything?

Mr. VOORHEES. Not at all. It gives a man credit for the time he served his country, so that in going from one grade to another now in the service he has the credit for the time he served his country in the volunteer force. It closes a little gap.

Mr. CONGER. It credits it so as to bring him to that time when he has the benefit of fifteen or twenty years' service?

Mr. HALE. That is it.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is my object.

Mr. HALE. That is the Senator's object, undoubtedly, but that is not the effect of the provision.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am not now discussing this line and a half; I am discussing the object I want to accomplish. I do not present it to the consideration of the Senator from Maine in order to contest it on this line and a half, but I do want something that will carry out the purpose as stated by the Senator from Maine, and which as I understand is the object we all have in view.

Mr. HALE. Nobody objects to that. I could not agree to the amendment the Senator from Indiana has suggested because I think that is still subject to the same objection. I doubt whether he and I could put our heads together and frame any clause that would compass just what he seeks to compass, or the Senator from Michigan and myself. Therefore I think it better, rather than to add any clause, to strike out these lines and leave the matter to be fixed hereafter. I have drawn hurriedly here an amendment to follow at the end of the proviso. The proviso reads:

That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commission or in the relative rank of such officers.

I propose to add:

Or to give any officer in the regular Navy any additional pay or amount of money for the time when he served in the volunteer army or navy.

That would clearly cut off everything.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am perfectly willing to agree to that if the Senator from Maine then will say to the accounting officers by law upon what grade now held the credit shall be given.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter we must fix. If we disagree with the House provision, that must be fixed deliberately by the Comptroller and the Secretary of the Navy together. I could not fix that now. I do not think the Senator himself could.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would not undertake to do so, of course, in this shape.

Mr. HALE. I am not particular whether we sustain the committee in striking out those words or add this proviso of mine. I think it would be as well to strike out the words and leave the whole thing to be adjusted afterward.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the proviso be read again by the Secretary; or, as the Senator's voice is good, will he read it again?

Mr. HALE. The proviso in the bill reads:

That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commissions or in the relative rank of such officers.

That everybody agrees to. I suggest to add:

Or to give to any officer of the regular Navy any additional pay or amount of money for the time when he served in the volunteer army or navy.

So that it shall not be retroactive.

Mr. VOORHEES. Nobody wants that at all. My object is entirely and simply to accomplish just two things: one is to give the officer of the volunteer force who might have been out of the service a day or two, and not regularly transferred under the act of 1867, the same privileges and advantages as those that were regularly transferred; and next, to say on what grade this credit shall be given to him, and then the accounting officers can execute the law; otherwise not.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests that any amendment here might be subject to the point of order, so that I hope the Senate will agree with the committee in striking this out, and then we shall fix the matter before the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course that means in a committee of conference; and I know it can be done if set about. I would say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not think it is open to the point of order, for I have studied a good deal on this matter. The provision I am seeking to put in on the line and a half is in aid of an existing law, and to enable the accounting officers to execute it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that is the very point of order. If it is a change of the existing law it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is not a change of existing law. It is putting the machinery into existing law to enable the officers of the Government to execute it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it changes the existing law so as to change the rule for the Comptroller, that is a change of existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out in lines 121 and 122 the words "in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officers since last entering the service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Navy," after the word "dead," in line 138, to insert:

For putting in order and preserving the grave of Paul Hamilton, a former Secretary of the Navy, the expenditure therefor not to exceed $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," in line 150, to strike out the word "tonnage" and insert "towage;" so as to read:

For foreign and local pilotage and towage of ships of war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in line 175, after the word "war," to insert "not exceeding $5,000; in all;" so as to read:

Steering-signals and indicators, and for speaking-tubes and gongs for signal communication on board vessels of war, and for introducing electric lights on board vessels of war, not exceeding $5,000; in all, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 186, to strike out "ordinance" and insert "ordnance;" so as to read "Bureau of Ordnance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 187, after the word "preserving," to strike out "ordinance" and insert "ordnance;" so as to read:

For procuring, producing, and preserving ordnance material.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 189, to strike out "ordinance" and insert "ordnance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 191, after the word "and," to insert "one-half of;" so as to read:

And one-half of any balance of the appropriation made for commencing the manufacture of steel rifled breech-loading guns with carriages and ammunition, that may be unexpended during the fiscal year 1883 is hereby reappropriated and made available for continuing that service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill why the whole amount is not appropriated? Why is it stricken down to one-half?

Mr. HALE. The committee considered that in the state of progress that the work is in, hardly anything having been expended, and much more time being required before large appropriations could be used, one-half of the amount in hand, which is nearly all of the appropriation last year, together with the $150,000 that we give now, would be all that could be expended during the year. That is the reason why it was limited to that.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what sum has been previously appropriated, which appropriation has lapsed, of which he intends to appropriate one-half?

Mr. HALE. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. McPHERSON. That would then add $50,000 to this appropriation?

Mr. HALE. Nearly $50,000, as very little of it has been expended.

Mr. McPHERSON. Why has it not been expended?

Mr. HALE. Because these experiments are things that should be conducted carefully, with great deliberation, and the Department has not been in a condition where it could expend the money advantageously. It requires time, as the Senator will see, in making these experiments in order to decide how they can best make them. I think it has been rather meritorious on the part of the Department that they have not rushed into the matter with hot haste, but have been deliberate and cautious.

Mr. McPHERSON. There have been tests of ordnance in other countries that have proved to be successful, showing ordnance of proper quality, of proper efficiency. Is there any reason why the Department should delay the purchase of guns, which I understand are sadly needed, or is it the purpose of the committee in this bill to restrict the Department to the manufacture of ordnance here, of which we are not ready to make any?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from New Jersey knows, if he has read any of the literature touching the experiments in gunnery abroad, that other powers have spent immense sums of money in experiments compared with which our expenditures are bagatelles; and that the history of the last fifteen years especially will show that of all the enormous sums of money expended large portions have brought nothing. We are not prepared to go into anything of that kind. I suppose there might be emergencies resting upon us whereby the American Congress would be impelled to make liberal and even lavish appropriations, so that the work might be at once, at great expense and loss and extravagance even, brought to something like a head. But in our condition, and with no apprehension of immediate trouble, the Department and the bureau are very careful about purchasing where there is some question as to which is the best, or in experimenting and devising means that should lead to our manufacturing these guns. For these reasons, as I have said, they have been what the Senator may call slow, but I think it is better in this regard to make haste slowly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I admit the force of the Senator's remarks so far as the appropriations by this Government are concerned for experimental purposes, but the experiment having been tried by other nations I see no good reasons why we should not avail ourselves of the experience of other nations, so far as guns are concerned. We last year appropriated, according to the statement of the Senator, $100,000 for ordnance. Not one dollar of that money has been expended, and we are sadly in need of the ordnance to place upon our fortifications and upon our naval vessels. An additional sum of $150,000 is now appropriated in this bill, to which it is the purpose of the committee to add one-half of the lapsed appropriation, making $200,000. Next year I suppose the committee will report to the Senate that the $200,000, or a portion of it, has been expended in experiments, when instead of availing ourselves of the experiments of others, which according to his statement have been very costly, which they have made and which have shown conclusively that they are perfect things, it is not the purpose of this Government to avail itself of that experience or that knowledge.

Upon this question I am very much of the opinion that the trouble is from the want of a sufficient appropriation, and I do not know that it is wise to make it, to establish a plant to do all the work and go to all the expense necessary to establish it and make it efficient. I do not know but that the best plan to pursue would be to buy our ordnance abroad, or wherever we could get it, inasmuch as we need it as sadly as we do now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 198, to strike out "ordinance" and insert "ordnance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 206, before the word "officers," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in line 210, after the word "foundery," to insert "or what other method, if any, should be adopted;" and in line 211 to strike out "ordnance" and insert "heavy ordnance;" so as to make the clause read:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to select from the Army and Navy six officers, who shall constitute a board for the purpose of examining and reporting to Congress which of the navy-yards or arsenals owned by the Government has the best location and is best adapted for the establishment of a Government foundery, or what other method, if any, should be adopted for the manufacture of heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States, the cost of all buildings, tools, and implements necessary to be used in the manufacture thereof, including the cost of a steam-hammer of sufficient size for the manufacture of the heaviest guns; and that the President is further requested to report to Congress the finding of said board at as early a date as possible: Provided, That no extra compensation shall be paid the officers serving on the board hereby created.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I suggest that there is nothing of an appropriation clearly in that provision. I do not rise to make any objection to it, but it seems to fall within the rule adopted with respect to the other legislative portions, that it authorizes the creation of a commission. There is no appropriation of any money in this provision for any purpose.

Mr. HALE. That point was considered by the committee, and we found on investigation that it does add nothing whatever to the power of the President. He has the same power now. It does not change any law; it is simply advisory; he is authorized and requested, he is not directed, to simply create this board. I do not have as much confidence in boards as advising or controlling the operations of any of the Departments as I used to have. I do not consider it a very serious thing one way or the other, but it is in the direction of the Department taking up and considering this thing, and is the seal of the approbation of Congress that it had better be done, but it does not add any to the law, I will state to the Senator from Florida. If it did it would not be here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "torpedoes," in line 237, after the word "that," to strike out "said money shall only" and insert "at least one-half of said sum shall;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That at least one-half of said sum shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of torpedoes the inventions of citizens of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 243, before the word "by," to strike out "recommended" and insert "approved;" and in the same line, after the word "Navy," to strike out:

Based upon a report to be made to him by a board of naval officers to be created by him to examine and test said torpedoes and inventions: And provided further, That a sum not exceeding $50,000, out of said appropriation, shall be paid to Asa Weeks, when he shall execute and deliver to the United States a release in writing of all claim for the present or future use by the United States of all his inventions in torpedoes and in the machinery for operating, controlling, and exploding torpedoes, or relating in any way to the subject of torpedo warfare, whether patented or otherwise: Provided, however, That said payment shall only be made on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, based upon a report of the board of officers above provided for.

So as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That no part of said money shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of any torpedo until the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," in line 269, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling; hemp, wire, hides, and other materials for the manufacture of rope and cordage; iron for manufacture of cables, anchors, galleys, and chains; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, bags, and hammocks; heating apparatus for receiving-ships; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels and manufacture of equipment articles in the several navy-yards, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 269, to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and empowered, within his discretion, to constitute and introduce as a portion of the equipment of the Navy the life-saving dress adopted and approved by the Life-Saving Service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," in line 296, after the word "machinery," to strike out "and patent rights to use the same;" so as to read:

For general maintenance of yards and docks, namely: For freight and transportation of materials and stores, books, models, maps, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire-engines; machinery; repairs on steam fire-engines, and attendance on the same, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 312, to reduce the appropriation "for contingent expenses that may arise at navy-yards and stations" from $25,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 314, to increase the appropriation "for the civil establishments at navy-yards and stations" from $19,000 to $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," in line 336, to reduce the appropriation for contingent expenses of the bureau from $25,000 to 22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 338, after the word "naval," to strike out "labratory" and insert "laboratory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 343, after the word "naval," to strike out "labratory" and insert "laboratory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in line 372, after the word "exceed," to strike out "30" and insert "25;" so as to read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This clause was in the appropriation bill of last session, I think, for the first time and gave rise to a very extended debate. I have no disposition to continue it, but it seems to me to be a very extraordinary provision; it is certainly a very unusual one. Hitherto the Secretary of the Navy was invested with discretion over matters of this kind, and it was left for him to say whether, in his judgment, a ship should be repaired or not. Here is a provision which might be construed so as to destroy every available wooden ship in the Navy.

While I agree that the time has arrived when some increase in the naval service or in the ships we employ there should be made, I am not for putting out of existence valuable wooden ships that are in it, because I think they can be made serviceable in time of peace for naval purposes. Although not fit to combat the great ironclads of Europe, there is a great deal of service of a naval character that a wooden ship can perform outside of warfare. Under this clause, if it was held by the board that it would require after a cruise of one of our best wooden ships 25 per cent. to repair her, &c., she might be sold. That is the effect of it.

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated costs of such repair shall exceed—

The House have it "30" but the Senate committee have changed it to "25"—

25 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

I said in the debate last year that this was a little harder than the underwriters' rule, for thus it is, I believe, one-third new for old, and in the case of a loss the owner of the ship can claim for a total loss where the damage exceeds one-third the value of the vessel. Here 25 per cent. is the limit fixed for abandonment under this bill on the part of our own Government. I think that a vessel is worth repairing when she is not injured or deteriorated below 30 per cent. at least, but this is 25.

We went over this ground last year, and the provision was stricken out, if I remember aright. It would do away with all wooden ships and the machinery of them when in the judgment of a board or of those by whom it was created it was held that the amount of repairs necessary would exceed 25 per cent. The word "estimated" is used here, "estimated cost." It does not tell us who shall make the estimate. I presume the estimate would be made under the direction of the Navy Department, and it might be a very arbitrary affair. There are no safeguards here to secure a fair appraisement or a fair estimate under this provision of the bill, and it seems to me that it is a rather dangerous provision, giving a most extraordinary power to the officers who may be called upon to execute it.

Mr. McPHERSON. It seems to me that this is a very dangerous provision. We have to-day in the American Navy quite a number of wooden ships; in short nearly all the ships we have are of wood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator yield to me a moment? I remind the Chair, as the President of the Senate was not in the chair last night, that the unfinished business of yesterday is the Utah bill and that the two hours for morning business and the Calendar have expired, and that, therefore, is the business properly before the Senate. Of course I do not wish to displace the appropriation bill, but I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally in order to go on with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid temporarily aside if there be no objection, and the naval appropriation bill will be continued.

Mr. McPHERSON. We have, as I have said, a great many wooden ships; in fact, nearly all the ships we have are wooden ships, many of them live-oak ships that, with a little repair, will be able to keep afloat and be efficient war vessels for many years to come.

The whole idea of this naval administration, and it seems to be supported by the Committee on Appropriations of both the House and Senate, that the true way is to destroy the existing naval establishment in order that a new one may be commenced, involving large expenditures of money and giving unlimited power and unlimited privileges to the Secretary of the Navy. Who, but the Secretary of the Navy or some bureau of the Navy Department under this bill, will have the power to make the estimate? Surely nobody. I shall be able to show before we get through the discussion of this snakish bill that the estimates of the Navy Department upon several other matters are of so extravagant a character that it will be very easy to arrive at a just conception of why this provision is included in the bill.

In the first place, the purpose is to put down to the very lowest possible estimate the value of wooden ships, the value of our existing establishment, and raise to the very highest possible estimate the value of structures already commenced, or of new ones to be commenced. I think I shall be able to show that there has been an estimate made by the Navy Department, or by its boards acting under existing law, which adds very largely to any previous estimate to any previous contracts, covered all over with scandal, as they have been, for the construction or continuing the construction of so-called iron monitors; and yet in the same bill there is a proviso giving to the same Navy Department the power to obliterate, to strike out of existence the present naval establishment, in order more rapidly to secure appropriations for new vessels, based upon the estimate of cost made by that Department.

Therefore I think an amendment should be offered to this clause of the bill, which would at least save our present naval establishment for a few months longer; and to secure that object I will move as an amendment to strike out "25 per cent.," in line 372, and insert "40 per cent."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "25" and inserting "40."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, undoubtedly this whole subject of expending money upon an old ship belonging to the United States rests in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. It ought to. But the Secretary of the Navy is confronted with the difficulty that not infrequently besets the heads of all the Departments. He is pressed and pushed from every navy-yard in the country and in the case of every old ship that comes, no matter what may be her condition, to haul her up and repair her, and to become involved in repairs which in the end substantially amount to rebuilding the ship. The Secretary of the Navy desires protection from that. He himself asks that this limitation be fixed at 20 per cent. instead of 30, as in the bill of last year, saying that that would give him an undoubted and effectual answer to every claim made upon him to order an old ship repaired at some particular navy-yard.

The committee did not give him all that he wanted in the way of this limitation, but put it at 25 per cent. instead of 20 as he asked, or 30 as it was left last year. It does not in any way interfere with the work upon a ship that is damaged abroad that needs at once repairs to any extent, or needs to be brought home; but it is a question constantly recurring in the Navy Department of the siege that the Secretary has to stand to repair some old vessel.

Mr. INGALLS. From whom does the importunity come?

Mr. HALE. From the different waters where the work is sought to be done—the navy-yards.

Mr. INGALLS. Who makes the estimate of the value of the ship when the repairs are to be made? The language used in the bill is, "when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of the new ship." By whom is the cost of the repairs estimated?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly by a board of officers that are designated at the particular place where the ship comes in.

Mr. INGALLS. By whom?

Mr. HALE. I do not know, as a matter of routine, whether it is done by the Secretary himself or by the head of the yard; but undoubtedly if any appeal or question is taken it goes to the Secretary at last.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator states that the Secretary desired to be protected against the importunities with which he is pressed continually for the purpose of making repairs upon wooden ships. I had supposed that this subject was wholly under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, and I was therefore curious to know from whom these importunities could proceed.

Mr. HALE. I have just stated that it occurs in every Department. No head of a Department is either infallible or is situated in such a serene region that he is not implored to do things against his judgment; and he frequently needs, as the Senator must know from what he has seen in the operation of Departments here, the sustaining hand of Congress in the direction of shutting down these things. Undoubtedly the Secretary can do it without, but if he believes that it is better not to go on and expend so much money in repairing these old ships, he is better able to embody that policy in his action, to enforce it upon his Department if he can turn to the appropriation bill that has got a limitation and say to these gentlemen, "I do not think I ought to go beyond this, and I can not go beyond it."

Mr. INGALLS. The provision of law then will be in the nature of an iron plate to a wooden ship, to render it less liable to dangerous assault.

Mr. HALE. It will render the Treasury less liable to dangerous assault, an iron plate to the appropriation. That is why the committee put it in at 25 per cent. The Secretary said he would rather have it at 20 per cent.

Mr. McPHERSON. It seems to me very reasonable in consideration of what I have already said that the Secretary should desire 20 per cent., and I see no reason why he would not prefer it at 15 per cent. Now I appeal to the Senator from Maine if that is not giving an extravagant power, an extraordinary exercise of discretion into the hands of the Secretary of the Navy. For instance, as he avers, a board of officers may be called to investigate the condition of a vessel. That board of officers may consist of officers at the navy-yard where the vessel happens to be. They may not be sufficiently well informed or experienced to give a correct judgment upon the absolute value of the ship itself or to estimate accurately the cost of the improvements to be made upon it.

In other words, unless they can rebuild the entire ship and make it a new ship, which would make the cost of the improvements largely in excess of what this bill allows, then the ship is to be condemned.

In short, it means this, and it means nothing less than this: that the entire present naval establishment of the country is to be wiped out absolutely. For what purpose? To give place to new structures to be experimented with by the Secretary of the Navy—a new kind of ship to be built upon plans which to-day have not even been considered or digested. No two naval boards that have been appointed to determine and report what should be done toward building a new navy have agreed as to what kind or character of vessels should be built. One board, and the last board appointed, recommend that the monitors be finished—at what cost? At a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of the contracts made to complete them in 1877. Three former boards report that if some of these monitors are completed the gunwales will be four inches under water; and yet the honorable Secretary of the Navy, supported by the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate, comes to Congress and asks appropriations of money to the extent of millions of dollars to commence the creation of a naval system which to-day no man in this country knows how it is to begin or where it is to end.

I submit, Mr. President, that the Senate should be careful, very careful how they take a step in advance upon this question until some well-digested, some feasible, some sensible plan is decided upon before this vast expenditure of money is made. And now, to commence, the first thing we reach in the appropriation bill is a proviso which has for its object first to wipe out our existing navy and make it necessary without delay to create a new one.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from New Jersey is not in favor of a wooden navy; I suppose that he, with all the other Senators here and with the country, desires that the United States shall at some time or other have a navy of iron or steel ships such as have been approved by the other great powers of this world. The question as to what particular kind of iron ships is to be adopted in the American Navy is not at this moment before us. The question here now is whether wooden ships are to be repaired when the cost of repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like materials. Undoubtedly the tendency of this legislation would be to discard gradually the wooden ships now in use in the United States Navy. That is unquestionably the intention, that we are not to build many more wooden vessels, and we are not to repair old ones at an expense exceeding 25 per cent. of the cost of a new vessel. Practically, I suppose that when a vessel comes into port and needs repairs the first thing to be done is to estimate what the cost of the repairs will be under this bill, and the next question to be determined is what would the construction of a new vessel of the same class cost. This first question would be determined upon estimates made by the officers at the navy-yard in charge of the construction and repair of vessels at the navy-yard where this vessel would appear for repairs, and those estimates would be sent to the Department, would go to the chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, and there be either approved or disapproved. The question as to the cost of a new vessel would have to be determined either by a board of officers or by the Bureau of Construction and Repair. I suppose either course might be taken by the Secretary of the Navy; he could inform himself in any mode which seemed best to him. I see no great difficulty in the execution of this act, and it seems to me that it is a good provision.

I am inclined to adopt the 30 per cent. reported from the House, and I am certainly opposed to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to raise it to 40 per cent., because if you do that you will keep on repairing these old vessels continually and you will keep up these obsolete old wooden vessels, which are of very little account in modern warfare, to the exclusion of the new kind of vessels which the United States will undoubtedly build if we pretend or intend to ever become a naval power.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. MILLER, of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would you destroy absolutely the last relic of a navy that you have before something else is found or substituted to take its place?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I would not.

Mr. McPHERSON. How long will it take the Government to build the iron or the steel navy we propose to build? Would it not be wiser to wait until that experiment had been tried and found adequate before we undertake to destroy the foundation upon which we rest to-day?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will answer the Senator by saying that I do not understand that this provision will destroy the present navy at all. I do not suppose that all the wooden vessels of the Navy are going to be wrecked or injured at the same time. I suppose the casualties which render it necessary to repair these vessels will occur at intervals, that the change will be gradually made. What I object to is the constant expenditure of money upon vessels which are obsolete, which are of no use or of very little use to the United States as ships of war, and spending this money to the exclusion of the building of new ships of a better pattern and better class and better kind. I want this process to go on gradually, and I think it will go on gradually and properly under this provision.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I concur in a good deal that has been said by the Senator from California in respect to the necessity of a better class of vessels in the Navy of the United States. I think that our position at the present time is one of humiliation as a great maritime power, and that we ought to have better ships than we now have in the naval service; but I do not think that this provision is necessary in order to secure that end.

I think a very small proportion of the ships of Great Britain are first-class ironclads at the present time, because it is a work of long years to build up an iron-clad navy; and after we decide upon a policy with respect to our naval vessels and decide to build a different class of ships from those we are now using and get them in existence, then it will be time enough to dispose of our old vessels; and if we keep them up, when the time arrives for us to sell them they will command a better price than if they were permitted to go into mere rotten timber. The proposition is to destroy our wooden ships in advance of a determination on the part of Congress to build an iron-clad navy, to take a step in the direction of destroying the navy we have, as has been stated by the Senator from New Jersey.

I am in favor of building some first-class ships for our navy, and I am ready to co-operate with gentlemen on either side of the Chamber to accomplish that end, because as a great maritime power we ought to be in some respects on a footing of equality with England and France, and this, I will say, is the first time in our history when we are at a disadvantage with those powers in respect to our navy. Before the war our large ships were all wooden vessels; they were equal to anything that was then in possession of either England or France, and our relative strength on the seas, so far at least as the quality of our ships was concerned, compared with any of the powers before the late civil war.

A great change has taken place, as every one knows, in naval architecture and the system of naval warfare, and we have not kept pace with it; but I do not think that this is necessary in order to effectuate the change contended for by the Senator from California in this department of the public service, that we should alter the existing law or usage of the department touching the repairing of our ships. We should leave the Secretary of the Navy to repair or not repair, as the case may require, as has been the custom in the past, and then leave to Congress the power to provide for the erection of new vessels conforming to the new system of naval warfare if, in their judgment, they think it proper to do so. But little or nothing has been done in that way, and I think that before the old navy is displaced some provision ought to be made to bring the new one into existence, not to leave us entirely defenseless on the ocean by giving a discretion to our officers that may possibly result in depriving us of what ships we have without anything being done to replace them by the class of vessels spoken of by my friend from California.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, for the last dozen years the complaint has been that the Navy Department spent its money in keeping afloat old wooden ships which were growing worse and worse every year and that the American Navy was becoming more and more contemptible, that we were building no new ships to replace the old ones. I do not know how many times I have heard the figures read showing that in ten or twelve years nearly $400,000,000 had been spent in the naval establishment, and that there was nothing to show for it.

The operation of these charges, the discussion of this subject, has been that they have sunk into the public mind, and the people and the Congress I think have become convinced that something needs to be done in the way of rebuilding our Navy with a new class of ships adapted to the needs and exigencies of the nation and utilizing the inventions of modern naval warfare and speed in cruising. The first step in that direction is, while we keep up the old wooden navy in a reasonable way and keep our ships afloat, that we shall not sink large sums of money in the maintaining of old ships or rebuilding them when they have passed beyond what may be fairly termed the condition of repair.

The amendment that is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations allows the Secretary to expend 25 per cent. not of the present value of any old ship coming in, but of any ship that might be built of that class. Do Senators consider how large latitude that gives to the Secretary of the Navy, and that under it no single ship of our second or third rates that now float upon the water will ever be laid up if she can be repaired? But when it is claimed and urged that a ship which the Secretary believes to be unfit to be repaired should be, and it is found that more than 25 per cent. of the cost of a new ship would have to be expended upon her, then the Secretary believes, and we sustain him in that belief, that the money ought not to be so expended.

I do not want to anticipate the debate that may arise when we come to that part of the bill touching the increase of the Navy. But if the Senator from New Jersey is to object, and other Senators are prepared to stand by him, first to proposing limitation in the expenditure upon the old wooden ships, and secondly is to find difficulties in the way of erecting new ones, in the way of charging extra haste and speed and that the projects and plans are immature, then we shall continue after the fashion that we have for years past, the American Navy gradually growing less and less in numbers, for ships die as well as men; less and less of value, for they grow old and useless as well as men, and we shall have nothing taking their place.

The condition of the wooden navy of the United States is well epitomized in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, where after giving a list of our wooden ships on the waters of the globe, he makes the comments which I ask the Secretary to read. That tells the whole story much better than I can tell it.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

These vessels are creditable in their appearance, commodious in their quarters for officers and seamen, well adapted for ordinary naval exercises, and useful for displaying the national flag upon the seas and in the harbors of the commercial world. But they are of low speed; their engines are not modern, only fourteen being compound; and their steaming, maneuvering, and destructive powers are inferior to those of the present war ships of other navies. It is not the policy of the United States Government to maintain a large navy, but its reputation, honor, and prosperity require that such naval vessels as it possesses should be the best which human ingenuity can devise and modern artificers can construct. Our present vessels are not such, and can not be made such. They should be gradually replaced by new iron or steel cruisers, and allowed to go out of commission. The naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882, provides that no repairs shall be made "of any wooden ship where the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material." This wise provision should be adhered to in future appropriations, and the limitation of repairs fixed at 20 per cent. less. The present wooden ships should receive only such moderate repairs as will enable them to serve the purposes of the Government until a new modern navy shall without undue haste and with due economy be constructed which will fitly represent the power and protect the interests and honor of the nation.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to take any more time of the Senate. The Secretary has spoken for himself there. He adheres to the legislation of last year, but asks that the limitation be put at 20 per cent. instead of 30. The committee has put it at 25. That tells the whole story. Whatever the Senate sees fit to vote upon this matter, it is not a critical or a vital thing, and I hope that we may at any rate settle it and go on to the more important details of the bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know who gave the Senator from Maine any right to say, certainly not anything that I have said, that it was my intention to lead or of any Senators to follow my lead in trying to prevent appropriations of money for the construction of new ships. I am certainly as much in favor of beginning under some well-digested plan the construction of a new navy as the Senator himself. I shall vote for an appropriation of money to begin the construction of new ships of war, ships that shall be built upon some well-approved plan, a plan which the experience of other nations has taught us to be the best; but as a Senator and owing a duty to the country I can not consent that the present navy shall be destroyed, what there is of it, until a new one is created to take its place.

Now, under this provision of law, ill-advised, ill-guarded as it is, my convictions are that the Secretary of the Navy may appoint a board or not appoint a board, as he sees fit, to estimate the cost or the value of a ship which seems to need repair. "A ship," in the meaning and intent of this bill, means the hull—the thing that floats; it means the hull of the vessel, the ship proper. We will suppose, for instance, that a board of survey appointed by the Secretary to estimate values under this bill should decide that a certain ship was worth $200,000, and the machinery of that ship had cost more than a million dollars; under the proper construction of this law 20 per cent. of the value of the hull would be the rule to govern the board, which would be $50,000. Under this bill it would not then be possible to expend more than $50,000, or 25 per cent. of her value, on such repairs; and of necessity the hull, worth $200,000, and machinery, worth $1,000,000, must under operation of law go to the bone-yard. This may be good law, but it is very bad business. The hull, worth $200,000 by their own estimate, is thrown away; the machinery, costing more than a million dollars, is thrown out into the navy-yards to be sold to some favored contractor for old iron or old steel or old metal, and the Government has lost more than a million dollars. What has cost the Government more than $2,000,000 perhaps to create has under the operation of this law been relegated to private life and the materials transferred to some contractor.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator estimate his 25 per cent.?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Twenty-five per cent. of $200,000, the value fixed on the hull of the ship, would be $50,000. It admits of no other construction.

Mr. HALE. The amendment has no such language.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask the Senator if there is any other reasonable construction?

Mr. HALE. Let me read and let the Senator himself judge:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Mr. MCPHERSON. What does that apply to? Does it apply to the wooden ship or to the boilers or the engines or the material in the inside of the ship used for propelling the vessel? The Senator's own good sense can not fail to direct him to the conclusions I have reached.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has not gone far enough. In the next provision in the "Bureau of Steam-Engineering" the engine, the motive power of the ship, is put under just such a provision as applied to that; but if a ship is brought into a navy-yard that needs in the hull or in the masts or in any portion repairs that will cost $100,000, and a new ship would cost a million dollars, the Secretary has the limitation of $250,000. The unit is the cost of the new ship; it is not the cost of the particular part that the repairs are sought to be put upon. The unit is the ship itself; and it is a rare thing that you would find that there would be need for repairs of any particular part of a ship to save her that would aggregate more than 25 per cent. of what a new ship would cost. The language was constructed last year carefully so that it should not apply to the particular part sought to be repaired but to the entire ship. I remember very well the pains that were taken at that time in forming this language which has been followed in the bill this year.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I would a great deal rather leave the matter entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, coupled with the responsiblity that will rest then upon him. Under this provision of law the Secretary of the Navy would have full power to do things that should not under any kind of circumstances be done, and evade all responsibilty for his acts because Congress expressly made the order and gave him no discretion.

The experience of the past is still present with us. After the war the then Secretary of the Navy saw fit in his own discretion, without warrant of law, to sell large amounts of material which aggregated to a large amount in the different navy-yards of the country. In three navy-yards thirty or forty boilers were sold, new boilers suitable for all of the purposes of the Navy, suitable to be placed in some of the vessels of the Navy, then sadly in want of them; they were new boilers, and were sold, according to the testimony of J. W. King, chief engineer United States Navy, for a sum vastly lower than was then being contracted to be paid for new boilers of the same size and shape. Let me read some of his testimoney.

The total number of new boilers sold from the three navy-yards visited—

New York, Portsmouth, and Philadelphia—was thirty.

Total weight of the thirty boilers, 928$\frac{1}{4}\frac{2}{2}\frac{2}{5}$ tons.

Taking the contract price of 30 cents per pound, ordered to be paid for the new boilers purchased by the bureau, as the estimate of the value of those sold, the result is:

Thirty boilers, weight 928$\frac{1}{4}\frac{2}{2}\frac{2}{5}$ tons, at 30 cents per pound, $623,926.80.

From this amount must be deducted the price received for the boilers sold, namely, $28,245.54. Loss to the Government on boilers sold, $595,681.26.

And to this sum must be added the cost to the Government of the delivery of much of the materials on the wharf. These figures are considerable, but not accessible.

This has been done without warrant of law by one Secretary, and you now propose to confer upon another Secretary the power to dispose of the whole ship in like manner.

I might review this testimony and show what had become of machinery which had cost this Government millions of dollars which was broken up and sold for old scrap-iron and traded away to favored contractors.

Now the same rule is to be applied, the same order of things to be reestablished, the same system is to be employed, that we may make it necessary to proceed still faster with the construction of cruisers or some new naval establishment. It is now proposed to wipe out absolutely everything that we have in the shape of a naval vessel, the more rapidly the better because appropriations will be more needed and needed faster, and the pressure for them will be all the stronger.

Mr. HALE. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I do not think it is pertinent here after bringing up a report of the old sales of ships and materials and Government losses incident thereto, then to say that we are asked now to restore that old practice. Does not the Senator know that both in last year's bill and in this year's bill the Secretary of the Navy is so hedged around that he can not sell a single ship with its machinery, engines, and boilers, or any component part of it except surrounded by every safeguard that Congress has placed, that every dollar must be accounted for and it must all be done under open bids and on open sale, and when everything has been done to prevent anything occurring such as the Senator charges has been done in the past? We have looked out for all that in this bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator turn my attention to any statute that has been placed on the statute-book restricting the Secretary of the Navy since the passage of the laws which were deemed necessary in 1877?

Mr. HALE. Yes; last year we took that whole matter up in the naval appropriation bill, and provided, first, that the Secretary should never sell anything until he had certified to Congress that it was needed to be sold; that no disposition should be made of a single dollar's worth; that he should report to Congress the vessels he thought should be sold and the reasons therefor, and that then Congress should take the matter up and provide how and where and when they should be sold. Acting upon that statute passed last year, in this very bill are full provisions for carrying out the legislation of last year. When we come to those provisions, if the Senator in his province as scrutinizing the bill believes that he can improve upon them, that he can make them more safe and insure that there shall be no favoritism, that there shall be open sales, that the Government shall receive money value for what it sells, I bid him welcome in that scrutiny. I will take any suggestion he can make as a Senator and as a skilled business man that will invest this whole question with absolute security.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not understand how any law can be passed more restrictive than the laws upon the statute-book, under which we have had a very peculiar experience in the past. I speak of the laws in existence in 1877——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will read the statute he will not say that.

Mr. McPHERSON. The laws of 1877 regulate and prescribe the manner in which public money appropriated by Congress shall be disbursed by providing, first, that competition and public bids shall be had by advertising; second, by providing that all supplies shall be had and obtained by contract, that all proposals shall be accompanied by a guarantee; third, by providing that all contracts shall be in writing and security given; fourth, by providing that no contract longer than one year shall be made; fifth, by providing that no contract shall be made unless authorized by law and under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment. What is the use of any further statute? In 1877 contracts were made for the construction of new vessels, when there was no appropriation of money by Congress for the purpose.

Mr. HALE. Has anything been done on them? Has a dollar of money been expended on them? Has a stroke of work ever fallen on a single ship?

Mr. McPHERSON. No.

Mr. HALE. Has any appropriation been called for from the Treasury?

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Notwithstanding that law was on the statute-book, was there anything in the law that held the Secretary of the Navy to the letter and spirit of the law? Were not contracts made? But Secretary Thompson was wiser than the Secretary that made them; he suspended them.

Mr. HALE. They were not.

Mr. McPHERSON. Have we not to-day in the reports of the Senate four or five different naval vessels known as the monitors for which you ask to-day an appropriation of a million dollars, the contract for the building of which was made in direct violation of law?

Mr. HALE. That contract has never been acted upon; it never received the approval even of the subsequent Secretary or upon his going out of the present Secretary; and the present Secretary in his report declares expressly that the contracts were made without law, that the provision that nothing should be done without appropriations has been and should have been religiously carried out, and no man to-day is found anywhere in or out of Congress claiming that those contracts have a particle or shred of legal force. The Senator himself is erecting here a bugbear that need not trouble his imagination. He will never see the day when those contracts entered into at that time will ever be invoked either by the Administration or by the contractors themselves.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator displays a great deal of ingenuity in trying to avoid the direct point I make. The point is this; let me state it plainly: I say contracts were made, and I say they were made in direct violation of law. I say, and I wish the Senator to understand it distinctly, that upon and under those contracts you have to-day five naval vessels that you are appropriating money to complete.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that under those contracts we not only have not those vessels, but they are precisely in the condition that they were in at the time when the contracts were made, as we had them at that time.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have not reached that part of the case. If the Senator will bear with me I will come to that.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator should not say that under those contracts we have the vessels if we had them before.

Mr. McPHERSON. I say that under those contracts they now exist, and that without those contracts they would not have existed.

Mr. HALE. What would not have existed?

Mr. McPHERSON. These five monitors.

Mr. HALE. They are in the condition they were when the contracts were made, and they have stood suspended in the air; not a hammer has been struck on them or a cent spent since those contracts were made.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is the most dangerous admission I ever heard a Senator make who at all times is most willing and anxious to defend his political party. If the contracts were not made until 1877, and the vessels were completed, as he avers, to their present state of completion before any contract was made, it is a most dangerous admission for the Senator to make. It means the vessels were constructed without a contract, and the law expressly requires they shall not be.

Mr. HALE. They were made by the Government under the old arrangement, by expenditures of money from appropriations made by Congress, and when they arrived at a certain condition then the contracts about which so much has been said were made at the close of one administration and as another was coming in, and there they were arrested. But I decline further to be drawn into a controversy about those monitors. That question is not up at this stage of the bill; it will come up by and by, and I am not going at any stage of this matter to be driven to rake over these old straws and dregs of the past with a muck-rake when there is something substantial before us in the question whether we shall build a new navy or not. I give the Senator fair notice that I will not be drawn into any controversy about that.

Mr. McPHERSON. That does not seem to be the question at present before the Senate. The question seems to be whether we will destroy the old navy. The Senator says we have not yet reached that point of the debate. The question now is: Shall we destroy the old navy? And upon that question the Senator seems to have very clear convictions that it had better be done.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I want to make it clear both to the Senator from Maine and the Senate that I am quite right in the statement I make. The Senator speaks of these monitors as having been commenced under the old arrangement. Will the Senator tell me what arrangement?

Mr. HALE. I said the old arrangement. What I meant was, and the reports, if the Senator will read them, show, that for years work was going on from regular appropriations on the different ironclads. One of them was in California; four of them were here. They arrived at a point where it was necessary for new and distinct work to be performed upon them. Then the contracts that so much has been said about, and which are troubling nobody now except the Senator from New Jersey, were made, upon which nothing has been done. It is an old and thread-bare worn and stale subject that was debated last year, and over and over and over again has been brought up time and again in the other House; and the Senator himself, with all his ingenuity, can throw no new light upon it. It is not involved here and now, however. The simple question here is whether upon this amendment any limitation shall be placed upon the amount of money that shall be put into the old wooden ships that we have got.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will bear with me again I will read from one of the records of the Navy Department, and I would like to have his explanation of that record. This is dated April 7, 1875. This is a letter from Isaiah Hanscom, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, directed to John Roach, esq., Chester, Pennsylvania. Do not forget the date, April 7, 1875, two years before the date of the contracts of which the Senator speaks.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
April 7, 1875.

SIR: Referring to your proposition of December 3, 1874, accepted by bureau's letter of December 12, 1874, to perform all the labor necessary to put in frame an iron-clad monitor in accordance with the drawings and specifications, and in the same manner as is being done with the Terror class of vessels, for the sum of $155,000—

He goes on then to describe the work and he states to Mr. Roach: "This proposition is accepted." There was the contract under which Mr. Roach commenced the construction of the Puritan, and still the Senator says there was no contract, and now by authority of law he wishes to confer upon the present Secretary of the Navy the authority to do that which no Secretary would ever have done having the interest of the Government in view, either with or without warrant of law. I could follow this up and show how contracts were made for the Terror, the Amphitrite, the Monadnock, and the Miantonomoh; but as that question is to be discussed later and as we want to reach a vote on this question whether preparatory to commencing the expenditure of a sum of money which is estimated to cost for a certain number of new vessels $30,000,000 without drawings, without specifications, without any known rule or plan upon which to build them, it remains for us first to settle the question whether or no we shall do away with the existing naval establishment. My friend from Maine thinks the old vessels are in the way of liberal appropriations for new ones; therefore they must go.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to be informed by the Senator in charge of the bill or by the Senator from New Jersey whether the sum of 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship could be wisely expended in the ordinary course of the business of keeping up our navy?

Mr. HALE. I have just said that I do not think it can. I think the case will rarely, perhaps never, arise where in repairing the Secretary will be called upon to put as much in the way of repairs as 30 or 25 or 20 per cent. of the cost of a new ship of the same size and class. So there is no destruction of the navy involved in this. There is a very large margin left.

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me on that statement, which I have no doubt is a correct one and an intelligent one, that 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same or like materials is enough for us to appropriate under any conditions for the maintenance of the navy, particularly when in the next clause, to which the Senator from Maine has called attention, under the head of "Bureau of Steam-Engineering," we in like manner provide 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power for the purpose of keeping up the engines and machinery. That would be equivalent to 50 per cent. of the entire cost of a new steamship in the event of its becoming necessary to apply that amount of money. I concur in the view that we must start to build a new navy.

Mr. McPHERSON. How would it make 50 per cent.?

Mr. MORGAN. Twenty-five per cent. on the ship and 25 per cent. on he machinery.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the hull were condemned the machinery would have to be taken out and condemned and sold for old iron.

Mr. MORGAN. In whatever way it might be sold, section 3 of the bill seems to contain ample provisions and guards against any waste or fraud in the disposal of the engines, hull, or any other part of the ship.

Mr. President, we are unquestionably in a very bad situation in reference to our navy. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations my attention has been drawn very frequently in our discussions there to the subject of our ability to enforce the demands of the Government of the United States in matters of somewhat minor importance about which it is not necessary to go to open war through our naval power. We have a number of nations in the world to deal with who flatter themselves that they could put us to a good deal of trouble occasionally, and we are not in a condition to respond with that sort of promptitude which is necessary to protect our people and their property and their rights in foreign countries.

A few events that have occurred within the last few years have admonished me that it is necessary that we should make a new departure on the subject of the Navy. The first one was the imbroglio between Peru and Chili, in which we certainly came off second best. I need not refer to the particulars of that transaction; but some American citizens are even now setting up very loud complaints at the inefficiency of our Government in protecting their rights in the conflict that went on between Peru, Bolivia, and Chili. Another event was the demonstration of the power of the British navy made at Alexandria in Egypt during the bombardment of the forts there.

There was a very remarkable exhibition of the contrast between the powers of the American people and the British people in respect of their ability to enforce their demands against foreign governments. We had a very good ship in that harbor at that time, a ship that classes about first rate, I believe, among the rest that we have got, and which was dancing attendance around there like a French dancing-master in the bay looking on at that fight; and perchance if she had got within reach of a shot of one of those guns she would have gone to the bottom instantly. That is about as much force as any ship in our Navy could have mustered in that bay at that time. The contrast was so striking and so obvious and so detrimental to our power and prestige as a nation that for one I looked upon it with dismay.

Within the last three or four months we have had various marine disasters to our Navy, and it seems that our ships are ill-qualified even to bear the shock of an ordinary collision. There must be a number of them that are unseaworthy, a number upon which the commanders are afraid to ship and they are afraid to go to sea with their crews, and yet we have them in commission and they are carrying our flag about through the world merely for the purpose of showing that we have got a flag that is not sustained by a proper navy. Within the last few days we have information of the sinking of one of our war-ships, the Ashuelot, and I have a paper before me now which contains an account of it.

The United States steamer Ashuelot has been lost in the China seas. All her officers were saved. Eleven of the crew were drowned.

It appears that this ship and another, the Monocacy, have been stationed in foreign ports for a long time as a sort of guard-ship for the consulates and the legations there, but no admiral, it appears, until very recently has had the hardihood to send those ships out on a cruise to bear the American flag to the different ports of the world; but the admiral in charge of the fleet in that part of the world found it necessary to have a cruise made for the purpose of exhibiting our flag in places where for many years it had not been exhibited. He was unwilling really to trust the Ashuelot to sea; he did not regard her as seaworthy, and it appears that a majority of the officers of the Navy had the same opinion about that ship, but yet under a sort of compulsion which he could scarcely resist he has been compelled to send that ship to sea, and down she has gone, foundered at sea. We do not know the particulars, but I dare say when the truth comes to be revealed in respect to that vessel it will be found that she has gone to pieces merely because she was not able to hold together. She was a vessel built during the war, intended for harbor defense and river defense; a thin-plated iron ship, it appears, that did not have sufficient strength about it to resist the ordinary turmoils of the sea.

Now, Mr. President, we have got to have a navy some time or other, and the money that the people of the United States are contributing for this purpose ought to be expended in that direction. We ought to commence by building ships of equal capacity and speed and power with any other ships in the world. Especially they ought to be ships that would have great speed. That seems to be the general recommendation of the most experienced officers of our Navy. If we are to go on rebuilding these old hulks where there is nothing sound left of them even down at the keel, and spend 50 per cent. or 75 per cent. or 100 per cent. of the amount of money that is necessary to build a new ship of equal capacity, we shall never take a start in the building of a proper navy.

I know that frauds have occurred, abuses have occurred, but the country has seen them; it has taken the precaution to guard against them in the future. We have done all that legislation it seems can do, or if we have not, we have to-day an opportunity of doing more to guard against any unwise or fraudulent expenditure of money or the throwing away of any valuable material that may now be in those ships; but I recognize the fact that we have got to that point where we must take a new departure, where we must commence the building of steamships, and commence to put our flag above decks that are at least able to give it respectability among the other nations of the earth.

We understand perfectly well, we feel at least that there is no nation, and, perhaps, no combination of nations, that can come to our shores and engage with us in war with a chance of success; but that is not all the duty that the Government of the United States has to perform, merely to protect its own people in their own homes and by their own firesides. We send our commerce into all the different parts of this world, and we are getting so strong now in our industries and in our commercial power that it has become a matter of great importance to the people that our commerce should seek every avenue of trade that is open to the nations of the earth. In order to do that with any degree of success, and in order to impress the people with whom we deal in all the different parts of the earth with a sense of our power, our strength, and our financial ability, as well as our ability to defend and protect our people on the seas or elsewhere, we are bound to have a navy, and if we have a navy it ought to be one at least that has a show of respectability about it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will it interfere with the Senator's argument if I should here ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the Senator wish to vote in this Senate for an express declaration of law requiring the Secretary of the Navy to destroy good ships?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; and there is no such express declaration in this bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. There is a proviso in this bill that if the repairs of a ship shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship then the repairs shall not be made.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is it not a great deal better to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, considering the needs of the Government, than to expressly say to him, "Mr. Secretary, you shall have no power to repair a ship, whatever may be the needs of the Government, if it costs more than 25 per cent. of the cost of a new ship?" And this bill expressly so declares. Suppose, for instance, as I understand to be the case, and as the appropriation asked for here for repairs clearly shows, that there are some five or six wooden vessels to-day needing repairs, more or less, that are needed by the Government. Without them we should have nothing to float the flag. The Secretary is confronted with the declaration in this law which says, "You shall not repair them if the estimated cost of repair exceeds 25 per cent. of the value." Now, is it not a thousand times wiser to leave the discretion where the law now leaves it, with the Secretary of the Navy, than to say to him in express terms, "No such power shall be exercised by you whatever may be the needs or demands of the Government," when the Senator knows that in the next three years we shall have no iron or steel vessels prepared and ready to take the place of these ships?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when we have to intrust power to the Secretary of the Navy, either to destroy a ship or to repair it, we have got at the same time to trust his honesty and the honesty of the board by whom he is advised. We have provided in this bill and also in the existing law for the assembling of boards of men of unimpeachable integrity to look to every detail of this matter and to make the appraisement. I would just as soon give discretionary power to the Secretary of the Navy to destroy as to build; the one is just the same as the other. If he wishes to make a corrupt application of the appropriations that we make here in the repairs of a ship, it is quite as easy to do that as it would be in reference to making a corrupt application of the power we give him to break up a ship. We are obliged to trust somebody; we must trust our own Government. I grant you we have not always come out as we should have done in matters of this kind, but that has been one of the misfortunes of government, and it attends all administrations and it attends all periods of governmental existence. It is something that we must guard against to the best of our ability. That is all we can do, and because we may be at some time or other put in jeopardy or we may sustain losses by reason of the corruption or want of fidelity of a Secretary of the Navy or of a board of his advisers, that is no reason why we should not commence to build a fleet. My point is that we want a fleet and we have none.

Now, suppose you had expended money upon the Ashuelot, that has just gone to the bottom of the sea, what good would it have done to have spent 25 or 50 per cent. either upon that ship? It would have been better to have let her go, to have broken her up on the stocks, to have built a new ship out and out that was seaworthy, rather than put our flag and our officers and crew upon the deck of a vessel and send them out to sea merely for the purpose of being wrecked and destroyed. Admonitions of this kind do not fall coldly on my ears. I am bound to look to the fact that we have got a rotten navy, in very large part a relic that has been left to us of the war period, when ships were built rapidly and when they were built after models that are not now sufficiently strong and powerful to meet the demands of our Navy.

I shall go with this committee for making a start in this direction; and I believe that 25 per cent. of the cost of the engine and 25 per cent. of the cost of the hull and other parts of the ship is fully as much as ought ever to be spent in an effort to restore an old wooden ship.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I just wish to say one word on this subject of estimates. The Senator from Alabama is not one step in advance of myself in respect of the necessities of the country about an efficient navy, but I have great suspicion of this power of estimating. Some of the estimates which have been made in the past I think show the uncertainty of it. I think in one case an estimate made of the cost of the repairing of a ship at Norfolk was $60,000, and when it came to expend the money there were $300,000 expended. It just happened to run that way.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment I will say this to him: If the Senator is not satisfied with the act of August 5, 1882, an opportunity is now presented to amend it. The Senator can devise any system of appraisement that he thinks best. As far as I am concerned he can not get one that will be too good for me. I thought that was a very good one when we passed it last August; but if that is not sufficient let us make a better one. We have got to have these appraisements and estimates before we can do anything. We must not assume that they are always to be false and fraudulent.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I do not think it at all necessary that this provision should be here in order to accomplish what the Senator from Alabama has avowed himself in favor of and what I am in favor of. I do not think that it is necessary to incorporate this arbitrary provision in this bill giving to any few officers of the Navy the power to estimate out of existence our present valuable vessels in advance of the construction of new ships of which he speaks and of which I am in favor of the construction, and for which partial provision is made in this bill. Why can not the law go on as it now is, and when we get new vessels constructed to conform to the Senator's idea of a modern navy, dispose of our wooden ships like Great Britain and other powers have done—sell them for what they are worth, keeping them up so long as we find a necessity for them; but do not put them out of existence in this way by a mere arbitrary estimate about repair that there is no certainty whatever in.

A ship might come in to-morrow from a cruise, and I will venture to say that such a board could push the amount of repairs to $100,000 when $50,000 would suffice, as the purpose in view might require. All experience teaches us that; and I say it without impeaching the honesty of the Department. If the purpose was to make the repairs excessive they could make them double what the real exigencies of the case required. If it was their purpose to get rid of the ship as an inefficient vessel they would have the estimate to conform to the purpose, and although she might require but 10 per cent. of repairs, they could make the estimates 25 per cent. if they wanted to get rid of the ship.

I say this with a full knowledge of the history of the past and of the infirmities of human nature. There is no provision here whatever to guard this subject; there is no oath required to be taken such as is required in the case of the appraisement of ordinary merchandise upon which duties are paid; but a mere general power is given, unaccompanied by any restrictions whatever, under which any kind of an estimate may drive out of existence to-morrow every available vessel that is now in the public service, and after that is done of course you will be compelled to replace them by a new navy that will involve the expenditure of a very large amount of money.

I am in favor of a new navy, but I can not for the life of me conceive of any inconsistency in permitting the law to go on as it now is, holding the Secretary of the Navy to an accountability with respect to the repair of vessels that are on hand, and Congress making wise provision for the gradual increase of new ships that may be necessary in view of the great change that has taken place in the construction of naval ships throughout the world.

I am prepared to vote for any reasonable sum of money to bring into existence the ships specified by my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to put this country on something like a respectable footing with the other countries of the world, but at the same time I am not willing to take the step required to be taken in this bill to get rid in a summary way, as I take it, or it may be under the exercise of this power, of the vessels that we now have before any provision is made for the construction of new ships.

I think there is a provision for one or two cruisers in the bill. The condition of war, be it said to the credit of the human race, is an exceptional condition. The argument is that we ought to be always ready for war; but the history of the world shows that notwithstanding the angry dispositions of states we have very few wars compared with the long intervals of peace. The vessels that we have now, it is said, bear only our flag, which they do, and bear it creditably and honorably in all the seas of the world.

Mr. President, it is not the strength of our vessels that indicates the power of this great country. A squad of soldiers fifty or one hundred in number with our flag at the head of them represents millions of men, and an insult offered to them would be an insult to an entire people. Even a frail ship sometimes that carries your flag in distant seas, although she may not possess the thick steel sides of the ships possessed even by weaker powers, represents in her flag an authority and a power which few nations of the earth will undertake or dare to insult. The little republics south of us on this continent may require huge vessels of war, because their entire power and supremacy resides in such means, but there is such a thing in life as a great moral power, and that we possess, and the world undertands it. The world understands the resources and means of fifty millions of men on this continent; and while we may not be ready at a short notice to enter into a war with England or France on the ocean, they know that if occasion required it we would soon be on a footing with them.

I do not argue, mark you, against the building up of a navy, but I do not want to see this thing done in a hurry. This proposition is not a new one, as Senators well know. We went over it at the last session, and debated it hour after hour. I thought it was a very dangerous power to give to the Secretary of the Navy or any board of officers in this general form, that upon a mere estimate, unaccompanied by any provision requiring the board that may make it to be sworn, as in the case of ordinary merchandise, a ship should be put aside and turned out to be sold that may be worth millions. I say when it comes to voting the money to build a creditable navy, no Senator on this or on the other side of the Chamber will be any further in advance than myself.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this controversy seems to be really between navy-yards and a navy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have not mentioned navy-yards.

Mr. PLUMB. That is what it amounts to. It is a controversy between navy-yards and a navy; between this repairing, this building a barrel to a bung-hole, which has been characterized, and I think fitly characterized, by the Democratic party heretofore, and which now its chief representative on this floor desires to perpetuate, and which by its very expensiveness will itself prevent the building of a navy.

We are not going beyond a certain maximum in this bill. If we appropriate a few million dollars for repairing old ships we shall appropriate a few million dollars less for building new ones, and the Senator from New Jersey knows that. It is designed to keep the Navy of the United States, or what by courtesy we call the Navy, in that obsolete condition where there is nothing left but the moral power of this Government, which the Senator from Florida flaunts as an element in this controversy with nations. The logic of the statement of the Senator from Florida is that we ought to send abroad a few Bibles in place of as many pieces of artillery, as the representatives and muniments of the power of this great Government.

We want a navy. We do not want a lot of repaired old hulls and hulks which in their repairing minister to local consequence, to local profit, to local employment, and to local politics. It is ships, and not the place where they are built, and ships which answer the purposes which first-class powers have for ships of war.

It happened a couple of years ago that an unwary citizen of the United States was caught out on the west coast of South America; how he happened ever to have had the temerity to get there I do not know, but he actually found himself out there with a ship. Some alcalde or local official of equivalent authority on that coast seized his ship, and he was fain to get to Panama, the nearest place where this Government had a representative and a corresponding authority. From that point he telegraphed to the Secretary of State that he had thus been caught out of nights, unwarily, in a place where no American citizen had a right to be. The Secretary of State being moved by a very natural compassion directed that a man-of-war should go down there and investigate it, and it cost the Government $100,000 to send down and save to that man a ship that was not worth $50,000.

It is something in the way of profit if we are going to have our people get away from home at all; if we are going to permit them to get out of the confines of our jurisdiction more than three marine leagues from shore, to have go with them not merely something which, like one of the buoys we put into our harbors, can hold up the flag, which the Senator from Florida says is the terror of all mankind, because of the great power of Bibles and so on behind it; but we shall have also where that flag floats men and machinery and all the other things which are required as the evidences and means of power to enforce the authority of the Government, which is known abroad by reason of the evidences of its power which it sends abroad to a very large degree.

I would vote very cheerfully to destroy, if it were necessary, absolutely the wooden navy of this Government. It is of no possible consequence for the present or for the future. It is merely keeping up for no practical purposes that which is of no use whatever. To say that we shall put even 25 per cent. of the value of a ship upon it in the shape of repairs (of course it will be repaired at one time at the cost of 5 per cent., and some other time at the cost of 10 per cent.), I submit to the common sense of anybody, if any wooden vessel has got to that point where it has been decreased by abrasion, by use, by destruction 25 per cent. of its value, considering that it is of an architecture of a character of ship now unknown in naval warfare, should we put one-quarter of its value upon it? Could we not better employ that money in building an iron ship which would be of some use and which would correspond to the newer method and to the increasing strength of the naval powers of the world?

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Suppose, for instance, that we are threatened with war; we are confronted by this act of Congress; the Secretary of the Navy needs every vessel in the Navy and has use for a great many more than we have at present. It might be necessary for the public defense to repair ships because it could be done more rapidly where the cost of repair would equal 75 per cent. of their value. I wish to know if the Senator is willing to deprive the Secretary of the Navy or the executive branch of this Government of the power to take such action under such circumstances?

Mr. PLUMB. If I saw war in the horizon I would not limit myself to anything that I might say or do or direct the Secretary of the Navy to do about wooden ships. I would direct him post-haste to provide ships that were competent to carry on war.

Mr. McPHERSON. You would have a session of Congress called to repair the wrong or fault which might have been done?

Mr. PLUMB. Not to repair a lot of old wooden hulks that would go to the bottom of the sea the moment a musket was pointed at them. The very suggestion of a war itself disposes of this entire thing. The very suggestion that we may some time want a navy for practical purposes disposes of the proposition to keep on repairing forever these old hulks. That of itself settles the question. In that case we should want a navy. Of course there was great excuse, there always is excuse as long as there is no sign of war in the horizon, for going on simply as a matter of benefaction to persons who want work, to localities that want employment for their unemployed labor, and so on, repairing old ships. I understand it to be a fact that there is a ship on the stocks and has been recently in one of the Northern navy-yards which has been repaired from time to time and has never put to sea, the cost of the repairs on which would build to-day a steel cruiser; and she is yet on the stocks. It is that practice which it has been the design of legislation to relieve the country against.

It has been, as I said, a standing complaint on the part of the Democratic party that the Republican party had permitted its Secretaries of the Navy to use money for purposes of that kind instead of building a navy.

As I said, every dollar that we subtract from the appropriations for the purpose of repairing these worthless and worn out and obsolete wooden ships is just that much money taken from that which is necessary to-day as a matter of national pride, as a matter of national defense, as a matter pertaining to national commerce, to build up a Navy which shall be able to show itself without shame in foreign waters as the protector of American commerce and as a muniment of American power.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] alluded to this matter as being a controversy between ships and navy-yards, and he intimated rather strongly that some of us were laboring here in the interest of navy-yards. I wish to disabuse his mind of one thing so far as I am concerned, as there happens to be a navy-yard located in the State which I in part represent here. Since I have had the honor of occupying a seat in the Senate no ship has ever been repaired there, nor is there likely to be any repaired there.

I am very glad to find the Senator from Kansas, coming from the interior of the continent, taking an interest in the Navy, because it needs just the support of gentlemen like him to put it upon a respectable footing; but I would also remind him that those very ships that he complains so much of are the ships that have accomplished everything connected with the honor of that branch of the service. The old hulks that he speaks of were the hulks that carried your Farragut and your other great men to fame. It was those floating wooden batteries that entered the Mississippi River, and that kept in existence that system of blockade in the late unhappy civil contest the equal of which I suppose the world never saw before. Nearly every ship employed in that great war was a wooden ship. Many of them are in existence to-day, and are valuable for like purposes in the case of difficulty with any of the states around us on this continent.

The majority of the vessels that are now on the Naval Register could be made effectual for purposes of blockade and for making captures on the high seas, in accordance with the usage of nations and of national law. Experience has demonstrated up to this time that those huge iron or steel monsters for ordinary practical purposes are worthless comparatively, and it is only when you can draw them up against some great city, as was done at Alexandria, when they are effective.

A commercial state like this requires a class of ships altogether different from those huge monsters, many of which have gone to the bottom already, carrying thousands of souls within their iron walls. Notwithstanding the successes of the past with respect to this description of ships, it is not entirely settled whether the entire naval power of any country ought to be represented by those great steel or iron monsters.

How many wooden ships has Great Britain to-day in her public service? That great naval power does not rely altogether upon steel and armored ships. She has built them up gradually. I want this country to do the same thing.

I am not prepared to enter upon this wholesale system of denunciation of the vessels now in our Navy when it has been found that in all the contests of the past they have proved most efficient, and that they have succeeded in winning nearly all the honor that is now associated with naval fame in this country. Then let us move more slowly.

Here you have a million dollars provided for repairs. How far is that going to go? This provision was stricken out of the bill at the last session, but it is here renewed. When the Senator from Kansas talks about building a navy I hope when the time comes he will stand up to his profession, and that he will give us his vote and his speech in support of every reasonable proposition that could be brought forth here to obtain some good ships for the public service; but I do object to this arbitrary provision being put in here; I am willing for the law to remain as it is.

Mr. HALE. It was not struck out in the appropriation act last year. It was put in at 30 per cent.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Very well; I make the correction. I knew there was a debate on it and I thought it was stricken out. It was increased to 30 per cent., and I knew there was a proposition to strike it out.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote if possible, Mr. President.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to modify my amendment, if it may please the Senator from Maine, because I think with the method of estimate provided here it would make no difference whether the rate was 40 per cent. or 25 per cent., because if there is any disposition to evade the spirit of the law it will be evaded as well at 40 per cent. as at 25 per cent. The simple meaning of the amendment is this: The Secretary of the Navy transfers to Congress the responsibility of saying to him, "You shall destroy the old navy." I wish to leave it where the present law leaves it, entirely at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, to be governed by the exigencies of the case, whatever they may be. I propose for one to hold him responsible for the exercise of the power that the law gives him.

I therefore ask to withdraw my amendment, it being an amendment to the committee amendment, as I can amend no further; and in lieu of that amendment I will ask to strike out the proviso. If the Senator from Maine thinks that there is no necessity, with that stricken out, for the second proviso, I will move to strike them both out, so as to leave it exactly where the present law leaves it. If the first proviso be stricken out, I see no necessity for the second one, as that appears to refer to or modify the first. Therefore I move to strike out, from the word "provided," in line 370, down to the end of line 378, so as to leave it exactly where the present law leaves it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair). The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his amendment striking out "25" in line 372 and inserting "40." His motion to strike out the whole proviso will not be in order until the text shall have been perfected by taking the question on the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations. So, the question now is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations striking out "30" in line 372 and inserting "25?"

Mr. McPHERSON. Then if it be the ruling of the Chair that my amendment is not in order, so that it can not be voted upon at the present time, I was going to offer another amendment, but on second consideration I will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be reported, so that we may know precisely what we are to vote upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 372 the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out "30" and insert "25;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of same size and like material.

Mr. HALE. Rather than to take up the time by calling the yeas and nays——

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better have a vote.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let it go.

Mr. HALE. Let the roll be called, then.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will withdraw the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to vacating the order for the yeas and nays?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the amendment is a good one. I should like to vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well, sir.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the amendment is voted down, the law will remain as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out "30 per cent." and insert "25 per cent." in lines 372 and 373.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like the Senator in charge of the bill to advise the Senate why, when the committee were recommending an amendment which was a diminution of the per cent. that was agreed to by the House when the bill was before them, they did not make the reduction to the per cent. recommended by the Secretary of the Navy himself?

Mr. HALE. I will tell the Senator. Because, from some experience here as to the objection that was raised last year and the long time consumed in debate upon this very subject-matter, I thought, and the committee sustained me in it, that instead of putting it down, as the Secretary of the Navy asked, to 20 per cent., thereby giving rise to opposition and debate, and perhaps danger that it would not be carried, if it were put at 25 per cent., a quarter of the value of a new structure, it would go through; I hoped it would, without any objection. I did not anticipate any such objection to this proposition as we have heard. I did not think the spirit that moves men to persist in spending money upon these old ships further and further would assert itself on this proposition. It was rather as a practical matter, conjecturing and guessing, if the Senator chooses, that 25 per cent. would go through better than 20 per cent., that it was put at 25 per cent.

Mr. INGALLS. It was then a matter of policy, and not of justice?

Mr. HALE. It was a matter of policy and justice too.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator himself believe that the limitation suggested by the Secretary of the Navy is wise?

Mr. HALE. I do; I believe 20 per cent. better than 25 per cent.

Mr. INGALLS. So do I, Mr. President. We are all aware of the difficulties that have originated under this system of repairing hitherto, and I regret very much that instead of closing the door, as the Secretary of the Navy asks, so that it should leave open merely a crevice, the committee have seen fit to open it still wider for the purpose of permitting a repetition of the injustice, to say the least, that has been hitherto accomplished under this provision.

The Secretary of the Navy has described with somewhat of picturesque detail the condition of these wooden ships. He says that they are useful for naval exercises; that they are valuable for the purpose of displaying the national flag upon occasions of pageantry, when we have a spectacular performance of the navy upon the sea; they are "painted ships upon a painted ocean."

When the Secretary of the Navy, as the deliberate conclusion of his judgment, suggests that it would not be wise in the present condition of naval armaments to permit repairs to be made in excess of 20 per cent.; but when he suspects somewhat his fortitude to resist the importunities that may come from what must be interested quarters, and asks that he may be limited to 20 per cent., I am at a loss to understand upon what theory of a judicious expenditure of the public money the Committee on Appropriations have recommended that the sum be increased to 25 per cent. I wish that we could in some way have the opportunity of voting upon the suggestion made by the Secretary of the Navy. How can it be done?

Mr. SHERMAN. You can move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Can I move an amendment to the amendment at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can do so.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I move, in lieu of "25" to insert "20;" so as to make the amendment correspond with the evident desire of the Secretary of the Navy, and so that he may be fortified against what he suspects may be an infirmity of his will when these importunities are brought to bear for the expenditure of vast sums above what is necessary in the repair of wooden ships that everybody admits are of no use whatever except in pageants and spectacles that may be hereafter had in naval affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] moves to amend the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations by striking out the word "twenty-five," in lines 372 and 373, and inserting the word "twenty."

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire in that connection what becomes of these ships in case they are not repaired? Is there any provision of law for their disposition?

Mr. HALE. That was provided for very fully in the legislation of last year, requiring the Secretary, as I have explained once (the Senator was not in) to report all such ships to Congress, and this year we carry out the provisions of the act of last year by providing the details of the sale. It is all thoroughly covered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me understand the question. The amendment has been amended by making it 20 per cent., I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to 20 per cent.

Mr. HALE. I certainly hope this will be adopted.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. JACKSON's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. My colleague is necessarily absent. I do not know how he would vote upon this question if here.

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). The pair heretofore arranged between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] and myself has been transferred, so that it exists between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG], but as on this question he would vote the same way that I would vote, I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. WINDOM (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas, 33, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allison,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Barrow,	Hale,	Logan,	Ransom,
Beck,	Hampton,	McDill,	Sherman,

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what was the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Construction and Repair last year for the current fiscal year. Was it not $1,750,000?

Mr. HALE. It was $1,750,000.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the purpose is to build a navy, what is the object of reducing the expenditures to that extent?

Mr. HALE. The committee has done what I think is a good thing this year. It has not confused the appropriations for the building of a new navy with the appropriations for maintaining the old one, by lumping them under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, but has made an appropriation for the maintenance of the old Navy under that bureau, as appears here, and then later in the bill under the item headed "increase of the navy," has provided for the new establishment.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Steam-Engineering," in line 383, after the word "boilers" to strike out "including steam-steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses," &c.; so as to read:

For repairs, completion, and preservation of machinery and boilers in vessels on the stocks and in ordinary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "stores," in line 384, to strike out "and patent rights and royalties" before the word "purchase;" so as to read:

Purchase and preservation of all materials and stores; purchase, fitting, and repair of machinery and tools in the navy-yards and stations; wear, tear, and repair of machinery and boilers of naval vessels, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 393, after the word "exceed," to strike out "30" and insert "25;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated costs of such repair shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

Mr. HALE. As the Senate by so very strong an expression in regard to the other bureau made the rate 20 per cent., I move to make this 20 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine proposes in line 393 to strike out "5," after "20;" so as to read "20 per cent."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to know if any probable estimate can be formed as to the period of time it would take to eliminate from these ships all their present machinery and provide new machinery for them, because I think that would be the natural effect of this amendment?

Mr. HALE and others. Question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," in line 401, after the word "for," to strike out "completing" and insert "engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to offer an amendment. After the word "ironclads" I move to insert the words "Terror, Amphitrite, and Monadnock." There are four ironclads, to wit, the Puritan, the Terror, the Amphitrite, and Monadnock. The Monadnock is in California; the Terror is at the ship-yard of Cramp & Sons, in Philadelphia; the Amphitrite, I think, is at the ship-yard of the Harland and Hollingsworth Company, in Delaware; and the Puritan is at the ship-yard of John Roach, at Chester, Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator allow me to ask him does he include the Puritan?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not include the Puritan. That is exactly what I do not include, and for the reasons that I propose to state.

I do not believe that the Senate should make any appropriation of money for the completion of any one of these ships at the present time. The Miantonomoh is partially complete. For two or three years she has been under construction out of continuing appropriations under the Navy Department. At the last session we made an appropriation of $200,000 for equipping that vessel with turrets. Up to the present hour no attempt has been made to complete the vessel so that Congress might know whether she would be of any use whatever when completed. An attempt has been made to show Congress and the country that the vessel would float, contrary to general expectation, if the additional weight the turrets and armament would make were placed upon her. I am informed, and I believe, that the weights upon the ship do not represent in any sense whatever the amount of weight the ship will be forced to bear to make her an ironclad with military efficiency equal to other vessels of her class owned by other nations.

Inasmuch as we have made appropriations of money to complete the ship, to furnish her with turrets, and to demonstrate her availability as a naval ship of war, is it not wiser and better for us to wait until the vessel is completed and until an exhibition or a demonstration can be made which will show either fitness or unfitness for the work she will be called upon to do? But pending her construction an appropriation is asked for of $1,000,000, and is reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to proceed with the work of four other ships, three of them of like character, and one of which has been condemned by three boards of naval officers.

With the Miantonomoh and vessels of her class I do not propose to deal. I propose that the risk, if the Senate wishes, shall be taken; it certainly will not be done by my consent; but I shall make no effort, so far as I am concerned, to delay an appropriation of money for vessels of the class of the Miantonomoh. But in regard to the Puritan I believe that that vessel is a disgrace to the American Navy. After having cost this Government, as I understand, nearly $1,500,000, we find a vessel which in the opinion of the best-advised naval officers is of no value whatever to the Government.

We have expended large sums in the construction so far of these vessels; and if it be the wish of the Department and of the Senate to complete three of them, then I shall offer no objection to it; but with regard to one of them I have to deal. I wish to know upon what grounds of justification—and I now address myself to the Senator who has this bill in charge—he proposes to complete a vessel when three boards of naval officers, the very best in point of ability in the American Navy, have declared that she was an entire failure?

Mr. LOGAN. Of what vessel is the Senator speaking?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am speaking of the Puritan.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator was speaking of the Miantonomoh.

Mr. McPHERSON. I was speaking of the Miantonomoh. I declared the Miantonomoh to be a failure, but some boards of naval officers have declared she is not, and I suppose their opinion is better than mine.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I do not wish to take the discussion out of the hands of my friend and of the Senator in charge of the bill; but I wish to ask a question, the answer to which probably would give us a little light on the subject. The Senator speaks of the Miantonomoh and then of the different vessels as we go along. I should like to know why it is that he says the Miantonomoh is a disgrace, and I should like to know what the objection is. Is it because her armor is too thick, because her hull is too light, because it is too long or too short, or what is the objection to the vessel? I wish to know so that we may have some idea as to the propriety of the appropriation. Is it that she is not able to carry the armor that she has to bear, or what is it?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will answer the Senator. In the first place, she is provided with an armor of iron of about seven inches of thickness. Her engine-rooms and machinery are not protected at all beyond any other point of the vessel. A shot fired from a 35-ton gun would penetrate her armor easily, I am so informed by competent authority, and would penetrate her engine-room; and a shot from an 80-ton gun would pass clear through the vessel, and the engine upon which she relies entirely for her movements would be necessarily wholly disabled. Strangely enough, no decision has yet been arrived at by the Navy Department as to the thickness of the armor plating which is to constitute her turret. Some engineer officers declare that she will be capable of bearing a turret of about ten inches in thickness; others declare that if a turret ten inches in thickness be placed upon the vessel it will be overweighted.

A turret with less than ten inches of best composite metal would make a vessel of no consequence whatever as a vessel of war to compete with foreign vessels of the same size and type. If we undertake to load her with a gun of sufficient power to make her an efficient war vessel, it will have the same effect precisely as the additional weight of turrets.

Although an appropriation of money was made a year ago to complete this vessel, up to the present time no decision has been reached by the Department. No plan has been made under which it is proposed to complete that vessel, showing to my mind, and as I think it would to any mind of any Senator, that there is a well-founded fear that the vessel will not be an efficient war vessel when completed. Seemingly the Secretary of the Navy is not anxious to exhibit the actual vessel complete in all its parts until new appropriations are secured.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to interrupt him for a moment for the purpose of getting the objection before the Senate, whatever it may be. I do not claim to know anything about building ships or armaments or anything of that kind, only what I learn as other people do; but the exercise of a little judgment sometimes goes a good way with people. As I understand the proposition of the Senator, based upon the suggestion of naval officers, he has been guided in his statements by what they have said, and the naval officers desire a vessel built that can not be penetrated, so that they may have perfect safety. That is the whole argument. Whenever that proposition is made to this Congress or any other, I say it is a silly proposition, for the reason that it is alleged that no armor has yet been made by any government which has not been decided to be penetrable by a certain class of gun that can be manufactured. Whether that is so or not I do not know. It is not possible, or, at least, it is not probable, that we now are going to build vessels with the same kind of plating, if I may term it, or armor that is found on some of the foreign ships. We have not proposed to do that.

In the first place, it was argued some few years ago that if armor over twelve inches thick were put upon a vessel, the vessel could not plow the seas. It has been discovered since that the gentlemen who said that did not understand what they were talking about. We can not build a vessel merely for the purpose of having it so that it can not be penetrated, but we ought to have a vessel with a gun on it that can penetrate some other vessel. In other words, we must not always be preparing to put ourselves in such a condition that we can not be hurt at all, but we must put ourselves in such a condition that we can hurt somebody else. That is the true theory, in my judgment; and if we have the right character of gun upon a vessel that has eight or ten or twelve inches of armor, she is a good war vessel. That is the point you want, the gun, and not particularly the thickness of the armor of the vessel, so that you have it up to a certain point, as to have your machinery covered for instance.

I find a great many people in this country who are afraid that some heavy iron-clad vessels will come over to this country, and they imagine that the whole seas are covered with them. There are but fifty heavy armored vessels in the world, and I do not suppose they are all going to come over to New York at one time. England has but ten.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not yield to the Senator for a speech.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator to one fact. I will sit down now, because it is not my time. I merely want to suggest my propositions to the Senator that he might consider them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I quite agree with the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to take the Senator's time, but if he will allow me, inasmuch as he has mentioned the matter of heavy ironclads, I wish to ask that the statement I hold in my hand of the number of vessels owned by every government in the world be printed in the RECORD. I have it in a report I submitted a few days ago after examination. I wish to have it printed in the RECORD, so that everybody can see exactly what is the thickness of the armor and the draught and size of every armored vessel in the world.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to have it read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks that a table reported by him in a voluminous report concerning guns and armor may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

ITALY.

[Four vessels.]

Name of vessel.	Thickness of armor.	Draught.	Armament.
	Inches.	Feet.
Italia	29.5	31	4 17.7-inch; 18 smaller.

[From Brassey's The British Navy; Very's Navies of the World; King's The War Ships of the World.]

Mr. McPHERSON. I quite agree with the Senator from Illinois that guns have gone in their destructive power far beyond the resisting power of vessels. I also agree with him that what we need are heavy guns; but the Senator must not forget the fact that we have three or four vessels now on the stocks upon which we have expended considerable money. The question to be considered is this: Is it not wiser for us to complete one vessel which will be an exact sample of those to follow, before we proceed to expend untold sums of money for the completion of the others? Is it not wiser, inasmuch as we have appropriated all the money heretofore needed for the completion of this vessel, that we should wait and see whether or not the expense of this one would justify appropriations for the completion of the others? If we have to throw them away ultimately it is better to throw away that portion of the work now done than after we have expended millions more for their completion. That is all the statement I wish to make with respect to the Miantonomoh class of vessels.

Now, as to the Puritan: in order that the Senate may thoroughly understand all that relates to the Puritan it will be necessary for me to give the history of the old Puritan.

The old Puritan was constructed by John Ericsson, one of the most distinguished engineers in this or any other country, under an order by the Government, and accepted by Congress in an incomplete state, she costing the Government nearly $2,000,000. A naval constructor in the city of Brooklyn, Mr. Thomas Rowland, offered to complete her in every respect for the sum of $353,000. She was at that time the most formidable naval vessel in the world, a double-turreted iron monitor with immense power and with great speed. She lay at her moorings, I think, at the city of Camden, New Jersey, or somewhere in Philadelphia, under guise of a law which allowed the Secretary of the Navy to repair naval vessels. He took nothing but the sign-board of the Puritan and constructed a new vessel around it and called it repairs of the old Puritan. It was like the Irishman's description of the manufacture of a cannon. He said they took a long hole and poured brass or iron around it. The Navy Department were equally ingenious. They took only the sign-board and built a naval vessel around it, calling it repairs.

Various offers had been made, some very large offers by foreign governments, for the purchase of the Puritan. Quite properly they were refused. By an order from the Navy Department, a telegraphic order only, this vessel was ordered to the ship-yard of John Roach, at Chester, Pennsylvania, and ordered to be broken up, before any board of naval officers, as the law directs, had ever investigated the vessel or had ever condemned her, before any board or authorized order of condemnation had been made showing her to be a vessel unfit for service; but, on the other hand, a new ship, one that had never left her moorings, complete in every particular, was ordered to be sent to the ship-yard of John Roach and cut up. Mr. Roach charged the Government, if I remember aright, $14,000 for breaking her to pieces, the material that entered into her construction being exchanged at the rate of three pounds of old for one of new material that entered into the construction of the new Puritan, built around the sign-board of the old one. The new monitor is the Puritan which the Committee on Appropriations now propose to appropriate a portion of this sum of money to complete.

Let us see what has been said by the different naval boards appointed by different Secretaries of the Navy respecting the quality of this ship.

Perhaps I am getting a little ahead of my story. Contracts had been entered into to complete the Puritan before the termination of the administration of the Secretary of the Navy whose term expired in 1877. Immediately on the installation of Mr. Thompson as Secretary of the Navy, to his everlasting credit and honor be it said, his first step was to suspend the operation of these contracts, and he appointed different boards of naval officers to examine into the construction of these vessels and report to him whether they were worthy of completion, and if so, whether the contracts entered into at that period should be continued as being for the best interest of the Government. Now, let us hear what they say.

Before proceeding with that part of the question, however, let me show the Senate how the contract came to be made. It was on a proposition made by Mr. Roach himself, upon plans and specifications furnished by himself to the Navy Department, that the vessel was first commenced. Neither the Navy Department itself nor any officer of the Department ever made a plan or a specification which was to guide the constructor in the work of completing the vessel. What the contractor was to receive was named in the agreement in dollars and cents; what the Government was to receive was left entirely to the discretion of the contractor.

As I said before, Secretary Thompson created two boards of survey. The first board of naval officers was one of which Rear-Admiral Mullany was president, and it made its report to the honorable Secretary of the Navy on the 21st of August, 1877, in compliance with his order of June 2, 1877; and the other was a board of naval officers, of which Commodore Stevens was president, and it made its report to the honorable Secretary of the Navy on the 14th of March, 1878, in compliance with his order of August 30, 1877.

The board of naval officers of which Rear-Admiral Mullany was president, which consisted of two naval officers, three naval constructors, and three engineers, was convened at Chester on the 12th day of June, 1877, by order of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, dated the 7th of June, 1877. The date of their report is August 21, 1877.

They state that it was necessary to prepare plans of the vessels from which to compute the displacement, and on these, their own perfected plans and careful calculations of the different parts in detail, their determination of the weights was based. They made, they say, a most searching examination and inquiry into all the requirements of the vessel that could be obtained, having before them the vessel as built, the superintending constructor, and the contractor's employés. This investigation occupied over two months, with the assistance of skilled draughtsmen specially employed. The result of their investigation is that the gross weight of the vessel completed would be 7,070.6 tons, leaving the gunwale about half an inch under water. The examination leaves no reason to doubt the general accuracy of this result, but it is necessary to remark that the thickness of armor assumed by us is only 63 per cent. of that originally intended.

That is the first board. Now as to the second. The second board for the examination of the Puritan, of which Commodore Stevens was president, consisted of one naval officer, two engineers, and two naval constructors, and its report substantially confirms that of the first board, condemning the vessel, and is mainly directed to showing how the weights might be reduced, but wholly at the expense of the military efficiency of the vessel.

The third board consisted of John Lenthall, the most noted constructor in his day in this or any other country, and Mr. B. F. Isherwood, one of the most distinguished engineers in the American Navy. What do they say?

The manner in which the new Puritan was built is a flagrant exhibition of gross ignorance and culpable carelessness.

* * * * * * *

No measures were taken to protect the Government interest, either in the cost of building the vessel or in securing efficiency for her when built. Uninvited proposals were made by the contractor, in the absence of plans, specifications, or any definition of the kind, quantity, or quality of work to be done, to build an undescribed vessel for a stipulated round sum of money; and such proposals were at once accepted without inquiry, competition, or any provisions guarding the interest of the Government. The general statement that the new Puritan was to be like a smaller class of vessels was far from being sufficient to either indicate the details of construction or to measure the quantity of work.

* * * * * * *

Neither plans nor specifications were drawn for the construction of the new Puritan; nor were any measures adopted to ascertain whether, when built, she would sink or swim. The failure or success of a first-class national ironclad was thus put to the hazard of mere chance.

What do they further say? After aggregating and making up their weight, which corresponds almost identically with the report of the Mullany and the Stevens board, they declare that—

The aggregate of the foregoing weights is 7,202 tons, while the displacement of the vessel to the top of the wooden deck on the deck-armor is 7,057 tons, making the deck at the side four inches under water.

In other words, if the vessel be finished in accordance with the contract and specifications the gunwale of the vessel would be four inches under water.

Now, what is proposed to be done? Confronted as we are by the reports of these three boards, all of whom recommend that the vessel be not completed, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate come before the Senate with a proposition to appropriate a portion of a million of dollars to complete a vessel which has been condemned by three boards of competent naval officers. I think there is a recommendation by the present advisory board for the completion of the vessel under some new plan by which it is supposed that the vessel may be able to float. The plan proposed contemplates, however, that the weight of armor be reduced, that the military efficiency of the ship be absolutely destroyed, and for all purposes of efficient naval warfare you might as well float a basswood or a pine ship as the Puritan, when completed, in accordance with those specifications.

Mr. President, I am aware that the Miantonomoh has been condemned publicly by nobody but myself, but behind me stand the most intelligent naval officers in the service of the United States supporting my views. In short, my views have been received from them; my judgment has been formed by arguments they have advanced and by reasons they have given. Confronted as we are by these facts, if the Senate of the United States appropriates one dollar of money to complete the Puritan, which has been condemned by almost every board of naval officers who have been called to examine and to investigate the case, then I say, and I say it with all proper respect, it would appropriate money for any purpose.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator a question. I have not been in the Senate Chamber during all of his remarks, but shall I understand him to say that this report condemns the Miantonomoh as being unseaworthy?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am speaking of the Puritan. I say no board has condemned the Miantonomoh. I think every board of naval officers has declared that it was proper and best for the interest of the Government to complete the Miantonomoh, the Terror, the Amphitrite, and the Monadnock. I make no argument with the Senator or with the boards on that question. I was only speaking of the Miantonomoh in which I said that I thought it was the part of wisdom for the Senate to complete that vessel and see whether she would be a naval vessel of suitable speed and power in a military sense and otherwise, and one that would justify the completion of the other vessels before spending money on them.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand, then, that the Senator bases his opposition to this appropriation on the ground that the Puritan has been condemned as a vessel that will not answer the purposes of a war vessel if she should be completed. Now let me ask him this question, for I do not know anything about these vessels except in Congress. Where is the Puritan now located?

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand it to be at the ship-yard of John Roach, at Chester, Pennsylvania.

Mr. PLUMB. The only objection then is to that one vessel.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do object, and I do think with reason, to the appropriation of any money to complete a vessel which has been condemned.

Mr. PLUMB. Then let me ask is this the only vessel which has been condemned by the naval board?

Mr. McPHERSON. I think it is the only one of the five. There are but five of them. I have named the other four. I am speaking now entirely of the Puritan, and my amendment relates only to the Puritan, because we apply the appropriation by my amendment to the Terror, the Amphitrite, and the Monadnock. We then reduce the appropriation as I proposed from $1,000,000 to $750,000, giving to those three vessels the exact proportion which the committee proposed to give them.

Mr. PLUMB. I have understood, but in a general way, because I have not followed the details of the controversy about these monitors, that some naval board had condemned others besides the Puritan. In fact I did not know that the Puritan was condemned, but I understand more than one was condemned. I have understood also that the Miantonomoh had been condemned and that on the authority of a naval board it had been stated that the Miantonomoh would not float, but that when she came to be launched it was found that the displacement was a great deal less than had been originally anticipated. I only speak of this now, in order, if there be such conflicting reports, or reports conflicting with the facts, we may take that into account in whatever we may do hereafter.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey to allow me to put a question to the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill, which may probably assist the purpose of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McPHERSON. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. The naval advisory board, under date of 15th December, 1882, reported that in their opinion "it would be wise and expedient to finish these vessels at once, and for the following reasons:" That means all four of the ironclads, the Terror, the Puritan, the Amphitrite, and the Monadnock. After giving their reasons in favor of the finishing of these ships, they proceed to say:

The board has the honor to report that it will be prepared before the end of January to submit complete and detailed plans together with the estimates of cost for the completion of the Puritan. With regard to the other vessels, their inferior dimensions will require more time and more careful examination to prepare detailed designs that shall give them the highest possible efficiency.

I should like to know whether that report and the estimate of the cost of the completion of the Puritan have been made?

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that I hold that report in my hand; and when the Senator from New Jersey shall have finished I propose, not at length but briefly, to answer him by reading from that complete report referred to in the document that the Senator from Delaware has in his hand.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator also refer at the same time to the estimates of those vessels in case they have been made?

Mr. HALE. I have them all.

Mr. McPHERSON. As I understand——

Mr. PLUMB. I want to ask the Senator this question: Has there not been more than one report made on the Puritan?

Mr. McPHERSON. I have read from four.

Mr. PLUMB. Have they all condemned her?

Mr. McPHERSON. All condemned her that I have read from.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am not speaking of the advisory board. The advisory board recommend her completion.

Mr. HALE. That is not the only one.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now let me answer the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas. He wishes to know if after these vessels were placed in the water experience did not show that incorrect estimates had been made of their displacement while upon the stocks, and if the experience was not favorable to their completion. That is the objection made by every naval officer with whom I have talked to the Miantonomoh. She lies here at the Washington navy-yard without turrets, without her batteries, without a thousand-and-one things needed on a sea trip; and then making allowance for the very smallest possible amount of coal, which can scarcely take her a two days' trip, they declare that the principal objection to her is that she is set too low in the water; in other words, the demonstration is there in this ship that whatever may have been the estimate made, either upon the stocks or after she was put overboard, the fact stands and stares us in the face that she already lies too low in the water, and, as I am informed and believe, with much less weight upon her to-day than the weight of turrets and armor required to make her an efficient war vessel.

Now, as to the question of the Senator from Delaware——

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask the attention of the Senator to this statement in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy under date of December 30, last:

> Since the annual report of the Department, on the 29th of November, 1882, the Puritan has been launched with the following results as to displacement:
> Launching draught of water, forward, 5 feet 1 inch; aft, 8 feet 9½ inches; mean, 6 feet 11⅞ inches.
> Displacement at this mean draught, sea water, 1,755 tons; fresh water, 1,713 tons—equal to a less draught in salt water of 1.47 inches.
> Freeboard, or height out of the water, forward, 16 feet; aft 12 feet 4½ inches.
> The Miantonomoh, loaded, as stated in the annual report, with iron cables representing the weight of her turrets, pilot-house, and armament, has sailed from League Island to Washington, where she is now subject to the inspection of Congress.

This would seem to establish, if true, two things—first, that the actual facts ascertained by the launching of the Puritan disprove absolutely and conclusively the reports of these various boards to which the Senator has alluded in regard to the condition in which the Puritan would be when launched; second, that the Miantonomoh has already been and is now loaded with the weights which she will be loaded with when her turrets, pilot-house, and armament have been completed, and therefore that all the question in relation to whether she is to be seaworthy or not, in the respects in which vessels for harbor defense are required to be seaworthy, has been settled in her favor.

Mr. McPHERSON. To which statement there are some people who have the audacity to make denial.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything more on this question except simply to answer the question of the honorable Senator from Delaware as to the probable cost. As I understand the estimate of cost as made up by the advisory board, it will amount to $1,600,000 to complete her. In other words it is proposed to expend more than a million and a half of dollars in the completion of a vessel which several boards of naval officers have condemned.

I may also state that I arrived at my estimate of value by adding to the sum named by the advisory board on page 4, called "a summary for the completion of the double-turreted monitors," part 2, Executive Document No. 28, where provision is made for side-armor, deck-armor, tiller-turrets, smoke-pipe, ventilator, and anchors, cost to complete hull $960,000, and the cost to complete machinery $455,576, to which I have added (which they do not appear to have estimated) the cost of boilers, making $1,619,276. That as I understand is vastly in excess of the original contract with Mr. Roach to complete the vessels. It is vastly in excess of the estimates made by other naval boards to complete the vessels, and I do not doubt but what if the advisory board and the Secretary are given what money they want they will be able to complete this and other vessels in the same way. The contractors will get the money, but what the Government will receive in return for it nobody seems to care.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the question whether these great iron-clad ships that have been taken possession of by the Government under the legislation of last session should now be completed, or laid up and ever afterward left, ought to be settled at this session of this Congress. There can never be, as it seems to me, any more facts bearing upon their condition, their applicability to modern warfare, and their value as means of harbor defense than those we are already possessed of.

In the early stages of the work upon these ironclads, from time to time the opinion of different naval officers and some self-constituted boards was invoked, sometimes with unfavorable results, but the whole condition and situation and value of these ironclads was never fully brought out in a deliberate, authoritative fashion until after the investigation set on foot in the House of Representatives under the direction of the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Selfridge board, so called and so known, made up of some of the most skillful officers in the Navy, engineers, constructors, and experts, examined these ironclads, and especially the Puritan, with the most complete and deliberate minuteness, and reported. I call attention especially to the Puritan because she has been the subject of the attack of the Senator from New Jersey. They reported with reference to the Puritan that she had disappointed them favorably in every respect; they advised unhesitatingly and unqualifiedly that she be completed. Upon that report the Secretary of the Navy then at the head of that Department, Secretary Thompson, said:

> The unanimity of opinion in reference to each of these vessels—

Referring to the list that he gives of the Miantonomoh, the Amphitrite, the Terror, the Monadnock, and the Puritan—

> The unanimity of opinion in reference to each of these vessels would seem to leave no room for doubt, therefore, that the interest of the Government requires the completion of all of them. In this opinion I concur for two controlling reasons—

He then goes on to give the reasons—

> First, that to leave them uncompleted, after so large a sum of money has been expended upon them, would be bad economy, inasmuch as the loss would be very heavy to the Government; and,
> Second, because when completed they would undoubtedly be equal, if not superior, to any other vessels of their class in the world.

And so on. That committed, on investigation, one administration to the finishing of all these vessels, including the Puritan. One year ago, when this subject-matter came up and appropriations were sought in some way to deal with the question of what should be done with these ironclads, the Senate, acting upon the House bill, which provided for the expenditure of money, called a halt under the lead of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I do not remember that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] was at that time active in his opposition. I saw the force then of the ground that was taken by these other Senators that there should be, before any money was expended, a complete official investigation and demonstration as to the condition of affairs; and we provided that a board should be created that should examine this whole subject-matter and report to Congress before any money should be appropriated, and in that the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Chandler, fully and cordially agreed. So it passed over, and another year has gone by and the difficulty has remained unsettled till now by Congress.

But in the mean time the board appointed, with all of the great powers lodged in it by Congress, consisting of some of the ablest officers in the Navy in the different corps, was selected by the Secretary with Admiral Shufeldt at the head, the board being made up in full of these officers: R. W. Shufeldt, commodore, United States Navy, president of the board; Henry Steers, naval architect, member, a gentleman well known in all circles that touch upon naval construction; Miers Coryell, marine engineer, member; Alexander Henderson, chief engineer, United States Navy, member; J. A. Howell, commander, United States Navy, member; Edward W. Very, lieutenant, United States Navy, member; F. L. Fernald, naval constructor, United States Navy, member.

This board proceeded to consider the question touching all of these ironclads, and made a preliminary report, which has been referred to by the Senator from Delaware, in which they declared unqualifiedly that in their opinion it would be wise and expedient to finish these vessels, the Puritan, the Terror, the Amphitrite, and the Monadnock. That preliminary report is as follows:

> NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD, Washington, December 15, 1882.
> SIR: In compliance with the act of Congress of August 5, 1882, requiring this board to report as to the wisdom and expediency of completing the monitors Puritan, Terror, Amphitrite, and Manadnock, we have the honor to report that we have made personal examinations of the hulls of these vessels, except the Monadnock, which was examined by the president of the board. We have also examined thoroughly all the reports that have been made by previous boards, by the Admiral of the Navy, and by the other authorities, and we have also examined, as far as possible, all the literature pertaining to foreign armored vessels of corresponding size.
> It is our opinion that it would be wise and expedient to finish these vessels at once, and for the following reasons, namely:
> First. The hulls as they are at present are of excellent workmanship, fully up to the present standard of iron-ship construction, while the flotation of the Puritan and the behavior of the Miantonomoh at sea confirm the correctness of the calculations of the designs.
> Second. It is easily possible to complete the vessels by taking advantage of the recent developments in armor, guns, and machinery, without making any radical changes in the design, so that their speed, endurance, battery power, protection, and sea-going qualities shall be fully equal to those of any foreign iron-clad of similar dimensions designed previous to 1879.
> Third. The vessels may be finished so as to develop all the above-mentioned advantages without making their total cost when completed in any way exorbitant compared with the value of the results obtained; again, the interests of our seacoast defense require a force at least equal to that which would be represented by those vessels.

We take the liberty of calling your attention to a certain erroneous impression which now exists with regard to these vessels. In one of the official reports upon these hulls a doubt was thrown upon the correctness of the calculations of the Puritan. This doubt has spread in the public mind until it includes all the ships. The actual flotation of the Puritan and the Miantonomoh proves beyond question not only the entire reliability of the calculations, but also that the hulls of these vessels are lighter in proportion to the total displacement than those of any iron-clad low-freeboard hulls afloat, with but two exceptions.

It has been the unfortunate custom in arguments as to the value of the results to be obtained to compare them with such foreign ships as the Inflexible and Duilio to the evident disadvantage of the monitors, no account whatever being taken of the fact that these vessels are double the size of the monitors.

If these hulls be compared with foreign ones of similar dimensions, no such disparity will appear.

The board has the honor to report that it will be prepared before the end of January to submit complete and detailed plans, together with the estimates of cost, for the completion of the Puritan. With regard to the other vessels, their inferior dimensions will require more time and more careful examination to prepare detailed designs that shall give them the highest possible efficiency.

Very respectfully,

R. W. SHUFELDT,
Commodore, United States Navy, President of the Board.
HENRY STEERS, Member.
MIERS CORYELL, Member.
ALEXANDER HENDERSON,
Chief Engineer, United States Navy.
J. A. HOWELL,
Commander, United States Navy.
EDWARD W. VERY,
Lieutenant, United States Navy.
F. L. FERNALD,
Naval Constructor, United States Navy.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Acting upon the suggestion that later this board would make a full report as to these several ironclads, touching their armament in detail, touching their cost, and touching all the facts that led to the conclusions the board reached, on the 15th of January the board made its subsequent supplementary report, which will be found in House Executive Document No. 28, part 2, Forty-seventh Congress, second session. I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to it. I do not know but that he has it now. This is the supplementary report of the board on these ironclads, in which they go on to report further——

Mr. BAYARD. Is the Senator reading from manuscript or a printed report?

Mr. HALE. A printed report.

Mr. BAYARD. What is the number of that?

Mr. HALE. House of Representatives, Executive Document No. 28, part 2. The part which the Senator has is part 1.

Mr. MORGAN. If that report is not very lengthy I should like to have it put on record.

Mr. HALE. It is not at all lengthy, and I will present some parts of it:

SIDE ARMOR.

The Puritan having been just launched, the question of weight has been definitely settled, and is 29 per cent. of the total displacement, or about one hundred tons lighter than originally estimated. This surplus weight the board has utilized in increasing the thickness of the side armor.

* * * * * * *

TURRETS——

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Permit me to ask whether it is not the fact that the reports referred to by the Senator from New Jersey were made while the vessel was on the stocks.

Mr. HALE. Those were reports voluntary, self-invoked, not altogether condemnatory, though somewhat so, but made in the early stages when the work was being done under the old regular appropriations. At no time after the ironclads were put in their present condition, and at no time after the investigation was set on foot showing how they had been built, were there any unfavorable reports. These that I am reading are the late reports.

Mr. MORGAN. Allow me to inquire whether all of these vessels are built after the same model substantially?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think they are after the same model technically, but they all belong to the class of great ironclads. They are of different sizes and shapes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a question. The Monadnock, and the Miantonomoh, which is lying at this navy-yard, are exactly the same size, and yet——

Mr. HALE. The Monadnock is not the same size as the Puritan. The Monadnock and Miantonomoh are the same size.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Puritan, which I wished to except from the provisions of this bill, is of an entirely different class, an entirely different model, and is the one that has been condemned.

Mr. HALE. Neither of these boards, the Selfridge board, officially, authoritatively, strongly made up, nor the advisory board, of the best officers in the Navy, condemn, but both substantially urge the completion of the Puritan with the others.

The board treat next upon the machinery, then upon the ordnance, then upon the expense, all of which may be found upon page 4 of the document which I hold in my hands. Probably it would be better to put the entire report in the RECORD in this connection:

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD, Washington, January 11, 1883.

SIR: Pursuant to our preliminary report of December 15, 1882, and in compliance with the act of Congress of August 5, 1882, requiring this board to report as to whether any changes should be made in the original plans of the Puritan, Monadnock, Terror, and Amphitrite, together with the cost of completion of each according to the plans recommended, and, having recommended their completion, the board has the honor to report in regard to the above, so far as refers to the Puritan.

The following changes are recommended, namely:

SIDE ARMOR.

The Puritan having been just launched, the question of weight has been definitely settled, and is 29 per cent. of the total displacement, or about 100 tons lighter than originally estimated. This surplus weight the board has utilized in increasing the thickness of the side armor; thus, the thickness for 218 feet amidships to be 11 inches for a depth of 3 feet 6 inches, thence to be tapered to a thickness of 6 inches at the lower edge. At the bow, for 14½ feet from the stem, to be 10 inches, and at the stern, for a distance of 39 feet 7 inches, to be 8 inches. The plates at bow and stern to be tapered in the same proportion as the 11-inch plates.

When the plans submitted to this board by the Bureau of Construction were prepared these tapered plates were not manufactured, and at present, though their cost is greater, it is the opinion of the board that they should be used.

In order to better protect the steering apparatus the board recommends that an additional thickness of 1-inch steel plates be fitted over the tiller-room, commencing at the skin-backing and extending to the after water-tight bulk-head.

TURRETS.

The introduction of breech-loading guns of great length, with a corresponding length of projectile, requires special facilities for loading with ease and rapidity which can not be obtained in turrets of the center-spindle type. After careful consideration the board is of the opinion that the roller-base turrets of 22 feet internal diameter will afford ample room for handling the 10½-inch breech-loading rifles, and will permit them to be loaded at any point with great rapidity.

The armor on the turrets to be 14 inches thick and 7 feet 2 inches high, except in front of the guns, where it will be 16 inches, the wood backing to be 11 inches, of white oak, and the shell of 1½ inches of steel, in two thicknesses.

A light superstructure to be placed on top of each turret, and a wooden pilot-house on the forward one, as shown in the present plans.

The present arrangement of armored smoke-pipe and ventilation is approved with the recommendation that the armor be extended to 9½ feet above the deck and tapered to 4½ inches at the top, commencing 4 feet from the bottom.

The board does not concur with the opinion of the Selfridge board in regard to moving the wing-passages inboard, but is of the opinion that the facility of reaching the sides in case of leakage, which is now afforded, more than balances the advantage of access to the stop-valves which that change is intended to attain.

As the Martin type of anchors can be more easily handled and stowed on the monitor bow, they are recommended for the Puritan.

With the above exceptions the plans of flying deck, anchor gear, and general internal arrangements are approved.

COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

The board estimates the cost of completing all portions coming under the cognizance of the Bureau of Construction, including steel or steel-faced armor on sides, turrets, smoke-pipe and ventilator, turrets, pilot-houses, smoke-pipe, ventilator, blowers, air-ducts, additional water-tight bulk-heads, anchor and boat gear, all external and internal fittings, boats, blocks, furniture, cementing, and painting, not including stores, at $960,000.

The increase over previous estimates is due to increased weight of armor and substitution of steel for iron, and also to increased cost of labor and materials.

MACHINERY.

A careful examination of the general plans and detail specifications prepared and of the weights of the machinery and its appurtenances as designed for this ship shows they are correct and not excessive. The general dimensions are sufficient to insure the power required and will admit of the engines being placed in the space allotted.

The total weight of two pairs of independent compound engines of the most approved type, together with screw-propellers, pumps, instruments, tools, duplicate parts, stores, and all appurtenances, including three additional bilge steam-pumps, with all their attachments of pipes, valves, strainers, &c., and also two separate pairs of engines, gears, pipes, &c., for turning the turrets, will be 1,072 tons, and the cost of all the above machinery, fitted and ready for use, will cost to "Steam-Engineering," $455,576.

ORDNANCE.

It is recommended that the main armament of the Puritan shall consist of four 10½-inch steel breech-loading rifled guns; that these guns shall develop a power for penetration fully equal to that of the present Woolwich 12½-inch muzzle-loader or the French 13-inch breech-loader; that they shall possess the strength and dimensions necessary to fully utilize a charge of powder of 275 pounds, with a projectile of 550 pounds weight; that these guns shall be mounted upon center-port pivoting carriages in such a manner that all the movements of recoil, running out, elevating and loading can be controlled by hydraulic power; that the arrangements for loading and supply of ammunition shall be such as to enable either or both guns of a pair to be loaded independently, and at any time, whether the turret is in motion or at rest.

In addition to these heavy guns it is recommended that the Puritan shall be provided with four 2-inch Hotchkiss revolving cannon and four Gatling machine guns, so mounted as to completely command all approaches to the vessel, and provided with steel shields so arranged as to protect the guns and crews from the fire of machine guns and light artillery.

It is recommended that the ship be provided with two electric search-lights of at least 20,000 candle power each, so mounted as to have a clear sweep of the horizon of at least 250°, and both lights to completely command all approaches to the ship. Each of these lights to be provided with its own dynam and engine, and each machine to be of sufficient power to work both lights at once, if necessary.

It is recommended that the ship be provided with a complete outfit of offensive torpedoes, and also with appliances against torpedo attack, these to be of the most effective patterns used in naval warfare.

The estimate of weight and cost of the ordnance outfit is as follows:

	Weight.	Cost.
	Tons.
Battery guns and ammunition, with hydraulic gear	231.7	$176,250
Machine guns and small-arms	8.6	26,900
Electric lights, torpedo outfit, and stores	15.2	50,000
Total	255.5	253,150

Detail plans and specifications for all changes and recommendations contained herein are now in a forward state of preparation by the board.

SUMMARY.

Hull.—Present plans are recommended with changes in side armors, deck armor over tiller, turrets, smoke-pipe, ventilator, and anchors. Cost to complete hull	$960,000 00
Machinery.—Present plans for propulsive machinery are recommended with steam-turning apparatus for turrets. Cost to complete machinery	455,576 00
Ordnance.—Recommended, four 10½-inch breech-loading rifles, with hydraulic apparatus, 4 Hotchkiss guns, 4 Gatling guns, electric lights, &c., torpedo outfit, ammunition, and stores. Cost of ordnance	253,150 00
Total to complete	1,668,726 00
Cost of Puritan to date	687,798 24
Total when completed	2,381,839 24

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD,
Washington, January 11, 1883.

SIR: From the estimate of cost of the completion of the Puritan, the following items of articles coming under the head of regular supplies, to be furnished by the Bureau of Ordnance, may be deducted in any special estimate:

Gunpowder	$14,000
Hotchkiss guns and ammunition	17,500
Gatling guns and ammunition	6,000
Torpedo outfit	30,000
Small-arms and ammunition	3,600
Stores and spare articles	10,000
Total	80,900

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. SHUFELDT,
Commodore, U. S. Navy, President of the Board.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD,
Washington, January 11, 1883.

SIR: The board respectfully present the following comparison of the Puritan with foreign ships as an appendix to our report of this date:

In order that a true estimate may be made of the value of the Puritan as a fighting vessel when completed in accordance with the foregoing recommendations, we make the following summarized comparison of the ship with two vessels of a closely corresponding type and size, which represent the latest developments in the English and French naval architecture applied to coast defense.

TURRET SHIPS.

In the British navy-list the Conqueror (now building) approximates quite closely to the Puritan in dimensions and type; and in the French navy-list the Tonnerre and class, although somewhat smaller ships, are close enough in size to admit of direct comparson.

Measurement.	Conqueror.	Puritan.	Tonnerre.
Local displacement.....tons.	6,200	6,060	5,580
Length between perpendiculars.....feet.	270	280	241½
Extreme breadth.....feet.	58	60	57½
Mean draught.....feet.	23	18	20½
Immersed midship section.....square feet.	1,145	1,037	1,099
Indicated horse-power	4,500	4,167	4,166
Maximum speed.....knots.	*13	*13½	†14
Coal supply.....tons.	650	514	270
Armament (breech-loading rifles) { 2 12-inch / 2 6-inch	} 4 10½-inch		2 10½-inch.
Number of turrets	1	2	1
Thickness of turret armor.....inches.	12	14	13½
Thickness of deck armor.....inches.	2½ and 1½	3 and 2	2
Thickness of side armor, amidships..inches.	12	11	13

*Estimated. †Actual.

MANEUVERING POWER.

The Conqueror was designed with especial regard to the full development of ramming power, necessitating the greatest possible handiness.

An examination of the measurements will show that the proportion of length to breadth is the same as that of the Puritan, while the latter has the great superiority in her lighter draught, which, taken in connection with her greater speed and greater number of guns and powerful ram-bow, gives her, in the opinion of the board, a marked superiority over the English ship in maneuvering power. On the other hand, the Tonnerre, being shorter in proportion to her beam, and having a higher speed, should possess greater mobility, but this quality is greatly modified, if not completely neutralized, by her excessive draught of water.

SPEED AND ENDURANCE.

The speed of the Puritan is superior to that of the Conqueror, while it is inferior to that of the Tonnerre. This superiority of the French ship is, however, gained at a great sacrifice of coal capacity or endurance; so great, indeed, as, in the opinion of the board, to entirely unfit her for any prolonged operations at a distance from a coaling station. The endurance of the Puritan and the Conqueror is the same.

ARMAMENT.

In the power of individual guns the Conqueror is superior to the Puritan, while the latter is in about the same proportion superior to the Tonnerre. Since, however, the Puritan's guns have sufficient power to overcome the armor of both the other ships, the efficiency of the armament depends directly upon the number of guns which the ship can bring into action. In this respect the Puritan has a marked superiority over both the other ships, since she has double the number of guns. The 6-inch guns of the Conqueror are left out of consideration, as they are powerless against the Puritan, and have no protection except from machine fire.

ARMOR.

In thickness of turret, deck, and bow armor the Puritan is superior to both the other ships, while amidship and aft it is inferior, it being considered that this sacrifice is more than compensated by the gain in power of armament, especially since the machinery and steering gear are fully protected by the heavy backing and coal.

The information available with regard to cost of the three ships is too meager to admit of a detailed comparison, but in the opinion of the board the amount estimated for the completion of the Puritan is in no way excessive, and compares favorably with estimates of the cost of other foreign armored vessels of corresponding size.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. SHUFELDT,
Commodore, United States Navy, President of the Board.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD, Washington, January 12, 1883.

SIR: In compliance with the Department's request, the board respectfully presents the following approximate estimates of cost to complete the monitors Amphitrite, Terror, and Monadnock:

AMPHITRITE.

Cost to "Construction:"
For hull, turrets, pilot-houses, smoke-pipes, ventilators, boats, blocks, furniture, including all necessary changes to admit of roller-turrets, steel, or steel-faced armor, &c.	$688,500 00

Secretary of the Navy.

Upon that report the Secretary of the Navy submits the whole matter to Congress. Upon the investigation set afoot at the direction and under the command of Congress, with the best officers selected in its power, with the most deliberate and complete examination and adjudication upon this vexed question, the Secretary of the Navy submits this question to Congress with no bias one way or the other. He says in his report:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 30, 1882.

SIR: Herewith is transmitted the report of the naval advisory board created by the act of Congress of August 5, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

The board is of the opinion that it would be wise and expedient to finish these vessels, and I recommend that provisions be made by Congress for their completion accordingly.

My views are expressed in my annual report to Congress of November 29, 1882, as follows:

"There has been much unseemly controversy over these vessels since the work was suspended, in March, 1877, after an expenditure upon them by the Government of $3,528,580.58. The fact of this large outlay is no reason why they should be completed if they will not then be worth to the Government the amount of the new money which will have been expended. Nor is there anything in their history which should prevent their completion if that result is for the real interests of the Government. The necessity, however, of some better provisio. for the defense of our harbors than is furnished by the fourteen single-turreted monitors, the relics of the war of the rebellion, is apparent to every thoughtful citizen."

If the nation is to regain its position as a maritime and naval power, reasonable provision should be made, not only for offensive cruising vessels, but also for harbor defense, by means of ironclads. Such defense can be accomplished more effectively and economically by double-turreted monitors than by any other form of armored vessels.

The new hulls of these four monitors are in perfect condition. It is possible to complete them for a reasonable amount of money, economically expended, and any responsibility for further delay I am not willing to share.

The department, however—

And I call attention of Senators to this—is not in favor of completing these monitors under the permissory contracts directed by the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. George M. Robeson, March 2, 1877, under the advice of the Attorney-General, Hon. Alphonso Taft. No investigation has shown that the prices for the work to be done under those contracts were not fair and reasonable, but the contrary has appeared. The order for the contracts, however, contained a provision as follows:

"It being expressly understood, however, that the Government is not to be involved in liability by reason of such action, and that the several contractors are to do their work, if they do it, waiting for, and accepting for their pay, such appropriations as may be made by Congress therefor."

These limitations expressly negative the idea of liability of the Government under the contracts unless they should be followed by subsequent appropriations by Congress, which, for various reasons not necessary to be now discussed, have been withheld; and no work was done under them before they were suspended by the order of Secretary Thompson of March 16, 1877. In the mean time conditions have changed. Some changes should be made in the plans for completing the vessels, and the prices of work and material have altered. The Department, therefore, should be authorized to settle fairly with the contractors for the use and occupation of their yards since 1877 by these vessels, and for their care and preservation; and new contracts should be made for the construction of their machinery.

A difficulty in contracting for the machinery is at once apparent. There can be practically no competition among engine-builders for the contracts. There are but few establishments competent for the performance of the work, and these will not be likely to bid against each other. The only practical method, therefore, of constructing such machinery will be to authorize the Department to make contracts at such prices as may be fair and reasonable. If the head of the Department and its bureaus ought not to be intrusted alone with the discretion to make the contracts and fix the prices, they should be aided and limited by boards of officers, which Congress may provide for, similar to the naval advisory board, to reject or approve any contracts which may be contemplated, which should be directed by law to approve only such as may be fair and reasonable, according to the lowest market price for similar work.

The question of the wisdom and expediency of authorizing the completion of the monitors, under conditions and limitations like the foregoing, is respectfully submitted to the judgment of Congress.

The statute directed the naval advisory board to make their report in detail by the 1st day of December, and also to report whether any changes in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion according to the plans recommended. The board has not yet been able to make its report in detail, nor to determine the cost of the completion of the monitors which it recommends, but is engaged in preparing such full report, which will be transmitted to Congress immediately upon its reception by the Department.

Since the annual report of the Department, on the 29th of November, 1882, the Puritan has been launched, with the following results as to displacement:

Launching draught of water, forward, 5 feet 1 inch; aft, 8 feet 9½ inches; mean, 6 feet 11 $\frac{7}{16}$ inches.

Displacement at this mean draught, sea water, 1,755 tons; fresh water, 1,713 tons, equal to a less draft in salt-water of 1.47 inches.

Freeboard, or height out of the water, forward, 16 feet; aft, 12 feet 4½ inches.

The Miantonomoh, loaded, as stated in the annual report, with iron cables representing the weight of her turrets, pilot-house, and armament, has sailed from League Island to Washington, where she is now subject to the inspection of Congress.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I have already alluded to the Selfridge report, made nearly three years ago, and I will now present it to go in the RECORD in this connection:

CHESTER, PA., May 3, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose report of board convened to examine double-turreted vessel Puritan, and accompanying mail papers and plans of modifications therein referred to.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. O. SELFRIDGE,
Rear-Admiral and President of Board.

Hon. RICHARD W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

CHESTER, PA., May 1, 1880.

SIR: In obedience to your order of April 10, the board have the honor to report that after a careful inspection and examination, in person, of the Puritan, now on the stocks in the yard of John Roach, esq., at this place, they are of opinion, in consideration of the very efficient and excellent workmanship manifested in the present structure, and the large sum which has already been expended on this vessel, that it is to the interest of the Government to have her completed.

Secondly. That it is not to the interest of the Government to complete her wholly in accordance with existing plans, models, and agreements.

Thirdly. The board recommend the following modifications of the existing plans, namely:

The side armor to be compound instead of iron, of a thickness of 10 inches to the depth of 4 feet 6 inches, extending along the middle of the vessel, and in wake of the turrets to the distance of 165 feet 10 inches; from thence the belt will be 7 inches in thickness, of the same depth, for 26 feet 7 inches on either end, terminating with a diminish to 4 inches for a distance of 26 feet 4 inches. The lower belt to be 4 inches thick and 2 feet 6 inches deep amidships, extending the whole length of the vessel.

The armor backing to consist of the best Georgia yellow pine instead of white oak.

There are to be two turrets of the Ericsson type; interior diameter 26 feet 6 inches and height 9 feet 6 inches, mailed with 12 inches compound armor. The pilot-house to be covered with 10 inches of the same material and the smoke-pipe and ventilator with 8 inches.

The passages on berth-deck to be shifted in against engine and fire-room bulk-heads; the spaces vacated to be used for coal.

Yellow pine of 3 inches in thickness to constitute the planking of both upper and berth decks; to be increased in the former to the width of three strakes to 4 inches in thickness, on either side, next to the water-ways. The deck-house to be abolished and the apartments placed below, leaving the platform or bridge between the turrets.

The armored ventilator to be increased from 8 feet to 11 feet in diameter.

For further information relative to the foregoing alterations and the location and number of bulk-heads for water-tight compartments, see plans L, M, N, and O.

The boats to be eight in number, as follows:

	Feet.
One steam-cutter, length	34
Two cutters, length	34
Two cutters, length	32
Two pink stern-boats, to be fitted as life-boats, length	28
One gig, length	28
One dinghy, length	18

These boats, if given the necessary width and depth, will be of sufficient capacity to carry the crew in an emergency.

The board concur in the following suggestions made by the Stevens board, so called, namely:

No. 1. The substitution of a wooden bulk-head, instead of iron, on frame 14.

No. 2. The removal of the iron compartments between frames 25 and 27.

No. 4. The omission of cement except the amount necessary to cover the strakes of plating, and allowed for in the estimate of weights.

No. 7. The substitution of wrought-iron bumped plates for cast-iron flooring in engine and fire rooms.

No. 8. The substitution of an iron bulk-head for the transverse bunker between engine and fire rooms. (See plans G and D.)

No. 10. The omission of extra weight in berth-deck beams, girders under berth-deck, and other items recommended by the late board.

No. 11. The reduction of the proposed weight of engine-beds.

No. 12. The omission of the shoot, only for ashes.

No. 14. The reduction of the capacity of coal-bunkers to 514 tons.

No. 15. The reduction in diameter of the upper fastening-bolts of armor-plates on side to 3 inches.

No. 18. The strengthening of the lower course of unarmored smoke-pipe and ventilator for securing topping-lifts for boats.

No. 22. The auxiliary pumps in engine-room to be placed on brackets above the level of the flooring.

No. 23. The boilers to be protected against the effects of employing the vessel as a ram.

No. 24. The position of the engines, boilers, coal-turrets, magazines, shell-rooms, smoke-pipe, ventilator, &c., to be shifted forward, as shown in red on plans G and D.

The accompanying paper, marked No. 1, gives the several estimated weights and the displacement at 18 feet draught, leaving a freeboard of 30 inches.

The displacement is in excess of the weights 226 tons.

This excess will allow a heavier armament and probably an increase in the quantity of coal.

Should a further decrease in the weights be desired, the side armor could be reduced ½ inch and the other armor in proportion, leaving the resisting power quite equal to the iron armor designed for this vessel.

The advantages of moving the passages between the forward and after berth-deck are that it gives a more direct communication, fore and aft, increases the coal space, and, in case of accident to the boilers, it facilitates the closing of the boiler stop-valves.

The board recommend two additional blowers for turrets and two for fire-room, with engines and connections complete; and also that the propellers should be so lengthened that their surface will be increased 15 per cent.

Cost of additional water-tight bulk-heads	$4,509 70
Cost of moving bulk-heads on berth-deck	1,000 00
Cost of increase in size of boats	1,000 00
Cost of additional blowers	7,500 00
	14,009 70
Less cost of compound armor compared with the armor designed for this vessel	11,907 33
Less cost of pine backing compared with oak	252 00
	12,159 33

In conclusion the board would respectfully suggest, owing to the indefinite tenor of the contract of March 3, 1877, for building the hull of the Puritan, that before any more work is done on this vessel a new contract should be made, with full specifications and detailed drawings.

Respectfully submitted by your obedient servants,

THOS. O. SELFRIDGE,
Rear-Admiral and President of Board.
F. M. RAMSAY,
Captain and Member.
ROBT. L. HARRIS,
Chief Engineer, U. S. N., and Member.
JOHN C. KAFER,
Passed Assistant Engineer, U. S. N., and Member.
W. L. MINTONYE,
Naval Constructor, U. S. N., and Member.
GEO. F. MALLETT,
Assistant Naval Constructor and Member.

I concur in the above report, with the exception that in my opinion a more formidable ship could be obtained for the Navy from this hull as it now stands by the erection of a central citadel, say, 120 feet in length, having the turrets on the top at either end, the whole to have 12-inch armored plates (steel-faced). The upper deck I would carry to the ends of the ship for the accommodation of the officers and crew. The additional weight of this superstructure would bring the armored deck just at or near the load water-line, which would be the best position for fighting the ship.

SAM. H. POOK,
Naval Constructor, U. S. N., and Member.

Hon. RICHARD W. THOMPSON.
Secretary of the Navy, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

Excess of displacement over weights, at 18 feet draught, in tons	226.44

Respectfully submitted.

THOS. O. SELFRIDGE,
Rear-Admiral and President of Board.

Mr. President, there are these ironclads, the Monadnock in California, the Puritan, the Terror, and the Miantonomoh, which has been brought around to the Washington yard, and by her flotation proves her sea qualities. As I said in the beginning, Congress ought to settle now and forever whether we are to do anything with these ships or are to abandon them; and it ought to be settled on the conviction of Senators whether they believe or do not believe that the present condition of these ironclads is such as to justify their completion. I care not a penny for all this ransacking into the old-time past upon the question whether, in 1875 or in 1876 or years before, the course was irregular by which these vessels were proceeded with under regular appropriations, with money extracted from those regular appropriations. After they had assumed form and were in the yards of the contractors the Government seized upon them and grappled with the whole subject-matter and has had report upon report since then by the best advisory boards that could be appointed, without any exception in favor of completion, and it is now for us to say whether we will complete one or two or all of them.

If there is anything in what I have said or in what I have read, there is no wit or wisdom in attacking the Puritan especially and exempting her from the action that we take with regard to these ironclads generally. Something has got to be left to the discretion and integrity of the head of the Department. There is no possible inducement, I may say, upon the present head of the Navy Department why he should in any way be affected by or tangled up with any old complications of his predecessors. He has but one thing that he should unerringly seek, and that is to administer his Department so that in the expenditures of the money which is given to him he may bring out the most for the Government. He has stated distinctly that there is no claim under these old contracts; that they were only permissory under Secretary Robeson; that they are limited and controlled, and no man to-day is seeking that I know of anywhere to renew and revive these old contracts. But here we are with our harbors open to the assault of any hostile power. No man can tell what twelve months may bring forth. The great colossal wealth of our seaboard towns is subject to be destroyed by the approach and entrance of a single armored ship in the hands of a hostile power. We ought to do something in the way of protection. I do not believe that these ships have or can have great sea-going power. The question has been mooted whether the Puritan or Miantonomoh when completed can be sent around the Horn to the Pacific coast for defense there.

To my view it is clear that we had much better finish the Monadnock which lies there and utilize her for the defense of our Pacific metropolis, and then we ought to have one of these ironclads completed, fully armed, and in readiness when war menaces us for defense. But we shall never know how useful they can be made until we do finish them, and woe be unto us, and we should call on the rocks and the mountains to hide us if we be taken unprepared, and by reason of failure to appropriate this money are found utterly and hopelessly defenseless.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the closing sentences uttered by the Senator from Maine were thrilling in their appeal to the necessities of this Government, that unless some of these ironclads or all of them were completed we might be at the mercy of foreign powers. If that appeal had been addressed to persons who knew nothing whatever of the history of the past eight or ten years it might have startled them out of their seats. I happen to know that more than eight years ago, during the administration of General Grant, these five ironclads were ordered to be rebuilt. They were ordered to be rebuilt during the last days of General Grant's administration, now about eight years ago; and how much do you suppose has been done and how much do you suppose has been provided to be done? I have been driven reluctantly to look into this matter, and I stand here in the Senate of the United States to say that a greater scandal, outrage, and burlesque upon public works or public service has never taken place than on the subject of these ironclads. Eight years ago they were ordered to be rebuilt. They were old ships that had done good service during the war; they were somewhat damaged and needed repair; they were ordered into repair, and they were ordered into private yards. They were ordered into the hands of private contractors to pay political debts, to extend favoritism. I have here a list of the places where they were ordered to be built outside of the navy-yards, away from official inspection, away from official responsibility. This was eight years ago, and how many of them do you suppose are now on the water? Five of them were ordered to be built. How many are on the water to-day? Not one. There is one that has been ostensibly declared rebuilt, but she is lying down here now at this navy-yard with her turrets off, no more fit to go to sea than a mud-turtle, and the other four are yet in the yards; and we are called upon to appropriate for them and appropriate from year to year.

Mr. President, reluctant as I am ever to deal in unkind statement, it appears to me that this whole system has been one to pay up political debts and as a means of making political assessments. Why should eight years pass by without one single one of these five monitors being fit for sea?

Mr. PLUMB. If I know anything about the appropriations for the last six years, I can see one very good reason why there has not been anything done toward finishing these monitors. Congress has not appropriated a single dollar for the last six years to drive a nail in them or strike a hammer upon them except in the case of the Miantonomoh, which is now here at the Potomac navy-yard. That seems to be a very good reason.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator is mistaken, unless I am.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. VOORHEES. He is, unless I am entirely mistaken. I say here that more than eight millions of money has been spent on these ironclads. They cost originally about six millions; more than eight millions has been spent upon them, and to-day we are not departing from the usual rule; we are asking one million in this bill, and that is short of the actual demand of $1,650,000. One Department asks so much money, another Department asks so much, and there is not a Senator on this floor who can make an estimate that these ironclads will be finished in five years. I defy the Senator from Kansas or any one else to make an estimate that will finish these things. Why are they not finished? Why are they there on the stocks in private yards? Simply because they are a means of drawing money into the hands of contractors year in and year out. The Senator from Kansas can not name one year in which an appropriation has not been made for these inchoate, imperfect, and incomplete ironclads—not one year.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt the Senator from Indiana and I are both mistaken. He seems to have supposed that somebody was going to build ships for the Government without appropriations. There I think he himself was mistaken. I probably have been mistaken myself in regard to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does it take eight years if men are in earnest and mean business? The Senator knows better.

Mr. PLUMB. But I repeat what I said before; that for six years no appropriation has been made for the completion or for any work tending to the completion of a single one of these ironclads except the Miantonomoh, which, in the condition the appropriations have placed her, is now lying at the Washington navy-yard.

Mr. VOORHEES. Either the Senator or myself is mistaken; one or the other is.

Mr. PLUMB. I say not one dollar has been expended even tending to or designed for the completion of any one of these ships, except that one, during the last six years. The Senator says I can not estimate in regard to what it will take to complete any one of these ships. He need not have bothered himself to make a statement of that kind; I would have confessed it in advance.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say——

Mr. PLUMB. I take in regard to that the estimate made by the naval advisory board, constituted by an act of Congress, and that estimate is as accessible to the Senator from Indiana as it is to me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know it is.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not mean to challenge what the Senator said about these various ironclads having been conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not said that.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I will take that back; but if the Senator were to say that I would not even deny that. I want him now to address himself to the point as to whether, taking these things on hand in these navy-yards and having these political debts paid that he has spoken of is it not better to go on now to complete them.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will address myself to the point. I did not say they were conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, for they have never been brought forth. It is a case of obstruction. There has been no production of these ironclads. Eight long years of gestation have taken place, and yet they are not here. However bad the conception may have been, there has been no deliverance whatever, and therefore I tax the naval administration of this Government for a miserable, farcical, and contemptible policy before the whole country. There have been five Seretaries of the Navy, one after another; Secretaries have come and Secretaries have gone since these five monitors were ordered to be rebuilt, and yet not one of them has been rebuilt; four of them yet rest upon the stocks in private ship-yards, and appropriations are asked for private contractors in private yards. I shall say directly what my view of this is, but before I reach that point I wish to demonstrate the burlesque upon the public service that has taken place on this subject.

I confess that when I looked into it, I was utterly amazed to find that in the last eight years five iron-clad ships were sucking the Treasury of this Government for sustenance—private contracts and private contractors, some of them very well known in political circles, yet not as favorably as they are well known.

Now, Mr. President, let me advert for a few moments to the system of our Government. We have established navy-yards. We have eight of them. Let us see where they are and what they are for and then see whether this sham is to continue. I speak of it as a sham, and I speak of it as a sham so far as the service of this Government is concerned. We have a navy-yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire; at New York; at Boston; at Norfolk; at Washington; at League Island, near Philadelphia; at Pensacola, Florida; at Mare Island, in California; and a station at New London, Connecticut. They are sustained at an expenditure of over $4,000,000 a year; and what are they sustained for? What are navy-yards established for in this country? Are they merely ornamental and not useful? With my imperfect knowledge of naval affairs—and I confess I do not aspire to such knowledge as the Senator from Maine has—with my limited knowledge, I had supposed that navy-yards were established and supported to build ships and repair ships and do the work of the Navy; that they were places where when ships came in from the sea they would find shelter and repair. We are spending over $4,000,000 a year to sustain these eight navy-yards, and yet I find that these five little monitors, called ironclads, have been stationed out, like a dark horse on the race-track for occult and secret practices, in private ship-yards to be built, instead of being built under official responsibility and public inspection.

The drift of my remarks and my purpose in taking the floor, and that is all the purpose I have, is to say that I intend that the Senate shall face the question of building ships in navy-yards established by law for that purpose, rather than putting them out to private contract to repay political work and to establish a fund for political assessments. I think perhaps my remarks would be better timed a little further along in this bill; and I give notice now that at the right time I intend to ask the Senate to say whether the Navy Department shall build ships and repair ships in the navy-yards established by law, or whether the Secretary of the Navy shall have the discretion to go among his friends and make contracts to pay political debts and raise political-assessment funds. This is one of the scandals of the time. It has not arrested the attention of the Senate and the country as it ought to.

Here let me repeat myself. Five ships were ordered to be rebuilt eight years ago, and they have been in the hands of men asking every year, and sucking from the Treasury every year until more than $8,000,000 has been sucked out of the money of the people, and yet nothing has been done. But one ship in the last eight years has been launched, and it can not float an hour. It is a scandal, it is a crime, it is an outrage, and it should be ended by ordering the Secretary of the Navy to take these vessels into the Government ship-yards, to take them out of the hands of the John Roaches and that class of men, and put them where they can be seen and known, and where they will come to an end some time.

Sir, rather than allow this thing to go on as it is going on, every one of this little miserable batch of five ships had better be sunk in the bottom of the sea than for us to go on making appropriation after appropriation with no end. It is a bottomless well. Here is $1,000,000 called for in this bill to keep on after eight years of nugatory effort. The Steam-Engineering Department asks for $1,165,000 for the same purpose—$2,165,000 in one year; and yet no end, no place to stop. I call upon Senators to consider this question. Eight years have elapsed, but there is no end yet, and there is no end promised.

I say to the Senator from Maine that I have not the slightest disposition to disturb him in this bill by calling up past things; but this question has got to come to an end. It can not go on forever, and it shall not. I ask the Senator from Maine, and I know he will co-operate in the laudable purpose as well as anybody else I ever knew, to devise some method to advise the Senate and the country when this thing is to stop, when we are to have an end of it. Eight million dollars have gone already to repair five old vessels that cost $6,000,000 to begin with, and yet we are asked here for $1,000,000 in this bill, and the Steam-Engineering Department asks for $1,165,000 more, with no period put to this continuous and eternal thing. I would rather move to sink the Terror, the Amphitrite, the Miantonomoh, and all the rest of them to the bottom of the sea than to go on with this illimitable and miserable raid upon public decency and public economy.

I wish to say a single word more. It may be a repetition of what I have said before, but I intend to call sharply and specifically the minds of Senators to this question: What are navy-yards for? Their tools are there, their forges are there, their furnaces are there, their men are there. The force, the labor, the skill, everything is there at the navy-yards. What are you going to do with them? Are you going to allow the Secretary of the Navy to go on spending indefinitely a million this year and more millions next year without a limit, when the Government has provided by law where this money shall be expended? This matter of private contracting outside of the navy-yards has no excuse in any economical policy of the Government, and I intend to have the sense of the Senate on the question of whether the navy-yards established by law can build our ships, and if they can not then I intend to move to abolish as many of them as we can spare.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I think that this is a very simple and a very clear business proposition, whether or not it is wise and right for the Senate to vote the sum of a million dollars to place engines and machinery upon the four double-turreted ironclads referred to in the debate and in the bill. In 1877 the construction of all of these iron-clad vessels was suspended by the direction of the incoming Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Thompson. His predecessor had made certain contracts which Mr. Thompson entirely disavowed and put an end to so far as he could, and certain it is that the whole progress of the construction of these ironclads under those contracts was arrested, and it was not begun again and has not been continued from that day to this.

I have nothing to say now of the causes which led to the arrestation of these contracts; of the charges that were made and of the charges that were in some degree investigated; but simply to say that it is to be regretted that the cloud of suspicion in regard to these contracts and the construction of these vessels was cast upon them, and it has never been since fully removed. I believe that it attached unjustly in many cases, and in one case of which I have personal knowledge and information as to the contracting parties I am prepared to say that I think there is no doubt of its injustice.

It so happens that at my home and within view from the porch of my house lies one of these monitors, distant probably a mile from where I live, and I have visited the yard of Harlan & Hollingsworth and there I have seen this vessel. I have gone over it in company with officers of the Navy, and I know something of its condition. Besides that, I know a great deal of the character of the men who had built the boat. So far we have had, I believe, since 1877 four separate commissions to go to these yards to examine these boats and to make reports to Congress upon them.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the Senator mean all of these boats, including the Puritan?

Mr. BAYARD. All of them have been examined, I believe. I include in that the last report of the naval advisory board, dated the 15th of December, 1882, and supplemented by a further report from the same body on the 15th of January, 1883.

The delay in finishing these boats has been, in my judgment, wise and economical, and was in the first place, because it was demanded by the honest sentiment of the American people to know whether there had been frauds upon the Government in the construction of vessels so far as that construction had proceeded. The result was that in 1879 or 1878, upon a full examination of the facts as they stood, and upon the report of the agents of the Navy Department, then presided over by Mr. Thompson, of Indiana, all of these contractors were paid, not upon the contracts, but paid what is known in law as a quantum meruit for the work and labor that they had up to that time bestowed on these vessels. They were paid, and I believe they were paid in full. That was of itself a renunciation of the original contracts on either side, and since that day the contractors for these vessels, as I understand, have received nothing, and no appropriation has been made to them for the continuance of their construction.

Now, you are asked, after the lapse of these six years, will you spend more money in finishing these vessels or not? And when you are asked that question and asked to vote upon it, the point is is it expedient for the interests of the American people that these four ironclads should be finished, or will you let them stand unfinished and continue them as they have been for the past few years?

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Delaware answer me a question which he is better able to answer than I am? Why have they not been finished?

Mr. BAYARD. Because Congress have refused to appropriate money until they knew that that money would be wisely expended and for the public use. I say further to my friend from Indiana, because Congress has been sending a series of commissions composed of the officers of the Navy, composed of the very best men we could get, as I understand, to examine this question, to know whether in fact we should continue the appropriation.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now, will the Senator from Delaware pardon me for asking him whether he is aware of the amount required to finish these ships?

Mr. BAYARD. Exactly. I have it here. The whole cost to complete the Puritan will be $1,668,729, which will include her armament in full and make her a perfect ship ready for sea.

Mr. VOORHEES. Without asking the Senator to go over the details, I understand the evidence is that these vessels, after they have been in private and dock yards for from six to eight years, will cost now six and a half millions more than they cost for their original construction.

Mr. BAYARD. If my friend will allow me to get through I think he will be satisfied, if not with my opinion, with the ground that I have for it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAYARD. I would with pleasure, but I should like to get through with my statement.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will not interfere with the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. Go on.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Delaware has given the Senate the information asked for by the Senator from Indiana of what it would cost to complete one of these vessels. I suppose that statement is based on the estimate of the advisory board?

Mr. BAYARD. That is the only thing I have before me.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the Senator now compare that estimate made under the present navy administration by the present advisory board with the contract price that was to be paid for that vessel under the original agreement.

Mr. BAYARD. Really that would be very immaterial.

Mr. HALE. And there never was a contract for the entire completion.

Mr. BAYARD. Even if there had been that contract has been terminated; it has been abrogated on both sides. The contractor has rendered the bill for the amount of material and labor, and the Government has settled it, and they are acquit so far.

Mr. McPHERSON. It is important, so far as this goes, that the contracts were made at a time when everything was costly, at the close of the war, when materials were dearer than now, when labor was dearer than now, and it is proposed now to pay additional hundreds of thousands of dollars upon a ship to complete her above the contract made, at that time deemed exorbitant. That I deem significant of itself.

Mr. BAYARD. That is the Senator's speech made over again on this subject. I have not much to say, but I should like to state it consecutively, if I may be allowed. Really this is not the question presented by my friend from New Jersey; it is his own view, expressed, no doubt, with entire accuracy on his part.

Mr. McPHERSON. I submit it is not my view, because I bring the record to prove it.

Mr. BAYARD. I might answer, I think, the Senator's suggestion by this: The specifications attached to the original contracts made in 1875 may have been changed, but no matter what they were, they no longer exist as an obligation either upon the contractors or upon the Government. In the mean time I understand that the armor, and especially the armament of ships, has undergone a very great change, and that which the Government would have built under the condition of light and knowledge in 1873, 1875, or 1877 it would not be wise to build at the present time. Therefore I do not see that much is to be gained by comparing the original contract price of these vessels with the present proposition to finish them, except it may be that if the Senate shall believe that these estimates are excessive, if they shall believe they are improper, they ought to vote against them.

Now, who shall decide that question for us, Senators? Can we have special knowledge of our own, or must we take the testimony of those officers of the United States Navy who by the act of Congress of the last session were created an advisory board with plenary powers and control by the Secretary of the Navy? I take it for granted we must trust some one, and for my own part I would rather trust the officers of the Navy. I believe it has been, I believe it is still an honorable service, and therefore when men of standing and character, of good record, are appointed to make examinations into affairs which their education and experience have qualified them to be judges of, I know no better source of information upon facts than those of experienced men of character who shall examine and report them.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to be instructed by the Senator from Delaware, whose long service and varied experience we all know. I ask him why would not the official place fixed for the construction of ships be better than private yards?

Mr. BAYARD. Does not my friend know that there is not an iron-ship-building yard belonging to the Government of the country; that the Government has not got to-day a place where it can build an iron ship of two hundred tons?

Mr. VOORHEES. Does not my friend from Delaware know that this Government is quite as able to provide a proper place under the law with appropriations to build ships as John Roach or anybody else?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not doubt that the Government has the power to have an iron-ship-building yard just as much as a wooden-ship-building yard.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think so.

Mr. BAYARD. But I merely state the fact that the Government has not yet exercised that power.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let them do it, then.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no place in the United States under the control of this Government where an iron ship can be built, and there never was.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Government can not possibly make a more dismal failure than has been given to the world in the last seven or eight years in the case of these five ironclads.

Mr. BAYARD. I have nothing to do with that question. The question of their failure or success is to be determined by the officers of the Navy. If they can not be trusted to tell us the truth in regard to such facts which they personally examined, then I think we had better abolish our Navy altogether; but that I do not believe.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think we ought to abolish the navy-yards unless they can perform the functions for which they are established and supported by law. We are paying millions a year for navy-yards, and yet let out the building of ships to private contract.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not, I believe, in this bill to originate the policy of the Government owning yards for iron-ship building. Whenever that comes up I shall endeavor to understand it and to vote upon it according to my convictions. But the facts are before us now that the Government has no navy-yard in the country where an iron ship can be even repaired, much less built. There is no such thing. I believe in Great Britain there are but two government yards, and all the great ships and strongest ships of that country, or at least the great majority of them, have been built by private parties.

But, Mr. President, this I think is rather beside the question we are discussing. It is whether or not it is wise and expedient to spend the sum of $1,000,000 on these four ships. That will be about $250,000 apiece. What will be the result of that? It simply will be to allow them to be finished, with engines and machinery, to be thoroughly tested, before their turrets and before their armament is definitely settled. A million dollars will not finish these four vessels.

Mr. INGALLS. How much will it require to finish the four vessels?

Mr. BAYARD. The figures are here.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear them.

Mr. BAYARD. I have them here. For the four vessels, the Puritan, the Amphitrite, the Terror, and the Monadnock, the total cost according to the figures now given, when they are completed, armored, ready for sea, will be $8,925,400.

Mr. ALLISON. That includes, of course, what has been already expended.

Mr. BAYARD. That includes what has been already expended.

Mr. INGALLS. What I desired to know was how much more will be required to be appropriated to complete the four ironclads so as to render them effective for service.

Mr. BAYARD. I read the figures from this report, dated January of this year, and I must take them seriatim.

The total cost to complete the Puritan will be $1,668,726. There has been already expended upon her $687,798.24. Her total cost when built and ready for sea as a man-of-war for active operations will be $2,381,-839.21. That is the Puritan, the largest of them all. Next take the Amphitrite, the vessel which I say I have seen very near my home. The Amphitrite has had expended upon her already $507,218.96, and the total cost to complete her in addition will be $1,294,220. The Terror will be about the same as the Amphitrite, and the Monadnock a little more than the Amphitrite.

Mr. INGALLS. What will be the aggregate that we shall be required to appropriate hereafter to render these vessels fit for sea-service?

Mr. BAYARD. It is before me in these figures.

Mr. ALLISON. Five million six hundred and ninety-one thousand six hundred and five dollars, including the one million dollars in this bill.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate may face the bill as it will be. It will cost us rather more than $5,000,000, in addition to what has been expended for the American Government to own these four ironclads. Now, are they worth it? Is it advisable, contemplating that ultimate expense, is it wise for us to continue the outlay? How are we to answer that question? Who shall instruct us? Have we any better authority than the naval advisory board as at present constituted? That is a question of fact. It is a question dependent on the weight that is to be given to the personal character, professional skill and experience of these gentlemen, not one of whom I think is personally known to me, Commodore Shufeldt; Henry Steers, naval architect; Miers Coryell, marine engineer; Alexander Henderson, chief engineer of the Navy; J. A. Howell, commander; Edward W. Very, a lieutenant, and Mr. Fernald, a naval constructor. Senators, can we trust these men or can we not? Have they the skill; have they the science, and then have they the character to tell us the true result?

Mr. VOORHEES. What do they say? What is their report?

Mr. BAYARD. Their report is that these vessels should be finished; that it is expedient for the interests of the people of this country that they should be. Let me read what they say; and remember that this report is the culmination of a series of reports, all pointing in the same direction:

It is our opinion that it would be wise and expedient to finish these vessels at once, and for the following reasons, namely—

Then follow the reasons they give that these vessels when finished would be superior to vessels of their class owned by any other government. I say "of their class," because we have no such vessels as vessels in the Italian navy or, I believe, two in the German navy, the cost of which singly is more than the entire cost of these four. I myself saw, I was on board a ship, I think called the Superb, in 1879, lying at the docks at Chatham, in England, built by a private ship-yard there for the Turkish Government. Either the Turkish Government could not pay for it or the British Government would not let them take it, but the British Government had bought this vessel. She was a masterpiece of strength, and had cost under their system at that time more than £600,000 sterling, and her armament, which was to consist of but two guns, two 200-ton guns, such as we have not in this country at all, was to cost about £150,000 more.

There you have more than three and a half million dollars for a single vessel. We are asked under the total cost of these four to pay something about $8,100,000. These are large sums; they are grave sums; and the men who are to be intrusted with this expenditure, or the men who are to vote this expenditure, must have good ground for their judgment and their confidence. It comes down to that—can we trust our own officers? The naval advisory board tell us truly when they say here:

The hulls, as they are at present, are of excellent workmanship, fully up to the present standard of iron-ship construction, while the flotation of the Puritan and the behavior of the Miantonomoh at sea confirm the correctness of the calculations of the designs.

It is easily possible to complete the vessels by taking advantage of the recent developments in armor, guns, and machinery, without making any radical changes in the design, so that their speed, endurance, battery power, protection, and sea-going qualities shall be fully equal to those of any foreign iron-clad of similar dimensions designed previous to 1879.

What there has been since 1879 I do not know; but here is a report made almost in the month in which we are speaking, in which they continue to recommend the finishing of these vessels. It is, therefore, a question of judgment, a question of conscience, whether we are to take the money of the American people and continue the construction of these ships or not; for the present appropriation of a million dollars does not finish one of them. It simply puts in steam-engines that they may be maneuvered and tested as to their capacity of armor carrying. It will not buy them a gun; it will not put the machinery in their turrets. I may say that as far as one of these goes, I am informed that the boilers and the like are already there, and that the sum of $250,000 will put in the machinery and allow it to go to sea and to be maneuvered, but it will not finish it for the use for which it is designed; that will require still more money.

The action of the House of Representatives was to appropriate $450,000, which was to be exclusively spent upon one of these ships, and they recommended that one which the advisory board might advise to be first completed. That was understood, I believe, to be the Puritan. She is nearer completion; she is launched; she is lying at the yard of her builder on the Delaware River, just below Philadelphia. It was understood that that money would be spent upon the Puritan alone, and the others would not be touched. But the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate said that it would be invidious, as I understand the meaning of their report, to select one to be finished and leave the others not. They all stand about upon a level of official recommendation. I mean by official recommendation the recommendation of the naval advisory board. We created that board last year as a double guard to the American people, or I will call it a check upon the Navy Department.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question in this connection?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator bases his whole judgment, his whole argument, the reason for his entire action upon the advisory board, contradicted, disputed as it is, by five former boards of naval officers, equally intelligent, equally distinguished. He still insists upon it that the decision of the five other boards is to be rejected, and the recommendation of the advisory board is to be taken.

Mr. BAYARD. There comes an issue of fact which is settled by the record, not by me. I ask the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. It has been averred by the Senator from New Jersey that the present finding of the advisory board is contradicted by—how many did the Senator say?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will speak within my knowledge of four.

Mr. BAYARD. Of four previous commissions to examine into this very subject. My impression is, and it is a very positive one, that I have read three reports in favor of finishing these monitors.

Mr. HALE. As I stated, since these ironclads assumed the form in which they now exist——

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator please distinguish as he goes along between the Puritan and the other vessels?

Mr. HALE. I will distinctly state it, and state it in my own way as clearly as I can, and then the Senator may make his statement. Setting aside all the preliminary work upon these ships when they were first struck out and small sums of money were diverted from the regular appropriations to build them up from time to time, when there was a question whether their model was good and when self-invoked boards or officers of the Navy passed upon them, up to the time when the Government took charge of them and the new contracts were made which were arrested by the Navy Department, every report that has been made upon them in their present condition has been in favor of finishing them. At the earlier stage, before they had assumed any form, when it was a question of theory in the Department and one officer was contending with another, you will find letters and so-called reports both in favor and against; but there has not been any condemnation of these vessels as they are now; it is as they were seven years ago. There has not been a word of condemnation; on the other hand it has all been approved by every board.

Mr. McPHERSON. Did not the Mullany board, the Stevens board, and the Lenthall board all condemn the policy?

Mr. HALE. There never was a Lenthall board.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the record lies.

Mr. BAYARD. I think Mr. Lenthall did make a dissenting report.

Mr. HALE. He did.

Mr. BAYARD. And he criticised the feature and existing possibilities of these vessels very severely, but certainly he did not do it as a board.

Mr. HALE. There was one school of thought and theory in the Navy that never believed in the construction of these ships, but when they took form and when any board could pass upon them and their capabilities the report was in their favor and has been ever since.

Mr. BAYARD. The question of naval architecture, the question of the advisability of constructing a navy of heavily-armored ships is a still unsettled problem anywhere. There have been some tragical examples in the British navy and in other navies that might well give pause to the people of the United States before they embarked upon a system that had created the Captain, the Vanguard, and the great ship of the Germans which was sunk the other day and lies at the bottom of the English Channel. The Captain was the strongest ship that ever floated, and she went down in the Bay of Biscay in less than five minutes from the time she was seen by her consort.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me I will state that she cost more than double what either of these ships will cost. The reports of the British navy show that the ironclads that they have built from time to time, more than half of which have been laid up as failures or have sunk, cost all the way from $3,000,000 and $3,500,000 to $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 or over £1,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. What was the name of the German ship?

Mr. VOORHEES. The Cimbria?

Mr. BAYARD. That was a mere passenger ship. Was it called the Kaiser?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Kurfurst.

Mr. BAYARD. I think there is something in this far beyond the question of the cost of a million dollars, now proposed, or of $8,000,000 proposed or contemplated. You may spend $80,000,000 on the Navy and it may turn out to have been an unwise expenditure. Great Britain has spent more in experiments upon this subject since these vessels were put upon the stocks than would have built us a pretty fair navy. It is a very grave question, an enormous question, that may possibly involve the question of our natural superiority on the sea, whether we are moving in the right direction on this subject. It is not simply a matter of the expenditure of this million dollars for finishing these vessels, but it is whether we are progressing upon a wise road for our national safety.

Let any man read the history in our civil war of how vessels went down at anchor in Charleston Harbor, how that grand historic little vessel, the Monitor, the original one, went down off Cape Hatteras. It seemed as though they were destined to be the coffins of brave men; and there was a very strong feeling in the Navy among very distinguished officers that iron ships or heavily iron-armored ships could not be a success. Nor do I believe that their success to-day is assured in the history of marine architecture. Can any one say to-day that an iron-armored ship is a safe sea-going vessel? Is there a man here who would not feel his heart grow chill if he knew the crew and officers of an American man-of-war were to be exposed upon a dangerous coast in any iron-clad that floats to-day?

But here we are face to face with a problem that we are compelled to treat tentatively, and yet at the same time affirmatively. We have been a long time in finishing these vessels. Fortunately, owing to their material they can not decay, and the seven or eight years that have gone by have been well expended probably in waiting to see whether such improvement will not be made by the experiment of other countries that will give us instruction without the expense.

Now, at last, the question is, what will you do? Are these vessels worthy of completion, or should they be torn to pieces and sold for old iron? One of these alternatives should be adopted. I am perhaps as little accomplished as any man in this assembly to give any voice on the subject, and I should refuse to give an opinion of my own on the subject except it was guided by those who I think are competent to instruct me.

Can we safely follow the recommendation of this naval advisory board or ought we to turn our backs upon it and wait for another board to be formed and get another authority? That is the question. As far as I am concerned, I have confidence in these men; and more, I have confidence in these constituents of mine whom I know. They have too much at stake to let them furnish to the Government an expensive ship that shall turn out to be worthless. They are men too honest and too upright; they are not necessitous; they are not begging favors of any kind; they are only willing and anxious to employ their skill and their ability in competition with all for the benefit of the public in building these men-of-war. I do not believe that they would be capable of furnishing to the Government a perfectly useless ship; but I think if no one else would disclose the fact of the uselessness of the purchase they would do so themselves, unaided by the criticism of the officers of the Navy. But I do not stand upon that.

I take the report of these men. Are they capable, are they skillful, and are they honest? If they are, are they not competent witnesses to instruct us, and may we not, as the agents of the American people, vote their money to create for them that which every man feels is a need to-day, a serviceable navy for the defense or our commerce and the defense of our shores?

The proposition to build a steel cruiser is obviously a wise one. There must be an experiment in this, and all experiment has its risk of failure. I must say that I have looked upon the condition of the American Navy for the last fifteen years with humiliation and regret. It seems to have gone, and certainly there ought to be a beginning of its resuscitation. If these vessels are built and are finished they will be the only four really modern vessels of war at the service of the American people in case of trouble. That I believe to be so. We have not to-day a modern ship serviceable for modern warfare under the conditions that warfare is now waged between nations. We neither have the ships nor the guns, neither have we a governmental machinery for making either. There is not a steam-hammer in the country that could forge a modern gun, not one. There is not a Government yard where an iron ship can be built, not one. But I do believe that there are in this country American mechanics who are equal to any task of mechanism provided the opportunity is given to them that they may be justified in embarking their capital and skill in the attempt.

I shall feel myself justified, with the information that I have, in voting this sum, equivalent to $250,000 each, to put these four monitors in a condition in which their sea-going qualities can be tested. You may say that that being expended it may result in loss. Better that; the loss would be greater to give them up now. But I do not believe it would result in loss, simply because I am told that it will not by these experienced men.

Therefore I shall vote for the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am perfectly willing to do so. I feel that I am ustified, and I think the Senate would be justified.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, if this were an original proposition whether we would have five iron-clad ships, the remarks of the Senator from Delaware would be somewhat in point. They would be still more in point if it were a disputed question whether the Government should build those ships or whether it would have to rely upon somebody outside. They would be still further in point if the Senator could have shown that the private parties who have had this matter in hand had done something in responding to the demands which he has so well and strongly put forth for iron-clad ships. They have done nothing.

I am not standing here saying that these ships shall not be completed. On the contrary, I intend to ask that they shall go into the navy-yards and be completed there. The men for whom the Senator from Delaware speaks with such strength and force have had their day. They have had time enough, they have had money enough, and they have demonstrated to the world that they can not do this thing that we all want so much, or that they will not do it. On the contrary, they seem to be eking out their employment from year to year for some unknown purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. I am sure the Senator would not intentionally be unjust.

Mr. VOORHEES. No, sir; I would not.

Mr. BAYARD. I am sure of that. Let me state that one vessel, the only one that I know personally anything about, and which has prompted me to say what I have, is the Amphitrite. There has been spent on the Amphitrite $507,218.90, and every dollar of that has been cost. There lies the hull finished, the boilers finished, the turrets finished. They have all been examined by United States officers, and they say that the money has been honestly used by the men who put the material and labor in the shape in which they now lie in that yard. Since 1877 they have not been allowed to progress one inch, because not one dollar has been given to them to continue the work. They went on up to that time, and there they were stopped.

Mr. VOORHEES. What does the Senator think of a system that would suspend the work for six years, let the vessel lie there and rot and rust instead of being finished? Why not put her into Government hands and under Government control in a navy-yard, where she can be seen and where the work will go forward? The Senator says that appropriations were not made for her. There must have been some reason for that. There was a distrust in Congress; there was a distrust either as to the honesty and integrity of the private contractor or of those who had made a contract with him. The result is that the money already appropriated has been virtually lost.

I am not impeaching the propriety of finishing these vessels. They ought to be finished; they ought to have been finished long ago. I am impeaching the methods. I say here, as I said a while ago, this Government has eight navy-yards, and one station at New London, making nine places for ships to be built and repaired. There is the place for these vessels to go and to be put into responsible hands and held to a strict construction. There will be no motive then for eking out this employment and extending it from year to year.

In order that I may not be misunderstood I call attention to the fact that these vessels are being rebuilt, as follows: Two by John Roach, at Chester, Pennsylvania, the Puritan and the Miantonomoh; the Monadnock, at San Francisco, California, by Phineas Burgess & Co., private contractors. Why are they so much more reliable than this Government itself? Why are they more reliable than the Navy Department itself? Why should this power be extended to the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts with Jones and Smith or whomsoever he pleases, on such conditions as he pleases? The Terror has been rebuilt at Philadelphia, by William Cramp & Sons; and the Amphitrite at Wilmington, Delaware, by the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company. I have not a word to say in impeachment of the Senator's constituents. I have no doubt they are good and true and able men, but I put my Government up against them. I say your constituents have had their time; they have had their opportunity; and without aspersing them I tell the Senate and the country that it is time to order these vessels into the navy-yards where they will come under the cold daylight of inspection, where they will be brought in from these private circles.

I say, without meaning the slightest offense to anybody, that this long delay, this dilatory system of now, I think, more than eight years of attempt at building five ships, is one of the great scandals of our Government at this time. It horrified me when I first discovered it. I did not know that we had been wasting seven or eight million dollars upon five ships in the hands of private contractors, when by our system of government we provide for the building of our vessels in our navy-yards.

I allow neither my esteemed and accomplished friend from Delaware nor anybody else to go beyond me in desiring the construction of these vessels; they should go to the glory and renown of this country. I do not believe that anybody who has served with me either in the branch of Congress at the other end of the Capitol or in this body regards me as an illiberal man. I would vote liberal appropriations for the Navy, to support it, so that we could confront the world in honor and in power. That is not the question here. The question is how we should do this work. I say, before this bill passes from our hands we should record this verdict, that for seven or eight long years the effort has been made to construct these vessels by private contract and has failed, and now they shall go into the navy-yards, where the tools, the implements, the forges, and the labor are already prepared, and let us see how that will come out.

I would favor a clause settling up with these people. I would not harm them. I take no issue with the Senator from Delaware in regard to the report of the advisory board. I agree with them: they ought to be finished. Unless the material is wasted and rusted or unless the system of construction is vitally wrong they ought to be finished. That is not the question. I say that the time has come when the methods should be changed. The Senator from Delaware admits on the floor that it will cost some $8,000,000 to finish these vessels.

Mr. BAYARD. About $5,000,000, I believe.

Mr. VOORHEES. Say $5,500,000. I figure it $6,000,000, but it does not matter; that is a small amount, when you get to a sum of $5,500,000 to finish works that have been in private contractors' hands for eight years and nothing has been shown for the money already spent: say $3,000,000, which the Senator admits, except the imperfect launching of one of these vessels that lays down here now, in a condition that it could not meet a Chinese junkboat; it could not meet an open boat of Baratarian pirates; it could not meet anything.

Mr. BAYARD. Is that the Miantonomoh?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, I understand it is; and that is all we have to show for eight years of naval service. Administrations have come and gone, Secretaries of the Navy have come and gone, and that is all we have to show, with all this talk. I am weary of it, and I say, unless you have mistaken the ignorance of the country, there has got to be a period. You can not keep on appropriating, you can not go on this year with your $1,000,000 and your $1,500,000, and then next year ask for more, and then the next year ask for more. I have been in public life at one end of the Capitol or the other more than twenty years, and more than one-third of that time I have heard of these ironclads. More than one-third of my entire public service I have heard dinned and repeated the story of building and rebuilding these old ironclads that did gallant service during the war; and yet there is not one of them that can stand up to-day. As a matter of course I do not expect any foreign power to bombard us.

The nearest I have ever heard of anything of that kind was a threat which was made by the Spanish Cortes some years ago in regard to the thirty gun boats that were built in New York harbor with which to repress and suppress Cuban liberty. With true ancient hidalgo insolence the Spaniards said they could come up to New York harbor and cut out those vessels. This Government, through its officials in New York, had in a very feeble, timid, mild way libeled the vessels for being constructed in violation of the laws of neutrality, and for a little time they were detained, but not long. The Spanish authorities threatened that they could send up their fleet from the West Indies and cut those vessels out of New York harbor. They could have done it, too. The worst part of the threat is that they could have done it; they could have sacked and burned our cities for six months, and then we would have swept them from the face of the earth, for I have great faith in our own people. But that is not likely to happen; consequently I do not feel that we are in any great danger from foreign powers. The danger we are in is of being disgraced by keeping these chronic, consciousless, miserable old ships on our hands.

I intend at the proper time to make a motion to remit this matter back into the official fold where we can all see what is going on, taking it out of the hands of these people.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I think the contribution of the Senator from Delaware arraying himself with the opposite side of this Chamber in support of this bill would have been entirely unnecessary if he had waited until the vote had been taken, for I believe they have decided that this bill shall be passed as reported from the Committee on Appropriations. If there was any way of judging of the future except by the past, and I could be informed how so to judge, perhaps I might form a different estimate of the advantage to them politically of this legislation; but it seems to me as though it was determined for political or other reasons (I am pleased to call it for political purposes) to destroy whatever there is of the American navy and to place in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy an extraordinary and an unheard-of power, one that may and can be used wisely, one that may and can be used unwisely, and the people of the United States will be powerless to prevent it.

I have asked that in regard to one monitor (and to that subject the Senator from Delaware took especial pains not to refer, except as I persistently called his attention to it), which has been condemned by several boards of naval officers, the Senator and the Senate should omit it from the appropriation until we had determined whether those vessels not condemned would answer the requirements of the service. To that the Senator replies, "No; I insist upon the report of the committee, notwithstanding the adverse reports of naval boards." I submit to the Senator from Delaware if different boards of naval officers, equal in ability, equal in honesty, equal in diligence, perform alike for the interest of this Government the duty imposed upon them and report upon a particular matter as to what should be done with a particular work, if there is not a reasonable doubt as to whether that construction should go on. The answer of the Senator has been already given. He prefers to vote with the committee.

There is one question that I should like to have the honorable Senator who represents the committee, and who speaks for it, answer. Understanding as I do from all the speeches I have heard made here that it is the intention that this $2,000,000 shall complete the engines and machinery of these monitors, why do the committee strike out the word "completing?" Let me turn the attention of the Senate to line 401. The provision, as passed by the House, reads in this wise:

> For completing, in accordance with the recommendations of the naval advisory board, the engines and machinery of the double-turreted ironclad, which said board may advise to be first completed, &c.

The Senate committee for some reason best known to itself strike out the word "completing" and leave this a continuing appropriation, inserting the words "engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads," and striking out the latter part of the clause I have just read. Next year they will probably be here asking for $250,000 more to complete the engines and machinery of the double-turreted monitors.

For the present this is sufficient to begin with. No Senator on this floor is so ignorant of the construction of these monitors as not to know that an engine and machinery built for and adapted to the use of one of these monitors is of no consequence and no value whatever for any other class of vessels. I have shown reasons why in my judgment the Puritan should not be finished until the other vessels, or some of them, have been finished, and a demonstration made as to the utility of the vessel for the purpose for which it was built. Here lies the Miantonomoh in the navy-yard in Washington incomplete. Twelve months ago an appropriation of $200,000 was made to complete her, to place turrets upon her. To-day she is as incomplete as she was then, simply because the Navy Department, in my opinion, did not dare to present to the country a completed vessel of such a character as the Miantonomoh would be when completed, and then come to Congress and ask for an appropriation to complete other vessels of like character.

I am informed by a gentleman who ought to know, and who does know, that he would be very glad to take the contract for building the machinery of other vessels of like character with the Miantonomoh for a great deal less sum of money than the Senate committee have recommended should be given—for what? Not for completing engines and machinery, because the committee propose to strike out the word "completing" and leave it for engines and machinery, a continuing appropriation, an avenue for fraud, an opportunity by which somebody may be benefited; and I am sure I am not very wrong when I say that in the opinion of the people of this country somebody has been benefited.

If the Republican party in the Senate can afford to pass legislation here which is to confer upon one Department of this Government the extraordinary and unheard-of power that this bill confers upon the Secretary of the Navy, I have no objection to their doing so. Let the people hold that party responsible for it. But when that effort is strongly supported by distinguished Senators upon this side of the Chamber who do not belong to that party, then I say I am sorry.

I have made no criticism on any vessel which naval officers have reported as being worthy of completion. I have criticised only that one which, to say the least, is subject to a doubt. Therefore I propose to amend the amendment of the committee. I wish to retain in the bill, and shall insist upon it, the word "completing," which the committee proposes to strike out. I mean that there shall be no continued appropriation if I can prevent it. I propose to so modify the language as to read:

> For completing engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads Amphitrite, Terror, and Monadnock, the sum of $750,000.

This reduces the appropriation by the amount of $250,000, giving to the vessels not condemned all that is asked by the committee. After a committee of the House of Representatives had instituted an inquiry, and, as I understand, a searching inquiry, into the probable and the necessary cost of completing the engines for these vessels, and had made that sum even less than our committee asked for, and when I am informed by competent authority and by a responsible party that he will finish them for a much less sum and give a great deal better machinery, then I do insist upon it that the word "completing" shall be left in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 401 it is proposed to insert the word "completing;" and in line 402, after the word "ironclads," to insert "Terror, Amphitrite, and Monadnock;" so as the read:

> For completing engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads Terror, Amphitrite, and Monadnock, the sum of $750,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] on this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. GROOME (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] and hence I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote.

The list of Senators voting was called.

Mr. BUTLER. I am assured that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] would vote "nay." I therefore record my vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Barrow,	Cockrell,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Brown,	Garland,	McPherson,	Vance,
Call,	George,	Maxey,	Vest,
Camden,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.

NAYS—25.

Allison,	Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Dawes,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Williams,
Blair,	Hale,	McMillan,	Windom.
Butler,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Morrill,
Conger,	Hoar,	Plumb,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Coke,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Davis of W. Va.,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Slater,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Tabor,
Farley,	Jackson,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Ferry,	Johnston,	Platt,	Walker.
Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have a division of that question. I should like to have a separate vote on the word "completing," in line 401. The recommendation of the committee being to strike out the word "completing," I want to vote directly upon that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A motion to strike out and insert can not be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not susceptible of division.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 401, to strike out "completing" and insert "engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads."

Mr. MORGAN. The committee's amendment includes all that is proposed to be stricken out down to line 428, I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; that is another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question has not yet been reached on striking out the words referred to by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer the original text of the bill to the recommendation of the committee, and I do not know how I am to get a vote on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By voting to disagree to the amendment of the committee proposing to strike out.

Mr. MORGAN. But the Chair was going on, as I understood, to put the question on a part of it, to strike out the word "completing."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point is to disagree to that if you so desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Striking out the word "completing" and inserting "engines and machinery for the double-turreted iron-clads" is one amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose now to disagree to all the amendments of the committee striking out any part of the text of the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. HALE. That we have not reached yet.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to observe, without wishing to interfere with the order of business, that it is now nearly 6 o'clock. One hundred and fifty-one years ago to-day the greatest man in history, not in American history alone, but in all history, was born. We have consented to set aside the fact that the Government has made this day a legal holiday and have gone on with our work. It is nearly 6 o'clock, and I feel entirely justified in moving that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the Senator from Maine will not object. I would not disturb the order of business, as the Senator from Maine has it in charge, but the Senator from Alabama makes a motion that opens up a question that will take some time to consider. I think we have done quite enough after sitting from 11 o'clock until 6 on this day set aside by law as a legal holiday, and I hope the Senator from Maine, with whom I would not interfere, will see as I do that it would be very well to adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I do not expect to ask the Senate to stay here into a prolonged night session, but I do think, as we have got over the main difficulty in the bill, that if we can be allowed to run along for half an hour or an hour or perhaps a little longer we can finish the bill to-night. We have only eight days in all for all the other business that must be done. I do not believe we can put our time to better advantage than by staying here now for an hour or two and ending the bill. I hope the Senator will not push his motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Maine will make better progress to-morrow morning in eight minutes than he will to-night in an hour. I think that is true. I think we have done enough on this day to testify our desire to transact the public business. I insist on my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn. Until 10 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. VOORHEES. Is 10 o'clock the regular hour of meeting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I move that the Senate adjourn to 10 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HALE. If we can finish the bill in a little time, then I shall move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not believe the bill can be finished in a short time. For that reason I insist on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 14, noes 26.

Mr. HALE. Now let us go on and finish the bill, and then adjourn until 11 to-morrow morning. ["Ten!" "Ten!"]

Mr. VOORHEES. I say to the Senator from Maine he will not make one single step of progress to-night. I know that by the intimations conveyed to me of the view of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, and still I am so heartily in favor of getting on with business that I will not obstruct it at all. If he will move to meet at 11 or any other time to-morrow, I shall be glad to follow him; or I shall be glad to stay here if he wishes; but I fear we shall make no progress by continuing our session to-night.

Mr. HALE. I think we can finish the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Go on and see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair). The next amendment will be read.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "board," in line 404, to strike out the following clause to line 428:

The engines and machinery of the double-turreted ironclad which said board may advise to be first completed in the Government navy-yards, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, by the officers and employés of the Government, and not by contractors: Provided, That he can do the work of the same quality in the navy-yards as cheaply and thoroughly and with as much advantage to the Government: And provided, That if he shall not decide to do this work in the navy-yards of the United States, he shall then invite proposals from all American ship-builders whose ship-yards are fully equipped for repairing or building iron or steel ships, and from constructors of engines, boilers, and machinery, and shall build the same by new contract or otherwise, as the Secretary may think best for the interests of the Government, $450,000; but the execution of no contract shall be entered upon for the completion of either of these vessels until the terms thereof shall be approved by the advisory board, who shall approve only such contracts as may be to the best advantages of the Government, and fair and reasonable, according to the lowest market price for similar work, from responsible and competent bidders, and at a total cost not to exceed the amount estimated by the advisory board, in its full report, required by the act of August 5, 1882.

And insert "$1,000,000;" so as to read:

To be applied by the Secretary of the Navy under the appropriate bureaus: For engines and machinery for the double-turreted ironclads, in accordance with the recommendations of the naval advisory board, $1,000,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It is an amendment in the interest of private contractors, to give them a job; it is in the interest of those that confront the Government itself. I do not know how a Senator can justify himself in voting that his own Government can not do the work that is prescribed, and that he has got to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to put it out as a private job, and especially when year after year has transpired with no return except continuous failures.

Mr. President, I call upon the Senate to justify themselves in voting for this private jobbery, for that is what it is, to Pennsylvania and to Delaware and elsewhere, and against the navy-yards of the United States in constructing vessels. If there is a reason for doing this thing I have not heard it. Has any Senator here heard a reason why this matter should be let out at private contract to favorites instead of putting it up to official authority? I mean to keep on asking that question until I have some better answer than I have heard here.

It is not worth while to tell me that good men and honest men have these contracts in hand. That may be so. I do not stand here seeking to asperse anybody; on the contrary, a man who does so ought to die, unless he has just cause for what he says; but I do say, and I mean to press it to the last degree, that private contracts, private contractors, jobbers, and jobbers for profit, have this work, and they have done nothing worthy of recognition by the representatives of the American people, and I do not intend that this question shall be voted upon in any slipshod, idle, or blind way.

I believe these ironclads ought to be finished, and yet I believe we could live without them. I think that corn would grow and wheat would sprout and cotton and rice would plant and bloom without these four or five ironclads. It occurs to me that the world does not turn on that question.

I said a while ago that I had rather sink every one of them to-morrow in the sea than to carry along this prolonged and chronic scandal, and there is not a Senator here who will rise in his place and take issue with me. I challenge Senators on the other side who are responsible for the last seven or eight years of administration to tell me how you will account to the American people for the money you have spent for nothing—nothing.

All I ask is that this work shall be remitted and ordered into the hands of the Government; and I intend to make an issue here, if I can, between the authorized agents of the Government and the private contractors and jobbers who hold this work and have held it for eight years past, shamelessly doing nothing, producing nothing, accomplishing nothing, and yet they come up here smilingly, with cold-blooded, shameless indifference to public decency, and ask us to appropriate one million, two millions, and so on, until we appropriate five or six millions for them to do what they have had a chance to do for the last seven or eight years.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let us have a vote.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the question?

Mr. HALE. On agreeing to the committee amendment striking out these provisoes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the yeas and nays, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the square understanding that those who vote to sustain the committee vote to sustain these private contracts and jobs as against remitting this work that ought to be in the navy-yards for which we appropriate four or five million dollars to do the very work this amendment contemplates.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes; I want the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GROOME (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. PLUMB. By the terms of my pair I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I therefore vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Dawes,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Tabor,
Bayard,	Hale,	McMillan,	Windom.
Blair,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Plumb,
Conger,	Hoar,	Rollins,

NAYS—14.

Barrow,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	McPherson,	Voorhees.
Call,	Harris,	Pendleton,
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Ransom,

ABSENT—41.

Aldrich,	Garland,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Beck,	Gorman,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Butler,	Groome,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Camden,	Grover,	Maxey,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Fair,	Jackson,	Morgan,	Williams.
Farley,	Johnston,	Platt,
Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Frye,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. ROLLINS. Call the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule the Chair will direct the Secretary to call the roll of the Senate.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. JACKSON's name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is necessarily out of the city. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the following Senators were reported as present:

Aldrich,	Conger,	Hill,	Platt,
Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Barrow,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,
Bayard,	George,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Groome,	McDill,	Tabor,
Brown,	Hale,	McPherson,	Vance,
Call,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Morgan,	Windom.
Coke,	Hawley,	Pendleton,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HALE. What was the vote on the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five voted—21 yeas and 14 nays. If no motion be made, the question recurs on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and the Secretary will again call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that perhaps it would be quite as well to move an adjournment, because there are some Senators present who are paired and the roll-call may not disclose a quorum unpaired.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and said motion shall be decided without debate.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have that passed upon.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it lie over.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the offering of the resolution at this time, when another matter is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put the question and asked unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair had the resolution read for information, which is the rule. I so understood or I should have objected to it at once.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator object in the present condition of business to a rule of limited debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. He thinks the Senator from Massachusetts, after the resolution is read, has the right to object. The Chair, therefore, pending this bill can not receive the resolution.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary will hand the resolution back to me. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the pending question, a quorum being present, whether the Senate will agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], reserving the right to vote if a quorum does not appear on the first call.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], reserving the right to vote to make a quorum. I shall not vote at present.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], and vote "yea."

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote and upon this bill for the rest of the evening with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If I find that my vote will not change the result, I may vote to help make a quorum.

Mr. GROOME. My pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] having been transferred to my colleague [Mr. GORMAN], I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON], but reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. As I notice my vote will not change the result, and I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] would be willing that I should vote to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. The colleague of the Senator from Tennessee consents that I may vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Frye,	Logan,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Hale,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Tabor,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Conger,	Hill,	Mitchell,

NAYS—12.

Barrow,	Coke,	Harris,	Morgan,
Brown,	George,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Call,	Groome,	McPherson,	Ransom.

ABSENT—37.

Beck,	Garland,	Lapham,	Slater,
Butler,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Vance,
Camden,	Grover,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Davis of Ill.,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,	Williams.
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Farley,	Kellogg,	Sewell,
Ferry,	Lamar,	Sherman,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 445, to strike out the word "equiped" and insert "equipped;" in line 446, after the word "steel," to strike out "ships" and insert "steamships;" in line 447, before the word "engines," to insert "marine;" in line 449, after the word "vessels," to insert "and procure their armament;" and in line 451, after the word "report," to strike out "the same" and insert "said vessels;" so as to read:

For the construction of the steel cruiser of not less than 4,300 tons displacement now specially authorized by law, two steel cruisers of not more than 3,000 nor less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch-boat, as recommended by the naval advisory board in its report of December 20, 1882, $1,300,000; and for the construction of all which the Secretary of the Navy shall invite proposals from all American ship-builders whose ship-yards are fully equipped for building or repairing iron and steel steamboats, and constructors of marine engines, machinery, and boilers; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to construct said vessels and procure their armament at a total cost for each not exceeding the amounts estimated by the naval advisory board in said report, said vessels to be built by and under contracts with the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five of the leading newspapers of the United States, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 479, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be available immediately;" so as to make the clause read:

For investigating and testing the practicability of deflective turrets designed by Passed Assistant Engineer N. B. Clark, $20,000, to be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "immediately," on line 479:

The investigation and test to be made by the naval advisory board.

There is no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Naval Academy," in line 501, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one messenger, $288."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 519, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the pay of professors and others at the Naval Academy from $53,847 to $53,559.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 520, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the appointments of naval cadets provided for by the act of August 5, 1882, shall be made by the academic board of the Naval Academy, in the order of merit, upon such tests as shall be determined on by said board, and to be by it applied at the conclusion of their six years' course.

Mr. VANCE. Are amendments other than amendments of the committee in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are not yet in order, according to the usual practice of the Senate, unless an amendment to the paragraph which the committee propose to strike out. That is in order.

Mr. VANCE. It is germane to this. I offer the amendment in place of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina proposes to amend the paragraph to be stricken out.

The Acting Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the act of Congress of August 5, 1882, shall not apply to naval cadets and cadet-engineers who had completed their four years' course at the Naval Academy previous to the passage of the said act, and who may finish the six years' course and pass the prescribed examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that this is really another motion. It is a motion to strike out and insert in place of the motion simply to strike out. The Chair thinks, therefore, that at this moment the amendment would not be in order. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the proviso which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARROW. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "dollars," in line 520——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations have not yet been gone through with. So, according to the practice of the Senate, other amendments are not yet in order.

Mr. BARROW. My amendment is germane to that particular clause, and I think it should go in now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has now stricken out the provision about the appointment of cadets, agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee. That leaves the rest of the text stand. The amendment of the Senator will be in order after the other amendments proposed by the committee shall have been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 538, after the word "each," to strike out "three laborers, at $1.50 per day each;" and in line 539, after the word "all," to strike out "$24,471" and insert "$23,062.50;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of watchmen and others: For captain of the watch and weigher, at $2.50 per day; four watchmen, at $2 per day each; foreman of the gas and steam-heating works of academy, at $5 per day; ten attendants at gas and steam-heating works, one at $3, one at $2.50, and eight at $2 per day each; one steam-pipe fitter, $600; one foreman of joiners, one foreman of painters, and one foreman of masons, at $3.50 per day each; one mason, at $3 per day; two joiners and one painter, at $2.50 per day each; one tinner, one gas-fitter, and one blacksmith, at $2.50 per day each; in all, $23,062.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 559, after the word "each," to strike out "one attendant in the department of steam-engineering, at $25 per month;" and in line 561, after the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of the employés in the department of steam-engineering, Naval Academy: One master-machinist, one boiler-maker, and one pattern-maker, at $3.50 per day each; two machinists and one blacksmith, at $2.50 per day each; four laborers, at $1.50 per day each; in all, $7,671.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 567, after the word "appropriations," to strike out "for improvements or repairs at the Naval Academy" and insert "provided for in this act;" so as to read:

For necessary repairs of public buildings, pavements, wharves, and walls inclosing the grounds of the Naval Academy, and for improvements, repairs, and furniture and fixtures, $21,000: Provided, That no appropriations provided for in this act shall be construed to authorize, &c.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to inquire whether it is not well after all to allow them to finish that building for the superintendent? I thought when I first heard the facts that it was an unwarranted act of beginning the construction without sufficient authority; but is it not a matter of fact that the old building ought to have been destroyed? It was utterly unsafe and unworthy of continuance.

Mr. HALE. I will say that on my full investigation of that subject, conferring with the superintendent, I changed my mind upon it. I think that perhaps something further had better be done about it. I should like to have the amendment concurred in and leave it open to conference.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the Senator from Maine make some explanation. The explanation that has been heretofore offered seemed to indicate that there had been a gross usurpation of power or of discretion at least on the part of the superintendent of the academy at Annapolis.

Mr. HALE. I sent for the superintendent and he came over here. I was of the impression, as were the other members of the committee, that the action of the committee last year to the effect that this building should not be pulled down was known to the superintendent and that he was present when the committee talked about that. He convinced me clearly that he was not present; he stated that he knew nothing about the feelings or wishes of the committee and never heard anything about them until after this matter came up this year; but that on the other hand the building had become so bad, the walls were disintegrating so far that the sun and the rain came in, and that had nothing been done he could not have ventured to keep his family there for the winter; that he conferred with the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary directed him to appoint a board to examine it and if it was condemned then to go on and rebuild.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator mean to say that the present Secretary did not know of that provision in the bill of last year?

Mr. HALE. That I do not know. There was no provision in the bill last year. We only failed to appropriate for it.

Mr. DAWES. The provision in the bill was expressly for "repairing," and "repairing" was put in expressly for the purpose of preventing a new construction.

Mr. HALE. I do not know about that.

Mr. DAWES. Here was a building that had stood one hundred and fifty years and was made from brick imported, one of the most elegant and desirable buildings, it seemed to me, there was upon the ground.

Mr. HALE. I thought so.

Mr. DAWES. There was a little defect in one corner, and that was made the occasion for taking the building down in the face of the express provision that the appropriation was for "repairs," and when there was expostulation and argument used to convince parties designing to take that building down that it ought not to be taken down and that it ought to be repaired.

Mr. HALE. I think if the Senator had talked fully with the superintendent, who I am bound to believe is an honorable, truthful man, he would have become convinced, as I was, that it would not have been safe to have kept a family in the building. I did not think so myself at first. I think the superintendent talked with other members of the committee. I have not conferred with them, and I do not know what impression he made upon them.

Mr. HAWLEY. The correspondence on that subject with the report of the board appointed and the architect, changed my mind entirely. It seemed to me that that building was about to fall if those gentlemen told the truth, as undoubtedly they did to the extent to which those walls had bent and curved so that great cracks were opening and the foundation was settling. That report is here in type; I have it not before me at the moment, but it was laid on our desks to-day, and it changed my views. Whatever the unwisdom of beginning the building, I think as the old one is torn down and the new one is being put up, it is hardly possible to stop finishing it. You may censure the officer if you choose, but nothing is left but to go on.

Mr. PLUMB. My respect for the Senator from Massachusetts is so great that I hope he will not set himself up against the triumvirate of authority on this question. He might have been willing to risk his own precious body in that building, but he could not expect the rule he would apply to himself to apply to a naval officer. I hope he will withdraw himself from this controversy.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly I will.

Mr. PLUMB. These gentlemen at the Naval Academy of course are not to be measured by the rules which apply to ordinary individuals; and that which is supposed to be a legislative direction is to be obeyed or disobeyed at their own sweet will, and we do not have anything to do about it. I say seriously that I think this appropriation ought to be not only limited as it is now in the bill, but it ought to be still further limited as I suppose it was intended to have been that not only should not anything in the appropriation for the Navy Academy be applied to the building of this structure, but that no other appropriation in this bill should be used for that purpose.

Mr. DAWES. That was the intention of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. That was the intention.

Mr. DAWES. I will withdraw anything that may seem to be an implied censure on the officers there. I only express my own opinion upon the matter and my own feeling in reference to the loss of that building. It seems to me to be one of the landmarks that nothing would have tempted me to part with under any circumstances. There were two of these buildings there, one called the old Government house. They were both of about the same age, and they were buildings that nothing would have induced me to part with, and I very much regret indeed that they have been torn down. The circumstances under which they were torn down there have been a great many stories about, but I do not desire to discuss the thing at all. This amendment was put in in the House, and I hope it will stay myself.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any difference in sense between the Senate committee's amendment and the House provision, or have they merely adopted different language in order that a committee of conference may legislate on the subject?

Mr. HALE. It is intended to be more restrictive.

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean to say that it may not be proper to have a committee of conference, but I think if that is the purpose, and it will be avowed of course if that is the purpose, it is hardly proper.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if anybody has appeared before the committee in regard to this matter since the bill was reported?

Mr. HALE. No. The superintendent came here after the bill had been reported.

Mr. DAWES. Were there any new facts presented?

Mr. HALE. They were entirely new to me.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senate to listen a moment? I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy covering this subject. The Department was inquired of by a resolution of the House, and this was in response to it:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 5, 1883.

SIR: The Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following resolution, dated the 31st ultimo:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to inform the House at his earliest convenience, when, by whom, and for what reasons the old mansion at the Naval Academy, long used and occupied by the superintendent as a residence, was condemned and torn down and other foundations laid for a new building on the same site; also to state the total estimated cost of new building, if one is proposed, including furniture and fixtures, and to specify the items of appropriation under which expenditures therefor have been made and estimates submitted to Congress."

In response to the foregoing resolution the Department incloses a communication dated February 3, 1883, from Captain F. M. Ramsay, superintendent of the Naval Academy, and a report dated May 24, 1882, of a board of officers and experts, and also a report dated August 4, 1882, by Mr. E. F. Baldwin, architect, which furnish the information called for by the House of Representatives.

The action taken by the superintendent is approved by the Department.

The attention of the House of Representatives is called to the following extract from the report of the Board of Visitors to the Academy dated June 10, 1882:

"1. The superintendent's quarters.—This house was built about the year 1720. A cellar has since been dug under it, and several doors have been at various times cut through the walls, which has much weakened them. One of the side walls is seven inches out of plumb; the chimney on that side is ten inches out of plumb. The exterior walls are badly cracked, and the cracks are rapidly opening; in one room the floor has had to be pieced where it had separated from the wall. Owing to the disintegration of the bricks and mortar (not originally of the best quality and yielding to decay) it is impossible to bind the walls with ties. It would not be surprising if this building should fall at any moment."

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Here follow the application for the survey and the appointment of the board appointed by Mr. Ramsey in May, 1882. I read from the report of the board:

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY, Annapolis, Md., May 24, 1882.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 22d instant, we have held a strict and careful survey of the articles therein mentioned, and we respectfully report as follows:

BUILDING OCCUPIED BY SUPERINTENDENT UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The main building now occupied by the superintendent was erected between the years 1720 and 1740. It came into the possession of the United States Government on the erection of Fort Severn, and was transferred to the Navy Department in 1845, on the establishment of the Naval Academy at this place.

The building has been repaired and additons made to it several times, notably in the years 1845, 1850, 1866-'67, and 1870. In making these repairs and additions many doors, windows, and passages were cut, weakening the walls very materially.

The present condition of the building is as follows:

Foundation.—Originally built of very inferior stone mixed with brick, has deteriorated very much. The scaling of the stone used has caused the whole building to settle, especially the northern end. It has also been undermined for the purpose of deepening the cellars, and, although it has been underpinned with bricks, it shows signs of weakness from this cause.

Outside walls.—The walls from the center of the building toward the north end are very much cracked and bulged outward, the bulge on the front of the building being about four inches. The north end and gable incline outward about seven inches and the top of the chimney from nine to ten inches.

The wall of the back building (over dining-room) rests on a piece of timber about sixteen feet long, which causes the ceiling of the dining-room to crack continually.

The walls of the south end of the building are in a better condition, though numerous small cracks have made their appearance within a year.

Inside walls and partitions.—These show signs of the unequal settling of the building, it being impossible to keep the plastering fair on them. The old style of riven laths are used throughout, the fastenings of which are rusty and insecure. Very recently the plastering of one of the rooms fell, bringing the laths with it.

Floors.—The floors are very uneven, being much depressed in the north end of the building. The falling off of the north gable has necessitated piecing out the floors in that direction to give it proper support. The condition of the joists is not readily ascertained, but from repairs already made it is known that they are in bad condition.

The boards forming the floor are simply laid together (without tongue or groove), and the joints, by shrinkage, are open from one-quarter to three-eighths inch. Many graving pieces have been put in to stop the larger crevices and decayed places.

Roof.—The roof has been repaired and tinned within the last ten years, and is in fair condition.

Woodwork.—The woodwork is in very bad condition. The door and window frames are shrunken and out of square, and the base-boards have shrunk away from the floors and plastering, and are very much patched throughout the building.

In our opinion the building is unsafe, inconvenient, and unworthy of repairs. We would therefore recommend that it be torn down.

Respectfully,

W. I. MOORE,
Lieutenant, U. S. N.
CHAS. A. STONE,
Lieutenant, U. S. N.
N. T. HOUSTON,

Captain F. M. RAMSAY, U. S. N., Superintendent.
Approved June 3, 1882.

F. M. RAMSAY,
Captain, Superintendent.

Here follows a report from E. F. Baldwin, of Baltimore, architect. He recites very much the same facts and says:

The house is so seriously damaged, so old and inconvenient, that I think that it will be a waste of money to attempt to strengthen and alter it, as when it is done it will be but little better than a shell after all. I would advise by all means the demolition of the old and building of a new house suited to the place, and am satisfied that it will be economy in the end to do so.

If, however, you decide to attempt to repair or rebuild only the damaged portion of the house I shall be pleased to prepare plans and specifications for the same, with such approximate estimates as an outside view of its condition will admit.

I believe a new house can be built suited to your wants for from $15,000 to $16,000.

Then Mr. Ramsay says:

Subsequent to the report of the board of officers and experts, the main wall between the north parlor and the dining-room broke badly; and subsequent to the report of the architect, the walls of the chamber over the north parlor opened to such an extent on the east side as to admit the sunlight.

The work of pulling down the old building was commenced in the month of October. The foundations of the new building were laid in November. The good material found in the foundations of the old building was used in the new foundations. All good bricks have been cleaned and piled for use in rebuilding.

The building was torn down by my orders, after having received the verbal authority of the Department to make the necessary repairs. The building was unsafe; the foundations and walls were in such bad condition that they could not be properly repaired.

The architect's estimated cost of rebuilding was $16,000. No estimate has been made for furniture.

The materials purchased to rebuild the foundations of the house were purchased under the item of appropriations "for necessary repairs of public buildings * * * and for improvements, repairs, and furniture and fixtures, 1882-'83."

The labor used thus far on the house was under the items, "for pay of watchmen and others;" "for pay of mechanics and others," and "for * * * incidental labor and expenses * * * (generally known as miscellaneous), 1882-'83."

The architect's estimate for completing the house is $13,000, which amount was asked for in the annual estimates for the academy.

I should think that the officer had very doubtful authority, indeed, about beginning that building; but the question is what will you do with it now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I am informed that at the time when this building was so certified to be insecure there was a reception there at which five hundred people appeared; that the whole business from beginning to end was a part of the plan of a certain woman of that garrison to have a new house. She has twisted to her purposes the Secretary of the Navy, and the appropriation which was limited to repairs is now supposed to cover the entire construction of a new building. It is simply for us to say whether, when we make an appropriation for a particular purpose, we shall permit it to be diverted to an entirely different purpose. That is all there is of it. I propose, as far as I am concerned, to say that no building shall ever be built upon that foundation so long as Annapolis stands; that salt shall be sown upon it and nothing shall grow or be built there until we have sufficiently rebuked this kind of executive usurpation of the functions of legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. One of the advantages of a permanent office-holding class?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in line 567.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is a motion to strike out the proviso in order now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 569, after the word "new," to strike out "an entirely" and insert "a;" so as to read:

Provided, That no appropriations provided for in this act shall be construed to authorize or be applied to a new building for the use of the superintendent or other officers of the academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it in order now to move to strike out the proviso?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at this time, according to the practice of the Senate. It will be after the amendments of the committee are through.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the committee will take into consideration the future necessities of the Government instead of the mere idea of punishing some one.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 578, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to pay mileage as now allowed by law, and a per diem of $5;" so as make the clause read:

For expenses of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Maine to line 619, where the bill reads "computation of quarters."

Mr. HALE. It should be "commutation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This correction will be made if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Marine Corps," in line 622, after the word "corps," to strike out "and for difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men," so as to make the clause read:

For provisions for the Marine Corps, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 629, to strike out "one laborer at $1.50 per day."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 634, to strike out "for purchase of one hundred Springfield rifles, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 638, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for military stores of the Marine Corps from $11,756 to $9,786.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriation for contingencies in the Marine Corps, in line 659, after the word "labor," to strike out "and as clerks, messengers, &c.," and insert "for periods not less than ten days;" so as to read:

For contingencies, namely: For freight, ferriage, toll, cartage, funeral expenses of marines, stationery, telegraphing, rent of telephone, apprehension of deserters, per diem to enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods not less than ten days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 702.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter no officer of the Navy shall be employed on any shore duty unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall himself so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue.

Mr. LOGAN. The word "himself" ought to be stricken out in line 4, after the word "shall;" so as to read:

And shall so state in the order of employment, &c.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the word "himself" will be stricken out. The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. Any pay director, pay inspector, paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, assistant paymaster, paymaster's clerk, or other officer or person who shall purchase or pay for any stores, supplies, or property of any kind whatever for the use of or on account of the Navy of the United States, or any vessel therein, or any bureau of the Department of the Navy, and who shall be offered any discount on the price thereof, for cash, or as an inducement for the purchase thereof, or for any other reason whatever, shall account therefor and charge himself therewith in the settlement of his accounts; any such officer or person who shall willfully fail so to do, or who shall receive any present or gratuity of any kind or value whatever on account or by reason of any purchase or payment made by him as aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be dismissed the service, imprisoned for a term of not less than one nor more than ten years, and fined not less than one hundred nor more than ten thousand dollars.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is that stricken out?

Mr. HALE. It is new legislation creating penalties.

Mr. INGALLS. Are there to the knowledge of the committee officers who have been guilty of the performances mentioned in the section?

Mr. HALE. I know of none.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator regards it as being superfluous?

Mr. HALE. I regard it as a pure piece of new legislation creating offenses and penalties, which I do not want on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did not like to interfere with the Naval Committee about these matters.

Mr. ANTHONY. No doubt that is the law now. Any paymaster guilty of peculation is of course subject to court-martial and dismissal from the service. You might as well put in the Ten Commandments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which was to insert a new section as section 3.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not that new legislation also?

Mr. HALE. To some extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause will be first read and then it will be open to debate.

The Acting Secretary resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be appraised, in such manner as may seem best, all vessels of the Navy which have been stricken from the Navy Register under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the Naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1882. And if the said Secretary shall deem it for the best interest of the United States to sell any such vessel or vessels, he shall, after such appraisal, advertise for sealed proposals for the purchase of the same, for a period not less than three months, in such newspapers as other naval advertisements are published, setting forth the name and location and the appraised value of such vessel, and that the same will be sold for cash, to the person or persons or corporation or corporations offering the highest price therefor above the appraised value thereof; and such proposals shall be opened on a day and hour and at a place named in said advertisement, and record thereof shall be made. The Secretary of the Navy shall require to accompany each bid or proposal a deposit in cash of not less than 10 per cent. of the amount of the offer or proposal, and also a bond, with two or more sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned for the payment of the remaining 90 per cent. of the amount of such offer or proposal within the time fixed in the advertisement. And in case default is made in the payment of the remaining 75 per cent., or any part thereof, the Secretary, within the prescribed time thereof, shall advertise and resell said vessel under the provisions of this act. And in that event said cash deposit of 10 per cent. shall be considered as forfeited to the Government, and shall be applied, first, to the payment of all costs and expenditures attending the advertisement and resale of said vessel; second, to the payment of the difference, if any, between the first and last sale of said vessel; and the balance, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent a suit upon said bond for breach of any of its conditions. Any vessel sold under the foregoing provisions shall be delivered to the purchaser upon the full payment to the Secretary of the Navy of the amount of such proposal or offer; and the net proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury. But no vessel of the Navy shall hereafter be sold in any other manner than herein provided, or for less than such appraised value, unless the President of the United States shall otherwise direct in writing. In case any vessel now in process of construction in any navy-yard has been or shall be found to be unworthy of being completed, and has been and shall be condemned under the provisions of said act, and can not properly be sold, and it becomes necessary to remove the same, the cost of such removal shall be paid out of the net proceeds derived from the sale of other vessels hereby authorized to be sold.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, in line 26, to strike out "75 per cent." and insert "90 per cent."

Mr. HALE. That is right. I had an amendment of that kind which I proposed to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. That makes it harmonious.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Maine thinks this is general legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas make the point of order?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator gave as a reason for moving to strike out section 3 of the House bill that it was general legislation. I do not know whether he desires to be consistent in the bill or not.

Mr. HALE. Whether this provision is technically subject to the point I do not know; it may be that it is; but it is not in spirit, because it comes about in this way: Last year in the appropriation bill Congress provided that the Secretary of the Navy should make report to Congress of old materials and ships for sale, which should be left to the action of Congress, and that no sale should be made until Congress did act carrying out that provision, and this is put in to carry out that provision of last year's appropriation bill. I suppose that technically it is new legislation; that is, there are provisions in it without which the act of last year can not be carried out; but the Senator will see that in spirit it is not. It was contemplated by last year's act.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, I see.

Mr. HOAR. I see on the thirty-second, thirty-third, and thirty-fourth lines money is to be paid, 10 per cent. by the person who purchases and does not take the vessel, and is to be applied, first, to the payment of all costs and expenditures attending the resale; second, to the payment of the difference, if any, between the first and last sale of said vessel, and the balance, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury. Then the forty-second line is:

The net proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury.

To whom is that difference between the first and last sale to be paid, and what is to be done with it?

Mr. HALE. It all goes into the Treasury, of course.

Mr. HOAR. Then that ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. There is no necessity for its being in.

Mr. HOAR. It might imply there was a little fund that was kept.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to striking out the words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the committee to strike out "75" and insert "90," in line 26.

Mr. HALE. I thought that was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that it has been voted on.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now the Senator from Massachusetts suggests striking out, in lines 33, 34, and 35, the words "second, to the payment of the difference, if any, between the first and last sale of said vessel." To that I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I move that amendment to the amendment, to strike out those words.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I suggest, in line 32, that the word "first" should be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made to conform to what has already been done, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Does that conclude the amendments reported by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. In the same line with the amendment just offered by the committee I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

Mr. ROLLINS. It is to carry out the law of last year. It may be legislation in the technical sense; but in the sense in which the other amendment was not general legislation, I think this is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is to add as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That the President shall appoint a board of nine officers of high rank on the active or retired list, who shall, before the 1st day of October, 1883, thoroughly scrutinize the active-list of the Navy, and shall select therefrom six rear-admirals, ten commodores, forty captains, eighty commanders, seventy lieutenant-commanders, two hundred and forty lieutenants, seventy masters, seventy ensigns, one hundred midshipmen, ten medical directors, ten medical inspectors, forty-five surgeons, eighty-five assistant and passed assistant surgeons, eight pay directors, eight pay inspectors, thirty-five paymasters, fifteen passed assistant paymasters, ten assistant paymasters, five chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, ten chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, forty chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant, fifty-five passed assistant engineers, thirty-five assistant engineers with the relative rank for each as now fixed by law, twelve chaplains, six professors of mathematics, eight naval constructors, four assistant naval constructors, three civil engineers, thirty boatswains, thirty gunners, thirty carpenters, and twenty sailmakers, to be retained on the active-list of the Navy, to discharge the current duties of the service under the law and regulations governing it; and all others now on said list shall be considered supernumerary, and shall be placed on a separate list, not entitled to promotion, and with leave-of-absence pay, but subject to be ordered to service with the proper pay of their grade only in time of war; and they shall retire on reaching the age as fixed by law, or at any time before reaching that age, on their own application; and the officers so retained as above provided shall be entitled to their promotion, after proper service and examination, as vacancies may occur, without regard to the officers remaining on the supernumerary list: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to remove from the active-list the Admiral and Vice-Admiral of the Navy, nor in any manner to affect the status of any officer who has received a personal vote of thanks of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion till the regular order be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLISON in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin raised the point of order on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn until the unfinished business is laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I want a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I have called for the regular order, and I ask that it be laid before the Senate. I want that done first.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O street and South Washington Railway.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 352) to provide for an increased supply of the laws of the United States for the Treasury Department and its officers.

SUPPRESSION OF BIGAMY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be laid before the Senate. The title of the bill will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 352) to provide for an increased supply of the laws of the United States for the Treasury Department and its officers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL and Mr. JOHNSTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HARRIS. At the suggestion of some Senators I move that the Senate do now adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 22, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 7462 and that the same be brought before the House for present consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that bill, provided officers shall not be appointed for the two districts which embrace a part of the Sioux Indian reservation until the treaty for the cession is ratified. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that it may save time to let the bill pass for the one district, and if the treaty is ratified the Senate can amend it.

Mr. STRAIT. The bill provides that officers shall not be appointed nor land offices opened in those districts unless that treaty is ratified.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last section of the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a register and a receiver for said land districts, who shall discharge like and similar duties and receive the amount of compensation allowed by law to other officers discharging like duties in the land offices of said Territory: Provided, That such officers shall not be appointed nor land offices opened in the districts created by the first and second sections of this act until a cession shall have been made by treaty duly ratified by Congress of a portion of the Great Sioux Indian reservation within the limits of the said districts.

Mr. HOLMAN. That section, as I understand, speaks of a treaty "to be" ratified by Congress. If the words "to be" are stricken out I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. STRAIT. I have no objection to strike out the words which are objected to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the language is "by treaty duly ratified," not "to be ratified."

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I do not offer any amendment.

Mr. STRAIT. I offer an amendment to insert the words "each of" after the word "for," in line 3 of section 4; so that it will read:

A receiver for each of said land districts, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HASKELL. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session it shall be in order on any day, after the morning hour, to move to suspend the rules and to take from the Speaker's table any revenue or general appropriation bill which may at that time be on the Speaker's table, and ask for a conference with the Senate thereon. Such motion shall be decided by a majority vote.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Rules.

CAPITOL AND NORTH O STREET RAILWAY.

Mr. PEIRCE. I desire to make a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from the amendment numbered 3.

R. B. F. PEIRCE,
ROBERT KLOTZ,
SAM. F. BARR,
Conferees on the part of the House.

E. H. ROLLINS,
JAMES W. McDILL,
Z. B. VANCE,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was as follows:

That the act as it passed the House of Representatives gives to the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company the right of way for a single or double track from its present line, at the corner of Eleventh and E streets northwest; east along E to Tenth street; thence south along D to Ninth street; thence south along Ninth street to Louisiana avenue; thence southwest along said avenue to Ohio avenue; thence west along Ohio avenue to its intersection with its present line at the junction of Ohio avenue and Twelfth street northwest.

The Senate, by amendments Nos. 1 and 2, so amended the act as to run said line from Ninth street east along E to Ninth street, instead of Tenth street, and thence along Ninth street to Louisiana avenue. The conference committee agreed to these amendments.

The Senate amended the second section of the act by adding thereto provisions requiring this company and all other street-railway companies in the District of Columbia to pay the original cost of the grading and paving that portion of the streets occupied by them, in addition to the requirements under which they are compelled to grade, pave, and keep in repair that part of all streets occupied by them; and also providing that any refusal to pay, after notice by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, of the amount due for said original improvement, shall work a forfeiture of the charter of the company so refusing. The committee of conference agree that the Senate shall recede from this amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the title of the bill may be again read.

The title of the bill was read.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PEIRCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAMPHLET LAWS, ETC., FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 352) to provide for an increased supply of the laws of the United States for the Treasury Department and its officers.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State shall hereafter issue to the Secretary of the Treasury three hundred copies each of the pamphlet and bound volumes of laws of the United States in lieu of the number now authorized by law.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which will explain the purpose of this joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 25, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that sections 6 and 7 of the "act providing for publication of the Revised Statutes and the Laws of the United States," approved June 20, 1874, be so amended as to increase the number of the pamphlet and bound copies of the laws to be furnished for the use of this Department to three hundred.

In order to supply its officers the Department is now obliged to purchase one hundred copies of the pamphlet laws in addition to the two hundred received by authority of the above act, and from twenty-five to fifty of the bound volumes in addition to the two hundred and sixty received, and the change recommended will be a great advantage to this Department, and sufficient for any ordinary call made upon the office.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. R. T. VAN HORN,
Chairman Joint Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GALLUS KIRCHNER.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 2013, entitled "An act referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the House bill with the following amendment:

Add after the word "any," in the last line, the words:

"Provided, That no judgment shall be rendered for any such stone used in the construction of the main arsenal building."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
STANTON J. PEELLE,
S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. P. FRYE,
D. W. VOORHEES,
JOHN SHERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RYAN submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 26, 27, 57, 67, 74, 75, and 77.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 31, 63, 64, 68, 69, and 70, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the sum of $89,400; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment strike out the word "four," where it occurs, and in lieu thereof insert the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the words "the vicinity of Fort Custer," and insert in lieu thereof the words "some suitable location on their reservation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "And no contract by any such Indian, creating any charge or incumbrance thereon, or liability of said land for payment thereof, shall be valid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert the sum of $8,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert the sum of $8,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the sum of $70,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph, insert the following:

"And no portion of this sum, nor of any other sum appropriated by this act, shall be paid for services rendered by any scholar taught in said schools during the period of his tuition, except for excess of value of labor over and above cost of tuition and support or other expense furnished by the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "repairing," in said amendment, insert the words "and constructing;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and on page 44 of the bill, in line 8, strike out the words "and education" and in lieu thereof insert the words "education and transportation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out down to and including the word "made," in line 25, page 44 of the bill, and insert after said word the following words:

"Immediately available for the completion and furnishing of the school building and erection of out-houses near Arkansas City."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of $10,000; and at the end of said amendment insert the following:

"And also for the placing of children from all the Indian schools, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such children moral, industrial, and educational training for a term of not less than three years, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS RYAN,
L. B. CASWELL,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The accompanying statement from the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Indian appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on each amendment should the conference report be adopted:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13: Provides for separate agents at Neah Bay and Quinaielt, at $1,000 each, at Nisqually and S'Kokomish, at $1,200, and at Tulalip, at $1,000; fixes salary of the agent at the Navajo agency at $1,500, and provides that no money shall be expended at that agency for clerical labor; limits the expenditure for clerical labor at the Quapaw agency to $1,200, and corrects total stated in a paragraph.

On amendments 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23: Provides for five Indian inspectors, and appropriates $6,000 for their traveling expenses; provides for four special agents, and limits their necessary expenses, exclusive of transportation, to $3 per day.

On amendment 25: Provides that of the appropriation of $48,000 to furnish flour, meat, and other necessaries for the Crow Indians, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for the removal of the Crow agency to some suitable location on their reservation, and for the erection of necessary agency and other buildings.

On amendments 26 and 27: Strikes out provision that of the annuity of $12,500 payable to the Seminole Indians $5,000 thereof should be appropriated for the Seminoles in Florida for the establishment of schools, for the purchase of land, agricultural implements, and seeds, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

On amendment 30: In lieu of the language in the bill as it passed the House touching certan land patents to be issued to Sioux Indians inserts the following:

"Provided, That the patents authorized to be issued to certain individual Indians by the concluding paragraph of article 6 of the treaty with the Sioux Indians proclaimed the 24th day of February, 1869, shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or in case of his decease, of his heirs, according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located; and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever; and no contract by any such Indian creating any charge or incumbrance thereon or liability of said land for payment thereof shall be valid."

On amendment 31: Inserts the folllowing:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the negotiations with the Sioux Indians for such modification of existing treaties and agreements with said Indians as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 7, 1882, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available."

On amendments 39 and 40: Inserts the following:

"For support and civilization of Sioux of Lake Traverse, including pay of employés, $8,000. For support and civilization of Sioux of Devil's Lake, including employés, $8,000."

On amendment 52: Fixes the appropriation for Indian police at $70,000.

On amendment 55: Fixes the appropriation for support of Indian day and industrial school, and for other educational purposes not otherwise provided for in the bill at $400,000, and provides that no portion of that sum nor of any other sum appropriated by the act for the support of Indian schools shall be paid for service rendered by any scholar taught in said schools during the period of his tuition, except for excess of value over and above cost of tuition and support or either, furnished by the Government.

On amendment 56: Appropriates $10,000 for repairing and constructing school buildings.

On amendment 57: Limits cost of each scholar for support, education, and transportation at the Carlisle school to $200.

On amendment 60: Includes transportation in the limit of cost of each scholar in the Indian school at Forest Grove.

On amendment 61: Makes immediately available the sum reappropriated for the erection of a school-house near Arkansas City; and also makes it available for furnishing the building and for erection of outhouses.

On amendments 63, 64, and 65: Makes the appropriation for support and education of Indian children in the schools of the United States, not otherwise provided for, $75,000; and provides $10,000 of that amount for transportation of Indian children to and from said schools, and for the placing of children from all the Indian schools, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such children moral, industrial, and educational training for a term of not less than three years, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor.

On amendment 67: Appropriates $10,000 to defray the expenses of consolidating Indian agencies.

On amendments 68, 69, and 70: Insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to establish the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas in permanent homes on homesteads upon the public lands, and to purchase stock, implements, and other necessaries, $10,000, of which a sum not exceeding $1,000 may be expended in defraying the expenses of such of said Indians as are now in Washington city.

"For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to continue to carry out the provisions of the act of June 15, 1880, ratifying the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be taken from moneys appropriated by said act and remaining unexpended; and the commission appointed under said act, and known as the Ute Commission, is hereby abolished, to take effect March 15, 1883. And the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Ute Indians, may, instead of paying to said Indians the $50,000 provided by the agreement incorporated in the above-named act, in cash, per capita, pay the same in stock, or such other property as the Secretary of the Interior and said Indians may agree upon.

"For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ temporarily sufficient clerical force to bring up the work on the records of the files division of his office, $3,000, to be immediately available."

On amendments 74 and 75: Makes a verbal correction in the text of section 7 of the act, and otherwise leaves it unchanged as it passed the House.

On amendment 77: Strikes out section 8 of the act which was inserted by the Senate.

The act as agreed upon in conference appropriates $5,362,655.91, being $13,600 less than as it passed the Senate, and $153,700 greater than as it was passed by the House, $120,500 less than the appropriations for the current year, and $1,363,075.63 less than the estimates.

THOS. RYAN,
L. B. CASWELL,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] a single question. This bill contains an appropriation of $10,000, I believe, for the consolidation of Indian agencies; yet there is also a provision for an additional number of agents—ten I believe. What necessity is there for additional agents if the agencies are consolidated?

Mr. RYAN. My friend is mistaken in regard to the increase of agents. By the consolidation of some agencies in Washington Territory and elsewhere under the Indian appropriation bill for the current year the number of agents was reduced ten or twelve. The consolidations in the extreme Northwest were found impracticable in two instances, because one agent could not superintend the whole number of agencies assigned him; hence it was found necessary to make an increase of two. But we have reduced the number in another place by not giving any agent to the Moqui Pueblos. It was deemed by the Senate unnecessary that these Indians should have an agency; so that in the bill as reported by the conference committee the increase is but one.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there not an increase of six upon the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are not six special agents provided for?

Mr. RYAN. Special agents are not Indian agents.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are they?

Mr. RYAN. They are special agents charged with the duty of visiting the agencies and inspecting them, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. But they are not Indian agents in any sense of the term.

I wish to say that the bill as it passed the House made some changes in regard to inspectors and special agents; but the Senate insisted upon an amendment leaving the existing law in force with regard to those special agents and inspectors. In other words, under the bill as agreed upon in conference, the special agents and Indian inspectors remain precisely the same as by existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no increase, then, in the number of special agents or inspectors of agencies?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir. I move the adoption of the report.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles No. 18 to 25, inclusive, and article No. 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty concluded at Washington May 8, 1871.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ARMY AND FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Army appropriation bill just returned from the Senate be taken from the Speaker's table and, with the amendments, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and that the amendments be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the absence of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] I ask the same course in regard to the fortification appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN AND HENNEPIN CANALS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the Legislature of the State of Illinois, at the session a year ago, passed an act approved April 12, 1882, to cede to the United States the Illinois and Michigan Canal, its right of way, real estate, and all appurtenances for canal purposes, on condition that the United States should, within five years after such act should take effect, accept the grant. One of the conditions of this session was that the canal should be enlarged and maintained as a national water-way for the use of all the people without discrimination. Under the constitution of the State of Illinois this act could not become a law without submission to a vote of the people. This vote was had at the election of November, 1882, when members of the Forty-eighth Congress were chosen. The people ratified this act by an almost unanimous vote. The object had in view by the State in conferring upon the Government this important water-way was its enlargement as a national work, in connection with the construction of the Hennepin Canal, which, if constructed by the Government, will make a continuous line of water communication from the upper waters of the Mississippi River at Rock Island to the headwaters of Lake Michigan at the city of Chicago.

The importance of this great water-way in a commercial point of view can not be estimated. The subject has attracted the attention of the leading minds of the country for many years. The Iroquois Club of the city of Chicago, an organization composed of professional and business men of that city, have carefully investigated this whole subject through a committee composed of Hon. Lyman Trumbull, late a Senator of the United States, Hon. Carter H. Harrison, formerly a member of this House and now mayor of the city of Chicago, Melville W. Fuller, S. Corning Judd, William C. Goudy, E. M. Phelps, the president of the club, and Henry Waller, jr. The report of the committee, which it is well known was prepared by Mayor Harrison, is a most exhaustive document, covering the whole subject, and full of valuable information. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the memorial of the Iroquois Club, to which I have referred, be printed in the RECORD in order that members of the House and all others interested in the subject may be put in possession of the valuable information and the exhaustive argument contained therein.

There was no objection. The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Iroquois Club of Chicago, a political organization composed of about three hundred professional and business men, citizens of Chicago, do present to your honorable Congress this our most respectful memorial:

By the constitution of the State of Illinois the State is forbidden to alienate or grant to any person or persons whatsoever the title to the Illinois and Michigan Canal, unless such grant shall have been first approved of by the vote of the people of the State at a general election.

Whereas the people of Illinois, believing that said canal of right should and ought to be the property of the United States, to be by it enlarged and maintained as a national water way for the use of all its people, did, at a special session of the thirty-second General Assembly, by an act approved April 22, 1882, cede to the United States said canal, its right of way and real estate, and all appurtenances, for canal purposes, on condition that the United States should, within five years after said act should take effect, accept the grant; and

Whereas the people of the State did, at a general election held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, A. D. 1882, by an almost unanimous vote, approve of such cession:

Therefore, your orators do most humbly petition your honorable Congress to accept said grant and, as soon as in your wisdom you may deem it proper, to enlarge said canal so as to make it a national water-way capable of floating gunboats and such large vessels as navigate the waters of the Mississippi River; and also petition you to construct, as a branch of said water-way, the Hennepin Canal, connecting the same with the waters of the Upper Mississippi; and we most respectfully ask that you give ear to a few reasons why we believe these things should be done by the Federal Government.

The grandeur of this our country and its mighty march in material, moral, and political progress has been, to a great extent, owing to the many facilities afforded for the easy and cheap transportation from one part of the country to another of the products of its fertile soil, by means of its unequaled system of navigable rivers and lakes.

Our forefathers, whose wonderful wisdom evolved and established this Republic as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people—a system of government prior to their day existing only in the brain of dreaming philosophers, but which has withstood for more than a century the test of enervating prosperity and of destructive war of unparalleled magnitude—these our forefathers early saw the necessity of free and accessible water-ways in every part of the land, and did, as far back as 1787, when organizing a government for the Territories northwest of the Ohio River (then but recently ceded to the confederacy by the State of Virginia), solemnly declare "as a fundamental article of compact to be forever binding on the original States and on such States as should be carved out of such territory, 'that the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and the Saint Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways and forever free as well to the inhabitants of said territory and the citizens of the United States, and without tax, impost, or duty.'"

Thus did they deny to such new States through which said rivers ran and in which such carrying places lay the right to regulate or in any way to interfere with these common highways. This resolution was a most extraordinary one, and was pregnant with remarkable prescience. It showed that these giant thinkers even then with prophetic eye foresaw the vast proportions of the mighty governmental fabric they had but recently brought into being, and that they foresaw the necessity of uniting by artificial means the waters of the two great systems, which, rising in juxtaposition, flowed the one to the east into the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, the other to the south into the Gulf of Mexico.

The most remarkable one of all the carrying places between these waters was and is the one along which is cut the Illinois and Michigan Canal. It had been, since Pere Marquette first saw it, the portage used by the Indians in moving from one to the other of these two mighty currents. In long ages past, a deep river had flowed along it, when Lake Michigan sent her crystal stream to mingle with the turbid floods of the Missouri. Nature's bold engineering skill had upon the rocks written her decree, that here should be the marriage bond between the two distant gulfs. Deep grooves had worked far into the eternal rocks—grooves worn by ice floods of far distant ages. By some sudden convulsion this bond had been broken; the prairies had been lifted, grasses had grown and molded upon them, preparing them to be the garden-field of a mighty people. The people were coming, and our forefathers with a wisdom almost superhuman prepared for them a government, and suggested the propriety of again restoring by pick and shovel the broken bonds which had bound the rolling floods of the Father of Waters to the crystal depths of the great fresh-water seas.

A few years ago the Government spent $4,000,000,000 in its determination to preserve the Union; with those countless millions was mingled the blood of 600,000 sons of the soil. These vast treasures were spent and these countless drops of precious blood were spilled to save the Union. Should we hesitate to spend a few paltry millions to help cement that Union forever? A ship-canal only forty-six miles long over a level plain—a canal already partly built at an expense of $6,000,000 to the State of Illinois, which can be completed for less than $20,000,000—will enable the people of twenty States to mingle freely and to deal cheaply one with the other and each with all.

Permit us to call your attention to some more of the thoughts and recommendations of our forefathers on this subject. In 1808, a general and comprehensive system of roads and canals was proposed by the then Secretary of the Treasury, with the recommendation that $2,000,000 a year should be employed to complete such system. This was during the last year of the administration of the author of the Declaration of Independence and the father of the Democratic party. He believed that man was capable of self-government. He believed that governments were for the people, and thus, through his Secretary of Treasury, showed that he thought one of the duties of government was to afford to the people roads and water-ways as a means of making them prosperous and happy.

During the war of 1812 with Great Britain, the decisive battles which settled the controversy were upon Lakes Erie, Ontario, and Champlain. It was there that England saw the danger of Canada slipping from her grasp. President Madison, the great expounder of the Constitution, foresaw that upon these fresh-water seas would be the theater of future wars, should they break out between America and the mother country. In his message to Congress in 1814 he urged upon it the necessity of a ship-canal to connect the waters of the Mississippi with those of Lake Michigan. The Committee on Military Affairs made a favorable report.

But the war ended, and republics are prone to forget in time of peace the lessons of war. Congress did nothing. Again, in 1815, Mr. Madison in his message urged the matter, and again, with his judgment ripened by long experience and nearly eight years of that experience won in the Presidential chair, he in 1816 with most impressive language called attention to the continued neglect of Congress to this to him all-important subject. This, his last warning, had effect, for in 1817 surveys were consented to and made, and the easy practicability of a ship-canal from the lake at Chicago to the Illinois River was demonstrated.

But still Congress hesitated and hesitated, and not till 1827 was definite action taken. Sectional jealousies were already looming up. The slavery question was a dark spot on the horizon, and day by day was growing blacker. Government, instead of undertaking this improvement as a direct national undertaking, turned it over to the State of Illinois, and voted to her 290,915 acres of land, reserving to herself alternate sections. These reserved lands, marked at double price, were rapidly sold, so that the United States lost not one cent. Illinois started upon the projects with the grand idea of giving to the country a canal deep enough and wide enough to float gunboats. But the financial crash, which culminated in 1836, so depleted her treasury, that this canal project almost bankrupted her, and she was forced to abandon her original ideas, and completed the work in 1848, as a simple barge canal.

Even this little work, however, at once caused the Northwest to spring from a wild prairie land, the trackless home of the savage, into a rapidly developing country. That little canal showed that a woodless prairie, in a cold climate, could be made to teem with a mighty and prosperous population.

Illinois built the canal, and the Government was soon repaid with the sale of her alternate sections of land for the donation she had made. Short-sighted politicians thought they had shown statesmanship in thus saving to the Federal Government the cost of the project.

England showed no such penny-wise policy. During her last war with us, her great captain, the Duke of Wellington, told her that "a naval superiority on the lakes was a sine qua non of success in a war with America." She made a treaty with us in 1817, by which each nation bound itself to keep no more than one armed vessel of a hundred tons burden upon the lakes. England, however, immediately proceeded to make their treaty obligations of no injury to herself; at an expense of $22,000,000 she threw canals eight feet deep around the rapids of the Saint Lawrence, and the Welland Canal, ten feet deep, from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario. She was thus enabled to throw light-draft gunboats upon the lakes, while the United States was hand-tied by the treaty obligation. The Illinois and Michigan Ship Canal would have placed this country on a par with England. But the warning of the Father of his Country, "to enjoy peace we should be prepared for war," was by America wholly unheeded.

When the Mason and Slidell imbroglio, during the late civil war, threatened to precipitate the two countries into war, there was a feeling throughout this country that such a catastrophe might be destructive of our hopes of preserving the Union. One of America's brilliant generals, discussing this canal, said on the floor of Congress that "a fleet of light-draught, heavily armed gunboats could in a short month get into the lakes and shell every city from Chicago to Ogdensburgh." The London Times said:

"The worst part of the struggle will not be on the Atlantic seaboard, but on the Great Lakes of Upper Canada and North America. We are glad, therefore, to be able to tell our readers that their danger has been foreseen and amply provided for." Provided for at a cost of $22,000,000, which had been repaid again and again by the commercial facilities afforded by the Canadian canals. The Mason and Slidell matter cost this country, in a few months, directly over $100,000,000. That vast treasure and the demoralization of the country which was engendered by the danger of a conflict with England would have all been saved had the advice of Madison been followed.

It is the earnest prayer of your memorialists that the peaceful relations existing between America and England may never be ruptured. The dictates of civilization and material interests would seem to be sufficient to prevent such rupture. But madness oftentimes seizes upon nations as well as upon individuals. We can not tell when such madness may seize one or the other of these two countries. A few weeks of such madness would cost oceans of blood and millions of treasure. "To enjoy peace we should be prepared for war." England builds armor-clad ships at a cost of nearly $3,000,000. She has lately completed one such, and has another in preparation. She has six or eight vessels the cost of which would make a ship canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi. These vessels are maintained at vast annual loss, and bring no return other than the tranquillity of preparation. This ship-canal would be equal to an armed fleet, and at the same time would soon repay its cost by its peaceful returns.

It is to these returns we would now ask your indulgence, while we present them as to us they are made apparent:

Prior to the commencement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal the population of the territory northwest of the Ohio and Wabash did not greatly exceed 500,000. Settlements were confined to the wooded margins of streams. Lured by the results demonstrated by this improvement, capitalists and emigrants began to turn their attention to the prairies already cleared and ready for the plow. Railroads soon began to cut in every direction the great table lands of the Northwest. Vast numbers of intelligent and industrious foreigners settled wherever transportation of lumber and fuel became possible; State after State has sprung into existence, and to-day not far from 10,000,000 people find happy homes in this section and add to the national wealth. The States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Nebraska have a population of nearly 8,000,000. They produce (average years) about 160,000,000 bushels of wheat, one-third of all produced in the United States; about 580,000,000 bushels of corn, more than one-third of all; about 140,000,000 bushels of oats, being two-fifths of all; 7,500,000 bushels of rye, one-third of all; 10,400,000 bushels of barley, more than one-quarter of all.

After feeding the people of the country the United States exports its surplus of breadstuffs. This surplus comes entirely from the Northwest. Pouring into the lap of hungry Europe, this surplus has in the past five years, aided by cotton and petroleum, turned the tide of trade in favor of this country. It has brought home from abroad $1,000,000,000 in bonds. It has made an irredeemable currency as good as gold. It has given to us a redundancy of metallic currency, and thus helped to make the people of the United States to-day the most prosperous of all peoples.

Railroads have made the Northwest habitable, and have turned waste places into green pastures. But railroads are beginning to do what the Greeks did, who came bearing gifts; what the Europeans did when they brought blankets and luxuries to the Indians. They are becoming the masters and tyrants of those to whom they were at first only a blessing. The iron horse carried the rose and the lily, and planted them where before bloomed only the wild prairie flower. He carried the plow and seeds, and left them where now, instead of plains of coarse grass, are seas of waving wheat, oats, and rye. But the iron horse has an insatiable maw. His hot breath is beginning to blast the green pastures.

Watered railroad stocks demand dividends, which rob the farmer of his hard earnings. Warm suns and gentle rains have for the past few years caused his fields to blossom and to return him many-fold; wars abroad and bad harvests have given him a market for his surplus. That surplus he has been able to send abroad, although the railroad demanded so much of it for freightage. But give to Europe a few years of peace and a succession of good crops, and then a few cents a bushel on the transportation of Northwestern grain will throw the balance of trade against this country.

Russia is the great competitor of the Northwest in the grain trade. A few years since, when it cost 20 cents to carry a bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York, the United States and Russia gave to England each 23,000,000 bushels of wheat. Freight dropped 10 cents a bushel between Chicago and New York, and at once America gave to England 50,000,000 bushels, and Russia fell to 15,000,000. A part of this reduction of freight was for the benefit of the foreign consumer in getting slightly cheaper food, but the bulk of the 10 cents lowered freight went to the producer in this country.

The average cost of carrying wheat from Chicago to Liverpool is, during the seven winter months, 31.43 cents per bushel. In the five summer months, when the lakes are open, this cost falls to 26.86 cents per bushel. Corn in winter, 29.33 cents, and in summer 25.07 cents, the difference being over 4 cents a bushel. The price of the surplus fixes the price of the whole product. This difference makes a nominal saving to the producers of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Nebraska of not far from $30,000,000 per annum.

The cost of carrying grain from the Mississippi to Chicago by rail is about 9 cents a bushel. Were the Hennepin Canal completed the cost would be on it about 5 cents a bushel. It may safely be determined that the saving on rail transportation would be from 2 to 4 cents. The freightage from Chicago to New York regulates, to a considerable extent, the price of transportation to the East as far south as Louisville and Saint Louis. This is conceded by Mr. Fink, the commissioner of railroads; indeed, he says it affects cost of carrying on all east and west roads even further south.

The effects of lake transportation in the summer, in other words, regulate to an appreciable extent the tariffs on roads running east and west from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and lowers them. If the Illinois and Michigan Canal was so enlarged as to float steamers, and the Hennepin Canal were built to float barges from the Upper Mississippi, then a thorough regulator of freights, during the summer months, would be in operation from all points contiguous to the waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and to a marked extent throughout the vast territory northwest of the mouth of the Ohio.

There is a feeling growing throughout the country that Congress will be compelled, sooner or later, to regulate railroad freights throughout the land. Many wise men dread the necessity for this, fearing it may prove a dangerous experiment. By building a system of canals, which can become competitors of railroads, regulators will be at once in operation, which can not be reached by the seductive wiles of fat corporations—competitors which will require neither commissioners nor legislative restrictions.

We are aware that very many people think that canals are of but little value, and that the introduction of railroads have absolutely superseded the necessity of building more. During a period of time in this country, prior to 1840, very great attention was given to the inauguration of canal systems in various parts of the country, and many were built which have not been of great practical value. But this was the result not of such system but of the location and direction given to many of the lines. They were all built under State auspices; the location, direction, and termini were fixed more by political log-rolling than by the necessity of trade. Canals, too, can only be profitably built along lines topographically fitted for them.

Railroads, however, can under engineering skill be carried wherever trade demands them. Railroads turned the tide of trade eastward; nearly all the canals west of the Alleghanies run with water inclines, north and south. Trade being diverted from such directions, most of the lines of canals became valueless They were generally more or less the creatures of jobbery, whereas railroads have been the result of business sagacity, seeking profitable investment. The Erie Canal lies in the path of traffic. The result is that it has regulated railroad tariffs in New York, and has made it the Empire State of the Union.

In 1877 a reduction of transportation on the Erie from 1¼ to 1 cent per bushel of grain caused 18,000,000 bushels to leave other routes and to seek this one. A bushel of corn and wheat within ten miles of the Illinois and Michigan Canal is worth an average of about 2 cents more than at other points equally distant from Chicago and close to railroads. Why? Because this canal regulates the tariffs of the several railroads running near it.

It has been declared by men who have made close calculation that the cost of the Hennepin Canal would be saved to the people in one year, certainly in two, by the lessened tariffs it would fix for the railroads running from Iowa to Chicago.

The Mississippi River and its tributaries represent 12,000 miles of navigable rivers. The great lakes have a shore-line of 5,000 miles. If the Illinois and Michigan Canal should be deepened and widened in accordance with the survey of General Wilson, made in 1868, then all steamers which ply upon the Mississippi, except a few which run to New Orleans, could sail to Chicago, and there, lying alongside the steamers and ships of the lakes, freight could be transferred from one to the other, and by the use of machinery, so cheaply that the advantages of a continuous navigation could be had from all points on the lakes to all points on the lower rivers.

We believe such a canal is purely national, and ought to be erected by the General Government and made free to all of its people. Although Mr. Madison dwelt upon the necessity of this canal as a war measure, still his mind, ever inclined to the arts of peace, laid still greater stress upon it as a means of cementing the people together, and of increasing their general prosperity. He used the following language: "The General Government is the more urged to such undertakings requiring national jurisdiction and national means by the prospect of their systematically completing so inestimable a work."

These canals are, it is true, within a single State, but the people of twenty States will be the direct beneficiaries, for they will unite the waters of rivers which are navigable in these twenty States. Illinois is not so directly interested as are the States to the east and to the west of her. To the west lies an empire of grain-growing territory. The East is better adapted to pasturage and manufacturing purposes. Its lands have been worn by overcropping in cereals. What it wants is cheap bread, so that it can devote its lands to dairy and gardening purposes, while the people can employ themselves in manufacturing arts, and can exchange the products of such arts for the grain grown in the rich virgin prairies of the West. In this way worn lands of the East may be brought back to their original fertility.

Thomas Benton, whose bible was the Constitution of his country, spoke eloquently in favor of this work and of its nationality. Silas Wright and Horatio Seymour have spoken and written in its favor. Leading statesmen from every quarter of the land met in 1863 in Chicago and urged that the Government should at once undertake and complete it. John C. Calhoun, in terse and eloquent words, said: "Let us bind the Republic together. Let us conquer space by a perfect system of roads and canals."

Millions upon millions of dollars have been spent by the Government on its seaboard harbors and bays—millions spent to enable its people to trade with the people of other lands. This expenditure we do not antagonize, but we believe it of far more importance to enable the people of the different sections of this land to have easy and free communication with each other than to give a like communication with foreign people. This is a vast country. It has every variety of climate except that of the burning sun and the frozen zone; it has within its bosom every mineral, it produces nearly every plant, fruit, and grain, all varieties of useful animals, birds, and fishes feed upon its soil or swim within its waters. If an impassable wall were thrown around it, cutting it off utterly from all other lands, it could yet be within itself a happy world.

Give her cheap roads, cheap water-ways, so that her people can mingle with each other, and can exchange the products each of his own labor for that of every other American, and her people can and will be happy and prosperous.

Canals have been and are being built and extended in all prosperous countries of Europe. Rivers are being canalized wherever it is possible. There were in Great Britain, in 1858, 2,172 miles of canals, and 1,315 miles of improved river-beds. These improvements cost, respectively, $142,000,000 and $51,350,000; in all, $173,350,000. In 1874, she had 4,700 miles of canals, costing $370,000,000. In other words, she had expended from 1858 to 1874, $196,650,000 on canals. And yet railroads run in every direction. These canals carry heavy freight and tend greatly to regulate railroad tariffs. Many of them run along the lines of prosperous railroads, and the stocks of many canals are owned by the railroad corporations, who run the canals in the interest of the roads.

Germany has a system of canals, but your memorialists have no statistics showing the mileage or cost. But intelligent Americans traveling throughout the German Empire are struck by the number of shallow streams which have been improved of late years. Heavy stone dikes are thrown up along these streams, so as to contract the channels, giving sufficient depth to float steamers. The currents made by these dikes are too strong for resistance by ordinary steamers. To overcome these currents, endless chains are strung along the middle of the channel.

On the steamers are large drums, which take up the chain and by rolling it over the drum powerful light-draught tugs are seen pushing or drawing tows of barges oftentimes nearly a quarter of a mile in length. These tows do the carrying of heavy freights and operate to regulate the tariffs of railroads, which in many instances run on the banks of the streams. In the Elber one of these chains runs for several hundred miles. Railroads are on either bank. Government is interested in the ownership of the rail lines, and yet, in the interest of the people, thus canalize these rivers and pro tanto injure the productiveness of its railroad interests. Shall it be said that kings and emperors, who claim to rule by divine right, do more for the people than do the servants of this free Republic, who govern by the will of the people?

France has the most complete and extended system of improved water-ways of any land; all were built by and are owned by the Government. She had ten years ago 3,000 miles of canals, built at a cost of $157,200,000. She has 2,000 miles of canalized rivers, costing $48,000,000, and 2,000 miles of improved river beds, on which had been expended $30,000,000. In all, up to ten years ago she had expended on these water-ways $235,200,000. About $180,000,000 of this has been expended since the year 1800, or since the introduction of railroads. In the past ten years France has not rested from her labors in this line, but your orators have not exact statistics of the extent done in this time. But observant travelers say the system has been greatly extended.

In that country freightage is almost equally divided between the canals and the railroads, the cost on the former being as two to three on the latter. The water-ways nine years ago transported 1,500,000,000 tons per annum. The visible saving upon this in the ratio above named was $5,000,000. But this was in fact but a part proportion of such savings, for by the lowering of the railroad freightage another $4,000,000 was saved. France has six separate systems of improved water ways diverging from Paris: the northern, the northeastern, the southeastern, the southern, the western, and the southwestern.

Twelve years ago France was apparently crushed by her Germanic war. But already she has so recuperated that the effects of the war are observable only in the hearts of the people.

A more general and equally divided prosperity exists within her borders than in any other European country. Much of their equally divided prosperity is owing to the ease and cheapness of transportation from one part of the country to every other part. Railroads run in every direction, but canals with cheap tolls run also in every direction, carrying the heavy necessaries of life and cheapening the carrying of all articles by rail.

Canada has within the past few years expended many millions on her canals, which now are able to float vessels of large draughts. This she did for military purposes. But the returns from commercial benefits pay a large percentage upon the investment.

In this country, within the last few years, little attention has been paid to the building and extension of canals. People have supinely allowed railroads to monopolize the carrying trade and to build up extortionate monopolies. Within the last ten years the increase of the mileage of canals has been too insignificant for mention, while the mileage of railroads has grown from 61,000 in 1871 to about 115,000 in 1882, representing in the former year a capital and funded debt of $2,600,000,000, and in the latter year over $5,100,000,000. In the State of Illinois alone, the fifty-seven railroad corporations within its borders have an aggregate capital of $541,261,536, an increase over last year of about $50,000,000, and show a gross income of $189,352,977, an increase over last year of more than $13,000,000.

Your orators are opposed to river and harbor bills passed for log-rolling purposes—passed without full and free discussion, and by which insignificant streams are improved at vast cost for mere local purposes, or to benefit personal aspirations. They are opposed to putting burdens on the people for such purposes, but they believe that the United States should inaugurate a comprehensive system of water-ways, and should pay particular attention to a system of canals which would unite together the great system of natural water-ways. Such canals should be large enough to float the ordinary craft navigating such natural ways. Many of the portages or watersheds intervening between such natural systems appear to have been designed by the Creator for such artificial junction. Nature is bountiful, and like Hercules, when he ordered the carter to apply his shoulder to the wheel, asks man to complete her works. This country has unparalleled systems of rivers and lakes; the divides between the different systems are oftentimes small and easily overcome, thereby inviting man to use the pick and shovel to complete the designs of provident nature.

Our country to-day enjoys wonderful prosperity. But all such periods are followed by seasons of depression more or less long. During such depression labor is idle, tramps abound, visionary or criminal demagogues are on the alert, and the slumbers of men and women are disturbed by dreams of riot and bloodshed. By giving to the people means of cheap transportation, so that the plenty of one locality may be easily carried to other and less favored localities, you would equalize the condition of all, and thus prevent suffering and enable the people to outlive the periods of depression.

Such a beneficent policy will tend to enable governments to trust to the people and measurably to dispense with armed soldiery and costly police organizations. It will keep our jails and penitentiaries from being overcrowded and will make the people prosperous and happy citizens.

At a regular meeting of the Iroquois Club held Tuesday evening December 5, 1882, the following was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the club appoint a committee of seven to prepare a memorial to Congress on behalf of this club on the subject of the acceptance of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the completion of the Hennepin Canal by the General Government."

And in pursuance thereof the following committee was appointed: Lyman Trumbull (chairman), Carter H. Harrison, Melville W. Fuller, S. Corning Judd, W. C. Goudy, E. M. Phelps, Henry Waller, jr.; which committee made the above report at the next meeting of the club, held Tuesday, January 2, 1883, and the report was ordered printed and a copy sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress, duly certified.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that certain papers relating to the improvement of the Mississippi be printed for the use of the special committee on appropriations for the improvement of that river.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the printing will be ordered.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS AND PURCHASES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that the sundry civil appropriation bill be amended by the addition of the paragraph enacted last year relating to contracts and purchases in open market; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFALCATIONS OF JOHN T. BEST.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with accompanying papers, in regard to claims against the United States arising from defalcations and forgeries of John T. Best; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GAS FOR LIGHTING BEACONS AND BUOYS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Light-House Board relating to the cost of introducing gas for lighting beacons and buoys; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Commerce requests the Chair to ask that an additional number, equal to the usual number, of copies of the report accompanying the river and harbor bill be printed for the use of the committee. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to submit a privileged report, the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$110 000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16, in line 3 of the bill, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "the same to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 5 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on each amendment should the conference report be ratified by the two Houses, namely:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7: Provides for a chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uraguay at $5,000, as it now exists by law, and for a minister resident to Venezuela at $7,500, which is also in accordance with existing law.

On amendment 8: Appropriates $85,000 for the contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all the missions abroad, being the same amount as is appropriated for the current year.

On amendments 9 and 10: Appropriates $60,500 for clerks at consulates, including $1,000 for the consulate at Port au Prince, Hayti.

On amendment 11: Appropriates $110,000 for contingent expenses of consulates, being a reduction of $25,000 under appropriation for current year.

On amendment 12: Makes the appropriation for the French and American Claims Commission immediately available, and strikes out provision requiring statement of expenses of the commission to be submitted to Congress in the annual estimates.

On amendment 17: Inserts the following:

"For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of ministers and consuls of the United States to their homes for interment where such ministers or consuls have died or who may die abroad while in the discharge of their duties, $10,000."

On amendment 14: Inserts the following:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of enabling the President to extend diplomatic relations with the governments of Eastern Asia, $5,000."

The act as agreed upon in conference appropriates $1,296,755, being $25,600 less than as it passed the Senate, and $38,500 greater than as it passed the House, $46,100 less than the appropriations for the current year, and $94,150 less than the estimates.

J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION AGAINST STEAM-YACHT MENHADEN FISHING.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolutions to Congress asking relief and protection to citizens along the seacoast of New Jersey from steam-yacht menhaden fishing with purse-seines be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The joint resolutions are as follows:

Joint resolutions to Congress asking relief and protection to citizens along the sea-coast of New Jersey from steam-yacht menhaden fishing with purse-seines.

Whereas the inhabitants along the sea-shore of New Jersey have been in the habit of catching, in addition to other food-fish, large quantities of menhaden or mossbunkers, used by many for food; and

Whereas the menhaden are naturally inclined to draw toward the beach, and being a principal "feed" for other and better grades of food-fish, the latter naturally follow the "feed," thereby affording those residing contiguous to the ocean favorable opportunities for securing the means of subsistence, and also of furnishing the home market, with its increasing demands along the entire coast, as well as that of the country and cities, with a very important article of food; and

Whereas the said citizens residing aforesaid, especially those accustomed to the occupation of fishing in the ocean adjacent to the beach, have been and are being greatly injured in their business by men fishing with steamers and purse-seines from other States and Territories, who operate their machinery within a few hundred yards of the beach, by which means a lifetime business and dependence for subsistence of a worthy, useful, and needy class of citizens are being destroyed, the people deprived of a luxury and needed article of food, and the eastern section of the State of its natural sources of revenue and income; and while the aforesaid citizens neither ask nor seek any special immunities or franchises, they are not willing to concede, under similar circumstances, to citizens of any other State; and, realizing that they have no means of competing with or protecting themselves against so formidable an enemy, they feel compelled to seek relief and protection from the power they believe can render it; believing, therefore, as we do, that the General Government exercises jurisdiction over the waters of the Atlantic Ocean a sufficient distance from the beach to answer all practicable purposes: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and general assembly of the State of New Jersey, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they are hereby, respectfully and urgently requested to use their influence and best endeavors for, and urge such action as it may be the prerogative and right of Congress to adopt, in order to afford the necessary relief and protection to the aforesaid citizens of New Jersey, by prohibiting the mode and means of fishing referred to for a reasonable distance from the beach, that the natural rights and privileges enjoyed by said citizens for time immemorial may be continued and guaranteed to them.

And be it resolved, That his excellency the governor of this State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to transmit to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a certified copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions.

PENSIONING EX-PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas for act pensioning ex-prisoners of war be referred to the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution is as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 31.

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring herein), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to urge the passage of a law granting a reasonable pension to all soldiers of the late war who were confined for a period of three months or more in Libby, Andersonville, or any other military prison of the late confederacy.

That a certified copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives by the secretary of state.

February 2, read, laid over under rules. February 3, read and laid over by consent. February 6, read and adopted.

H. L. MILLARD, Chief Clerk.

February 7, laid over. February 13, concurred in.

HENRY BRANDLEY, Secretary.

I, James Smith, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original house concurrent resolution No. 31 on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kansas, this 15th day of February, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] JAMES SMITH, Secretary of State.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks which he had prepared on the tariff. [See Appendix.]

ELECTRIC-LIGHT TOWER, HALLETT'S POINT, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the request of the Light-House Board for authority to effect a lease of ground for the site of the electric-light tower on Hallett's Point, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IOWA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—COOK VS. CUTTS.

Mr. RANNEY, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in the case of Cook vs. Cutts; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, presented the views of the minority in the same case; which were ordered to be printed in connection with the majority report.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. KASSON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been limited to thirty minutes. The pending paragraph will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $240,000. And there may be expended therefrom for the engraving of maps (in order that they may remain in the possession of the Government) and the necessary expenses thereof, $25,000; and for the engraving of illustrations on wood and the necessary expenses thereof, $6,000, said work of engraving to be done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out $240,000 and insert $222,000.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and desire to congratulate the Committee on Appropriations, to congratulate this House and the country because of the provision made for carrying on and extending the geological survey of the United States into the States of this Union. I am sure, sir, that no public money can be expended which will to a larger extent benefit a greater number of people in this country than the money appropriated in this paragraph.

Let us see what the geological survey has effected. It has, at an expense of about two and one-half million dollars, extended over nearly 700,000 square miles of trackless mountain and prairies. It has led to the discovery of the richest mines in the world and has made the American States the largest producers of the precious metals. It has added hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of the country and will in the future add hundreds of millions more.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON. I will if the gentleman will not consume much of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman to congratulate the county on the provision of law authorizing this geological survey to be extended into the States. I should like to know what authority——

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman must not take up too much of my time. I remember when this country was scourged with the yellow fever the gentleman from Georgia raised his eloquent voice to ask the aid of the Federal Government for the sufferers, and aid was granted. If we can in one case extend the aid of the Government why not in the other? What authority, what power has the Government to go into the States and improve their rivers and harbors if it has not the right to go there for the purpose of making this geological survey? [Mr. BLOUNT rose.] I have only five minutes and can not yield any portion of my time.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia is remarkable for his ability, and is also remarkable for his inconsistency. He fights every proposition, contests every bill that does not in some form or other and to some extent aid the State of Georgia.

Who pays this two millions and a half of money which have been expended by this service and which has produced such splendid results? It was paid by the people of the States, not for their own immediate advantage but for the development of the great Western domain. And now, Mr. Chairman, I claim that it is but just and equitable that the survey be extended into the States.

Why make appropriation for the improvements of rivers and harbors in the States? Is it not because gentlemen know that the improvement of these rivers and harbors will open up in many instances the vast regions of country which are rich in mineral deposits, rich in agricultural production and timber, and which have no other outlets to the markets? But we are told that there are State surveys. In some of the States it is true that there are surveys, carried on under the State governments and at State expense. But, Mr. Chairman, we want a survey that will be more thorough and national in its character, one that will have more weight and credit in the eyes of the country and the world. My distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FLOWER], when he speaks of these surveys and their influence in this country and in Europe, knows very well that they have drawn millions of dollars from foreign countries, which have been invested in the Territories of the West and have built up great communities and States.

I was struck on yesterday, during the course of the discussion on this bill, with the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He was defeated in Committee of Appropriations and defeated here in Committee of the Whole in his opposition to geological surveys; and I congratulate him that he was. But I was still more struck by hearing him honor the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] for his opposition to this measure and his adherence to the doctrine of State rights; and I was also surprised to hear the gentleman from Kentucky state that the gentleman from New York had so much more ably and clearly stated than he could have done himself his position upon this subject. I had supposed, sir, that if the learned gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] had a well fixed and settled opinion upon any one subject it was upon the subject of State rights, and that he hated that doctrine as the devil hated holy water. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. So I have.

Mr. WILSON. And yet we find him tickling the ribs and encouraging his friend from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, where a conflict exists between the Federal Government and State government as to any matter, I admit that the Federal Government must have clear and unquestioned authority under the Constitution before it can invade the State. But in this matter those governments, State and national, are in harmony. The Federal Government is able and willing to have the geological survey extended within the States, and the States invite it.

I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] a question. Whether in the case I have supposed, as when the Federal Government has the power and the readiness to disburse the public moneys for the protection of our people as in cases of yellow fever or cholera, and for the relief of the people North and South, if it has not by parity of reasoning the same power to extend these geological surveys to the States? I hold that it has.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WILSON. I have but a few moments of my time remaining.

Mr. BLACKBURN. You asked a question and refuse to permit me to answer it.

Mr. WILSON. If you will not take up much of my time you can answer it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will only say this in answer to the gentleman's question, that I have been unable to find in the Constitution of my country any warrant or authority or any provision thereof which can be stretched to cover the claim of such an authority on the part of Congress to make these geological surveys of a private citizen's farm or tract of land, and that is about the substance of this thing. I have therefore opposed it.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Kentucky will no doubt find equal difficulty in discovering that provision of the Constitution which will authorize him to vote, as he has done over and over again, for appropriations from the public Treasury of millions of dollars for other purposes without any express constitutional authority.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not a dollar that was not fully authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. KING. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to take the floor briefly in response to some remarks which have fallen from the gentleman from Kentucky. My friend from Kentucky in the first place brings up the question of constitutionality in this matter. This country, as well as that from which the body of its people and its laws have sprung, is governed more by precedent than by written law; and the precedents set by previous Congresses in making appropriations for these geological surveys are ample to warrant us in pursuing the same policy at this time. This is a question which is not bounded by State lines. It can not be limited by the boundaries of the States. It is one that covers the entire continent. No geological boundaries are found under the imaginary lines dividing the States. To perfect a system of geological inspection we must go under and beyond State lines. To undertake a work of this kind hampered by such restrictions would be like having a volume of great value with some of the most important chapters omitted. We do not propose, Mr. Chairman, in our system of government to leave to posterity an iron rule or system as if it was carved in stone. But ours is a system that must advance in knowledge, in the temples of which will be found the wealth and prosperity of the people.

I am glad that there is one bureau, if I may so call it, of this Government which is brought under the consideration of this committee that has not been charged with fraud or wrong upon the country. I understand that there is in this whole question no claim that the officers in charge of this work have performed their work otherwise than conscientiously, efficiently, and satisfactorily; and I trust, therefore, that the objections of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky will not prevail against the demands of this country, which require that we should in every instance give to the people authoritative information that we have the power to give them for the benefit of their material interests and the prosperity of the whole country. We have already developed by means of this system some of the boundless treasures of this country. Do not let us stop now in the onward march.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that in the discussion of a plain, practical proposition expressed in dollars and cents any Representative upon my side of this House, especially one whom I esteem so highly and to whom I am so warmly attached personally as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING], should have taken occasion to speak of State rights as an imaginary thing.

Mr. KING. I correct my friend. I spoke of State lines.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman speaks of State lines as an imaginary thing. That assertion is not sustained by the organization of this Congress. The body that sits in the other wing of this Capitol by virtue of its structure under the Constitution——

Mr. KING. I am sure my friend will not misrepresent my statements.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly not.

Mr. KING. What I meant was that, scientifically speaking, there is no such thing as boundaries between States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. As I am not a scientist I will not discuss it from a scientist's standpoint. I want to call the attention of the House to the practical proposition here submitted. The amendment I have offered proposes to give to this service precisely the same amount of money that it has for the present current fiscal year. In order that the figures stated yesterday may be understood, I take occasion to repeat them. The estimate for this service, I do not mean for this paragraph or clause of the bill, but the estimate for this service for the present year was $389,700. The amount appropriated was $222,000. We have recommended by this bill an aggregate of $323,000. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by his amendment reduced that amount $19,000, making it $304,000 in the aggregate, as against $222,000 in the aggregate appropriated for the current year.

Mr. KENNA. Will the gentleman yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the gentleman will make his inquiry very short, as I have very little time.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to make an inquiry in reference to the amendment adopted yesterday evening. I understood it to have been adopted without dissent on the theory that the bill recommended more money than the estimates of the Department called for. I understand that to be a mistake, and that there is not a dollar more in the bill for the Geological Survey than the estimates of the Department call for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman will pardon me; I am not discussing that question.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ask if that be the fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not discuss that question. I have lost half of my time in allowing the gentleman from West Virginia to state the proposition, to which I decline in five minutes to give a reply or consider at all.

I want the committee to understand what is the aggregate of all the appropriations for this bureau. And I say it has been established and made a bureau by methods that will not admit of ventilation or defense. We know as well as we know anything that there is not a member of this House who is deemed to hold power or influence exceptionally that has not been approached and appealed to in the interest of this appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. By whom?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish the time was given me to answer.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] throws down the gauntlet and challenges us to a debate of constitutional law under the five-minute rule, with all debate limited to thirty minutes.

Few, if any, prudent lawyers would be willing to accept his wager of battle under such limitations and conditions.

I certainly will not enter into a discussion of constitutional law under the five-minute rule, but I will simply say that I find no constitutional difficulty in voting for this appropriation for the extension of the geological surveys to the States and for continuing them.

The powers granted by the Constitution are not confined to instrumentalities, agencies, and necessities in use or known when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They were intrusted to the General Government for the good of the nation. I will also say to the gentleman from Kentucky, who prides himself upon his learning as a constitutional lawyer and reminds us often of it, that there is a great difference between a wise, practical, and sensible construction of the Constitution, and old, fossilized, decayed, political-party dogmas of a by-gone political era that have passed out of existence and become obsolete. And I want to remind him that in this era of progress those statesmen and politicians who adhere to those old fossil ideas and swear by them yet will stand like "milestones along a deserted road," or will sit by the highways of advancement, along which the car of progress moves in its triumphal course, and gnash their teeth with impotent rage like Bunyan's Giant Despair.

In spite of reactionary obstructionists the world will move on under the glorious inspiration of the civilization of the nineteenth century, which seems to be approaching the splendors of a noonday glory. He may as well attempt to halt the stars in their orbits around the sun.

But, sir, I want to answer some statements that the gentleman from Kentucky made yesterday. In the first place he charged that we brought this question into this House at the last session under specious guises and endeavored to force its passage; and finally he said that it had been pressed upon the House in all of its phases, and it was beaten. Why did not the gentleman tell the House it was ruled out on a point of order, and that he did not dare to submit it to a vote of the House? Does he not know that, and that when the bill went to the Senate and came back with this clause inserted as a Senate amendment, so that it could not be ruled out on a point of order, this House voted for it by a more than three-fourths majority?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. DUNN. I can not yield. Does the gentleman not know the Forty-sixth Congress passed a joint resolution offered by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] by nearly a two-thirds vote, deliberately authorizing these surveys to be extended to the States?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Arkansas wants the truth——

Mr. DUNN. Deliberately committing this Government to a survey of the States?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not true.

Mr. DUNN. Did not the Forty-sixth Congress pass such a resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS]? I appeal to the record.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. DUNN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas refuses to yield.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to correct another statement. The gentleman from Kentucky said yesterday that this will cost $100,000,000——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not.

Mr. DUNN. Or certainly not less than fifty millions. The gentleman said that. Why, sir, the gentleman has been reading the history of the ordnance surveys of England and Europe and he has had a nightmare that has startled him, and in his fear and trepidation he rushes into this Hall and tries to alarm the House and the country.

Let the gentleman possess his soul in peace and security; for I assure him that there are no such horrible designs upon the Treasury. The country is entirely safe even if our friends on the other side do pass their bill to reduce (?) revenues.

Why, sir, this commission has already surveyed more than 600,000 square miles of territory; it has nearly completed the survey of 200,000 square miles more, an area equal to the area of twenty average States in this Union; and yet $2,000,000 have not been expended for that work. Does not the gentleman see and understand that these visions of fifties and hundreds of millions are only the creations of a distempered imagination? There is nothing in it to startle either the House or the country, but much to commend it to our favor and support.

Let me tell him further what I believe and what the country believes. It is that a great Government that rises full up to the measure of its duty owes it to every living soul whose allegiance it claims to place within their reach a common-school education and a correct knowledge of all the natural resources of the whole country, available for food, for industry, and for commerce; and I believe that there is not only constitutional power to do it, but that it is a constitutional duty to do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNN. I ask leave to print in the RECORD some remarks from the speech of Hon. A. S. HEWITT, and from the RECORD of last session.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. DUNN. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] who reported the existing laws consolidating the scientific and geological surveys and establishing the present organization in the Forty-fifth Congress concluded his remarks on that occasion with the following instructive and eloquent words, which I commend to the consideration of the House and the country:

When we come to contemplate the whole field of these natural resources available for food, for industry, and for commerce; when we attempt to grasp in one act of thought the length and breadth and depth of the riches with which the Maker of the universe has loaded this continent on which happily our lot is cast; when we try to realize how every possible want, every material aspiration of man is bounteously provided for; when we consider how measureless are the values which spring into being at the touch of modern industry, and how these values when once created are solid and real and become incorporated into the enduring structure of human society, we may begin to estimate properly the measure of responsibility which rests upon this nation and its chosen rulers, not merely to preserve unharmed the priceless boon of civil liberty which leaves the individual citizen free to do his share in the work of development, but to adopt such measures as will prevent the waste of natural resources, clear the way of progress, and promote the triumphs of civilization.

It is to these immeasurable elements of national wealth that we wish to direct the new surveys.

It is to a rigid, profound study of these great fundamental problems of national progress that we mean to turn the new organizations.

Is there any member of this House, is there any man living within our borders, who can suggest an undertaking more deeply fraught with all the elements of national prosperity? Has there ever been submitted to Congress a proposition more worthy of the support of patriots and statesmen?

I have attempted to draw the rough outlines of this great national picture in order not merely to show the magnitude of the interests involved and the necessity of a comprehensive and intelligent system of administration, but to make it apparent how trivial are the objections which have been presented to this House, all looking to minor details and overlooking the great salient features, the superabounding merits of this beneficent scheme. How unworthy of the vast interests involved is the petty dispute between different branches of the public service as to the peculiar qualifications of one or the other for this great work. Let us brush them all aside as belittling the real question involved in this magnificent conception. It comes to us from the highest scientific authority in the land. It commends itself to the judgment of the men who have been most energetic and successful in the development of our resources, the "captains of industry" of our time.

If we can but rise "to the height of this great argument" we shall place the work of national development and the elements of future prosperity upon the firm and enduring basis of truth and knowledge, from which they can not be moved so long as the Republic shall endure. Esto perpetua. [Great applause.]

During this discussion I said that during the Forty-sixth Congress the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] reported to this House a joint resolution authorizing the geological surveys to be extended to the States, and that this House passed it by nearly a two-thirds vote. The gentleman from Kentucky said, "That is not true." I said that I repeated that it was true, and that I appealed to the record. Under my leave I print that record, which is as follows, showing that the gentleman from Kentucky has a bad memory, but a power of assertion equal to the emergency. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 29, 1879 (first session Forty-sixth Congress, volume 38), shows the following proceedings:

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. ATKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the first clause under the heading of geological surveys, in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1879, and providing for said survey, is hereby amended by inserting after the words "national domain," in said clause, the words "and the States;" so that as amended it would read:

"Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the geological survey and classification of the public lands and the examination of the geological structure and mineral resources of the national domain and the States."

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to understand the necessity of putting in the words "and the States."

Mr. ATKINS. Just this: the law officers of the Department construe the words "national domain" to be confined to the Territories and the States where there are public lands. The Geological Director desires to make surveys of the mineral resources of the entire country, not only in the Territories and in the States where there are public lands, but also in all the States. He desires to make a survey of all the mineral resources, and the words "and the States" are added to the words "national domain" in order that he may be enabled to do so. If the Legislature or the executive of any State shall object, the Geological Director will not go into that State.

After discussion at some length a yea-and-nay vote was reached with the following result (pages 2423 and 2424, same volume):

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the passage of the joint resolution, upon which tellers have been ordered.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 72, noes 34.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the yeas and nays might be called on the passage of the joint resolution. The Chair thinks that there has not been a quorum in the House to-day.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I second that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the test of a quorum had better be made on the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Does any one raise the point of order that a quorum has not voted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], one of the tellers, has raised the point that a quorum did not vote.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KLOTZ. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 24 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, noes 53, not voting 141.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire how much time there is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] for five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to have some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize for five minutes the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit only an observation or two, and to make a suggestion confirmatory of what my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has just said in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Not having heard yesterday the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, I was surprised in looking over the RECORD this morning to find the statements made by him to this committee. One of these statements is to the effect that the proposition to extend the Geological Survey into the States, a proposition which was submitted in the last Congress and adopted, and is submitted for continuation to this, is a proposition to do "under cover" what would not be done openly. Another statement by him in that language adopted in this bill is "a guise" to enable the officers of the Government to extend this survey. Another is that the continuance of this survey to its completion throughout the country, including all the States, will cost $50,000,000, and, to use his own language, "$100,000,000 will scarce meet" the demand. Still another of the gentleman's declarations is that the attempt to carry this survey into the States is "an imposition, bad faith, and a repudiation of an implied if not an express agreement."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not go too far when I say that in each and every one of these utterances the gentleman from Kentucky is grossly mistaken. And I do not go too far when I declare that the ordinary avenues of information, if resorted to by the gentleman in this connection, would have saved him the hazard of such mistakes.

In the first place, he says the proposition was pressed and beaten at the last session. In this statement also he is mistaken. Sir, the gentleman from Kentucky knows full well that when the amendment was offered to provide for a continuation of the preparation of the geological map of the United States it was objected to on a point of order, and the Chairman, who now again occupies the chair, sustained the point of order on the very ground that the language used would inevitably carry the surveys into the States and thus enact a new law not then in force. The gentleman from Kentucky knows that to meet that point of order the words "public domain," as words of limitation, were inserted, but the amount was increased to cover the proposed extension. He likewise knows well that when the amendment went to the Senate the words "public domain" were stricken out. And he ought to know, if he remembers the facts, that when the amendment of the Senate came back to this House gentlemen on this floor were notified by the friends of the proposition that the effect of that amendment was to restore the original proposition as offered in the House, which carried the surveys into the States. This was its plain and simple object, and the purpose and scope of the concurrence were not concealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Were they notified publicly or privately?

Mr. KENNA. They were notified publicly and by me. And I suggest to the gentleman that in the discharge of my official duty I am in the habit of doing things publicly and openly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have it so.

Mr. KENNA. To demonstrate that it is so, I will read from my own remarks at the time the Senate amendment on my own motion was concurred in:

The whole matter was discussed before, and we do not want to discuss it any further, unless gentlemen who are opposed to concurrence desire to do so.

That is what I said at the time I moved that the House concur in the Senate amendment, referring to the former full discussion of its effect, in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that the amendment be now concurred in. The object of my motion I frankly declare was to extend the geological surveys into the States, and it was well understood at the time.

I further said:

By concurrence in the amendment of the Senate we leave it as it was offered originally in the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. KENNA. "As offered originally in the House," a point of order was sustained against it, because the surveys would go into the States. But coming from the Senate the rule did not apply, and a majority vote controlled and adopted the provision.

Now, as to the "guise" under which the matter was carried, it is fully answered by the facts I have stated. So far as the action of the committee of conference was concerned, of course I know nothing. But I know that when an officer of the Government makes either a statement or a promise he is bound by neither when it comes in conflict with subsequent provisions of both the letter and spirit of the law.

To make the whole matter plain, Mr. Chairman, allow me to state more succinctly the history of the provision of the last session. The friends of the measure offered an amendment to add to the appropriation for surveys $100,000 "to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States." The amendment was rejected on the point of order that it extended the surveys into the States, and was therefore new law and obnoxious to the rule which prohibited the enactment of new law on appropriation bills except on certain conditions. The amendment was then modified by adding the words "public domain," so as to make it read:

To continue the preparation of a geological map of the public domain of the United States.

With this modification, which did not antagonize the rule, the amendment adding the $100,000 was adopted by the friends of the surveys. Thus when the bill went to the Senate it was not necessary to add anything to the amount but simply to strike out the words of limitation, the words "public domain." This the Senate did. When the bill came back to the House the amendment of the Senate, on my own motion, was accepted. Thus the original proposition was restored, and thus the geological surveys were extended into the States. If gentlemen choose to characterize the method by which this important object was accomplished I have no controversy with them. It was done in an open, manly, fair, and parliamentary way, and no man who supported it was in any manner deceived. Nor indeed could any gentleman have been misled, for the record of the proceedings shows that the issue was squarely made and as squarely and successfully met.

With reference, Mr. Chairman, to the cost of these surveys, I desire to submit the facts as they are. Enough has been done already to determine with reasonable accuracy the cost of the future work.

The total area whose survey is completed is 672,580 square miles. It includes the surveys known as King's survey of the fortieth parallel, Hayden's surveys of the Territories, Wheeler's survey west of the one hundredth meridian, Powell's survey of the Rocky Mountain region, Jenney's survey of the Black Hills, and the present geological survey under the management of Major Powell. The total cost of this work has been $2,428,028.57. The average cost per square mile has been, therefore, about $3.60. Under the present system of triangulation and base-lines 400,000 square miles have been surveyed, at a cost of $1,200,000, which is only $3 per square mile.

Now, sir, the total area of the United States is 3,000,000 square miles. The total cost of surveying it under the present system would be but $9,000,000; and the total cost of surveying it, including the cost of the earlier work under a different system—the rectangular system—would be $9,410,288. Deduct from this sum total the amount already appropriated and expended, and you find a balance of $6,982,260 which it will cost the people of the United States to complete and perfect the geological survey of a continent and exhibit to mankind in its prominent features and general detail a wealth of resource which will astonish as its partial disclosure has already excited the admiration of the world.

But, Mr. Chairman, we do not realize the vastness of the work heretofore done. The area already surveyed is more than equal in extent to that of nineteen of the States of the Union, and the economy of the work, if my information is correct, is greatly to the credit of those having it in charge. I shall include the list of those States in a table of the facts which I have stated and to which I invite the attention of the House.

Total area surveyed, square miles, 672,580; total cost, $2,428,028.57; average cost per square mile, $3.60.

Area surveyed under present system, in square miles, 400,000; total cost, $1,200,000; average per square mile, $3.

So that we may calculate the area surveyed in square miles, 672,580; average cost, $3.60; total, $2,428,028.57.

Area to be surveyed in square miles, 2,327,420; average cost, $3; total, $6,982,260.

Thus we have the cost of past work	$2,428,028 57
Cost of future work	6,982,260 00
Total cost of all surveys made and to be made	9,410,288 57

The list of States, Mr. Chairman, whose combined territory does not quite equal the area already surveyed is as follows:

	Sq. miles.
Maine	33,000
New Hampshire	9,000
Massachusetts	8,300
Connecticut	4,990
New York	49,170
Delaware	2,050
New Jersey	7,800
Pennsylvania	45,120
Maryland	12,210
Virginia	42,250
North Carolina	52,250
South Carolina	30,570
Florida	58,680
Ohio	41,060
Kentucky	40,400
Georgia	59,470
Illinois	56,650
Missouri	69,410
Louisiana	48,720
Total	671,150

Thus we have for less than two millions and a half of dollars the survey of a magnificent domain, larger than many empires, and thus we may have, if we adhere to the present purpose and plan, for less than seven millions more the survey of an additional area more than three times as great. The value of the work can not be exaggerated. If it will be of inestimable advantage to the grand little State which I have the honor in part to represent its service will be commensurate to the country at large. [Here the hammer fell.] I hope some gentleman will yield me two minutes of his time.

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to be recognized, and will yield to my friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] for two minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] if he rises to oppose the proposition.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will rise to oppose the amendment, and yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that at this stage of the debate, the time for debate being limited, that would not be right. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to relieve my friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] from the consequences of his reckless statements.

Mr. KENNA. Give me two minutes before you do that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman took two minutes of my time. Mr. Speaker, I reiterate every statement that I made yesterday. I am willing to confess that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has at least succeeded in impressing the House favorably—not with his answer to the proposition as to whether this appropriation was defensible under the warrant of the Constitution, for that he very prudently refrained from touching. No man has yet undertaken or dared to answer the proposition submitted—[Mr. KENNA rose.] I beg the gentleman to remember that he declined to yield to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has but one minute remaining.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought I had five.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entitled to the last five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to say that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] fails to impeach a single statement I made as to the amounts necessary to be appropriated; he fails to produce a single atom of evidence to refute the statement that this was done surreptitiously as it was done; and the gentleman from Arkansas, with a prudence for which he is to be commended, slunk clear away from the question of constitutional warrant——

Mr. DUNN. I did not think I could settle the constitutional question in five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And satisfied himself with convincing the House that he was the most perfect adept in the House in the matter of swallowing every political conviction that he ever held, and pleading to be allowed to make a raid upon the Federal Treasury without warrant of constitutional law, when he found an opportunity to enrich the private citizens who chance to constitute his constituents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. DUNN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think in all fairness the gentleman from Kentucky ought to let me answer that statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to answer you.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] has said he supposed if there was any doctrine in the world I am opposed to it is the doctrine of State rights. However much I may be opposed to the doctrine of State rights, I am not in favor of individuals taking from the Treasury money for the improvement of private property; and I had a right to call the attention of the committee to the attitude occupied by gentlemen on the other side of the House upon this question, in view of what has been transpiring here for the last two or three weeks.

I have seen gentlemen on the other side of the House who are advocating the most liberal appropriations of money to aid railroad and other corporations in the investigation of the hidden resources of their lands, voting on every conceivable occasion to strike down a domestic industry because, as they said, it was supported and sustained by a protective tariff. There is scarcely an interest in the whole country in regard to which these gentlemen have not said—and some of them for constitutional reasons—that it should have no protection, that it was not the province of the General Government to protect manufacturing industries; yet they come in here and say, "We will take money from the Federal Treasury for the purpose of developing private property."

Gentlemen where is your consistency? I had a right to say yesterday that the gentleman from Kentucky was consistent; and I have a right to say that gentlemen who have addressed themselves to this question here to-day are inconsistent.

In my own town there is an industry I have heard inveighed against upon this floor almost constantly. "Free salt" has been the slogan, the war cry, on the other side, and yet gentlemen over there would take the major part of the protection afforded to that industry, supported in the interest of 25,000 workingmen, and use it to develop the wealth of corporations which are hunting mines in the Appalachian range.

As I said yesterday, Mr. Chairman, this is the humorous side of this question to me. It presents before the country the fact that gentlemen who almost hissed down the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] the other day, in the constitutional position he assumed in reference to the tariff, are now willing to vote the largest possible amount when that money is to be used in the development of individual interests in their own localities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed by order of the House on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. DUNN. In view of the rather personal fling the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] made at me, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object unless the debate is opened on both sides.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] may be granted and that I may be allowed equal time to reply. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BROWNE. I have no objection to granting unanimous consent to print.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out "$240,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$158,000."

Mr. BLACKBURN demanded tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his pending amendment and make it $200,000 instead of $158,000.

Mr. ROBESON. I hope the committee will stand by the Committee on Appropriations in their vote.

Mr. RYAN. I hope the chairman will stand by his committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I accept that modification of my amendment and will make it $200,000 instead of $158,000.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope it will be voted down and we will stand by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move my amendment in the order suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have a division on that amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 64.

Mr. ELLIS. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. ELLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the scientific assistants of the geological survey: For salary of five geologists, at $4,000 each.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offered an amendment yesterday which has not been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquired of the Clerk, and the Clerk said there was no further amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. You will find it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1404, after the word "mineral," insert the words "agricultural and other industrial;" so it will read:

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For the United States Geological Survey: For the geological survey, and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral, agricultural, and other industrial resources and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. Besides that it is not germane to the pending provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending provision is for the geological survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral and industrial resources and products of the national domain, &c., and the Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is germane to the pending provision.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment is offered to come in after the word "mineral," in line 1404; and the Clerk will report the paragrah as it will stand should this amendment be adopted.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the point of order that I make is this: that it changes existing law. It must change existing law, for this is intended evidently by the gentleman who offers it to enlarge the scope and objects of the bill. I do not know that I would have any great objection to this amendment in itself, but I do protest against making this Geological Bureau an agricultural bureau, or in this way changing the law which created this bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair has already indicated his ruling.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to be heard for a moment upon the point of order. The point I make is that when you are extending this bureau as proposed here you are going beyond the language of the original law authorizing it. As is provided in the bill, and as the language is framed, it simply refers to a report upon the mineral resources of the country, as well as the geological structure and products of the national domain. Now, the organic law on this subject, which the Chair should have before him when ruling upon the point of order, will be cited by the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague upon the committee, who has sent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is important that that law should be cited before the point of order is finally determined.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, we were told on yesterday that these surveys were accomplishing a great many things besides what was originally contemplated in the law; that they were making reports on arable land, flow of rivers, State lines, and resources of the public domain generally. Now, the amendment which I propose is simply to put into this bill what it was stated is being already in process of execution by this survey. That statement to which I have referred was made upon the floor, and I claim that this amendment can not change the existing law if it be held that the work of this survey is in accordance with the present law. For if this amendment is not in order, then the work of the geological survey is itself out of order under the present law, because they are doing in part what this amendment proposes that they shall do in a more systematic manner. For myself, however, I have no doubt in the world that this amendment is entirely in order and that the ruling as already indicated by the Chair is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I will submit in a moment the original act creating this survey. But in 1878 or 1879 this bureau was created by a permanent law; and in creating it the language of this bill was used. It was established and given jurisdiction over that class of work which is enumerated in this paragraph of the bill, namely:

The geological survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, local resources, and products of the national domain.

Since that time the appropriations have literally followed the law, so that there is an organic law at the bottom of the appropriation, which the committee deem it advisable and of course absolutely essential should be followed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an important point; the Chair recognizes it, and it should be limited to the scope of the existing law. That is not before the Chair, however.

Mr. CANNON. I will have it in a moment and submit it to the Chair. The gentleman from Tennessee, who is present and the author of the law, will recollect that this appropriation runs in the language of the original appropriation for this bureau. I refer him to page 58 of the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly the appropriations must be confined to the authority given by the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. While the Clerk is procuring the copy of the law, I ask in the mean time that we proceed with the bill if there be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pending paragraph will be informally passed over to be returned to hereafter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb:

For current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses and for books and illustrative apparatus, for general repairs, and improvements, $55,000: Provided, That no more than $25,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries and wages.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out, in line 1481, the word "five" and inserting "two;" so that it will read:

Provided, That no more than $22,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries and wages.

The object of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to make this bill conform to the present law, and I only trust that if it shall be agreed to the power of the American Congress may be sufficient to make the teachers, the tutors, and professors of this institution conform to the law of the land, which it seems they have not been heretofore doing.

I took occasion a year ago, when this bill was pending, to call the attention of this House to the fact that this is the most liberally endowed and most expensively sustained institution either on this or any other continent, an institution where they have in round numbers one hundred pupils, with a corps of fourteen professors and tutors with salaries ranging from six or seven thousand dollars a year in actual value down to $1,200. There is not another eleemosynary institution in this District, there is not another charitable institution on this continent, whose superintendent receives the salary that is given to this gentleman. He has $4,000 a year in money paid to him; he has a house built and furnished by the Federal Government; he has his supplies all given to him; and when you come to add his salary to these various items you will find that the position is worth in round numbers from six to seven thousand dollars per annum.

Nominally the disbursement of this $25,000 is under the Secretary of the Interior, but practically it is under the control of the superintendent of this asylum, and he disposes of it as he pleases. I do not know what has been done in that direction during the last twelve months, but I do remember the fact that I called the attention of this House a year ago to the circumstance that he was allowed $500 for the payment of the expenses of his trip to Europe, and several hundred dollars for painting the portrait of his father, which money came from the Federal Treasury, because he thought it was a proper thing to do.

Fifty-five thousand dollars appropriated to maintain this institution with one hundred inmates, one hundred and four or one hundred and eleven, and about one-half of it going into the pockets of the professors, to say nothing of the drain that you make upon the remainder to supply them with grocery stores and provisions! If this be the institution that its friends claim it is, at least one-half of the money that is appropriated for its maintenance should go to the institution proper and not to the pockets of its professors.

The law of the current year limits the expenditure for salaries to $22,000. The present bill proposes to raise it to $25,000. I simply ask this Committee of the Whole to put it back, and declare that out of a gross appropriation of $55,000 not more than $22,000 plus the supplies furnished to the professors shall go in the way of salaries.

Mr. HISCOCK. Last year I concurred in the report of the Committee on Appropriations of the House limiting the salaries to be paid at this institution. But, Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to recognize the fact that this institution is the pioneer in the higher education of mutes; and I have no doubt it is doing a good work.

I do not believe that it ought to be fostered by the General Government at all, and I grounded my action last year upon that conviction. But the General Government has fostered it for twenty years or more. It has become one of the recognized institutions of the land. I think all such institutions as that should be established and supported by private enterprise and private means or by States; and I am opposed upon general principles to more of them being fastened upon the General Government. But we find this here. It is doing a good work. It is no better and no worse than many others we are providing for every year; and I therefore concluded, and the Committee on Appropriations concluded, that we would allow it to be supported for the next fiscal year as it has been supported in the past.

This difference is, I believe, a matter of $2,500; and we did not believe that it was wise to continue the restrictions upon the salaries of the officials which we imposed last year. I hope the report of the committee will be approved.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out the last word.

An examination of the expenditures of this institution in comparison with its results will show the most reckless extravagance as contrasted with any institution of the kind in the United States. There is not a single State where the institutions of this character are managed with as reckless extravagance as this institution is managed. And whatever may be the quality of its education, I undertake to say it is in no respect superior to that of the institutions in Ohio, New York, Connecticut, and other States.

For the information of the committee I have made a comparison of the institutions in three of the leading States with that in the District of Columbia; so that this committee may see how this institution is managed in comparison with others.

But before I give these figures let me say there has been in the neighborhood of a million and a half of dollars spent on this institution for salaries, buildings, grounds, &c.

Last year there was spent $58,000 in round numbers; number of pupils, 111; cost per pupil, $522.79; expended for salaries and wages, $29,000; per pupil, $265.

In Ohio the expenses per capita were $172, a difference of over $350 for each pupil per annum. Paid for salaries, $17,954, $12,000 less than was paid here; while there were educated in the Ohio asylum 506 pupils as against 111 in the Columbia Institution.

In the Western Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb there are 110 pupils, the number at the Columbia Institution here being 111; total expenditure, $31,956, $28,000 less than spent here. Expenses per capita $198, against $522, at the Columbia Institution. The salaries and wages were $7,906, against $29,726 at the Columbia Institution.

In Connecticut the expenses per capita were $175—and the institution there is in as fine order, I am informed, as the Columbia Institution—$175 against $522.

To recapitulate: Charges per capita in the Columbia Institution, $522; in Ohio, $172; in the Pennsylvania Western Institute, $198; in another Pennsylvania institution, $239; in Connecticut, $175.

Salaries: In the Columbia Institution, $29,726; in Ohio, $17,956; in the Western Institute, Pennsylvania, with the same number of scholars, $7,906.

The committee can easily discover from these figures that this institution, as compared with others in the United States, is kept up with the most reckless extravagance.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Ohio, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, will not claim support for any more eleemosynary institutions in this District.

Mr. NEAL. I have nothing to do with that. The Committee on Appropriations have charge of the eleemosynary institutions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the president of this board, and I believe the chairman of this Committee of the Whole is one of the directors, reports that when the Appropriations Committee limited the expenditure for salary and wages to not over $22,000—

The directors are under the impression that this provision of law must have been adopted by Congress without a full understanding of the needs of the institution and the character of the service that was required in doing this work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word in justice to myself and to this institution in opposition to the amendment.

Last year, I will state very frankly, from an examination of these expenditures, but not having examined carefully the management of this institution and not being fully advised, as I am now, as to the work it was doing, I concurred with members of the House in putting the limitation at $22,000 for these salaries. Since that time I want to be equally frank with the House and say that I have looked into the work they are doing and am better advised in regard to it than I was a year ago. If this was an open question that we were commencing now for the first time to establish this institution I should hesitate about commencing appropriations for it.

I want to say to the House that in my opinion, from the examination I have made of it, it is doing a very valuable work. I grant you it is doing a much more expensive work than is done in some institutions in most if not all of the States. But that, I apprehend, arises very largely from the fact that it is superior in the character of instruction to institutions in most of the States, and that fewer students are instructed in this institution than in State institutions. I think it is altogether probable that you might instruct double or three or four times the number of students that are now instructed there at a very much less cost per capita than those now being instructed.

But the impression has been left upon my mind from the examination I have given the subject since last year that this limitation should be raised from $22,000 to $25,000. For one I am not willing to vote for the amendment.

Mr. NEAL. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I renew it. I want to say a single word in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL]. He says this is the most expensive institution of the kind in the United States.

If I am correctly informed there is not only no other institution like this in the United States, but I believe there is none in the world. There is perhaps in every State of this Union a deaf and dumb asylum where instruction is given. But I am informed and believe there is no other college in the world for the education of the deaf and dumb in the higher branches of education.

I doubt if the expense in this college is higher than that of other colleges in proportion to the number educated, and the difference per capita is perhaps no greater than it is between other colleges in the country and common schools. I think the difference in expense per capita between this institution and those referred to by the gentleman from Ohio can be largely explained by the difference in numbers; and certainly by the difference between a college with a faculty and institutions of learning where only common branches are taught. I only desired to say this much.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. NEAL. I move to amend the paragraph by adding the proviso which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter the reports of said institution shall contain an itemized statement of all of the employés and the salaries or wages, respectively, of each of them, and also all other expenses of said institution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For the improvement and inclosure of the grounds, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] that from an examination of the law establishing the geological survey he finds that the bill under consideration in its limitations follows the precise language of the original law, and that the amendment proposed to be inserted would extend the scope of this bill beyond the provisions of the original law, and is therefore not in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now ask the Clerk to return to the provisions in the bill making appropriations for surveys of the public lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first paragraph which was passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying the public lands:

For surveying the public lands, $400,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines; and of the sum hereby appropriated $60,000 shall be expended for surveys in the Territory of Dakota; and a further amount, not exceeding $50,000 thereof, may be expended for occasional examinations of public surveys in the several surveying districts, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal-fields, and timber districts.

Mr. RYAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the end of the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for the making of such other survey or examination as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding on behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRENTS. I move the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "undergrowth," in line 1346, insert the following:
"Or where for any cause not already provided for by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve all points of order until I can hear some explanation of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the paragraph to be read as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands, $400,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, or where for any cause not already provided for by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid, a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been reserved.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will reserve it until the gentleman makes his statement.

Mr. BRENTS. Under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year the rates for surveys were reduced $3 per mile. I opposed that reduction at that time for the reason that I was satisfied surveys could not be made in my Territory at those rates. Subsequent information has confirmed me in that opinion. We have been unable to get any surveys whatever made at the minimum rates provided in that act of $5 per mile for section lines and $7 per mile for township lines.

The matter has been brought to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and they have written letters asking that increased rates be allowed for Oregon and Washington Territory. This proposition was submitted to them and modified in some respects at their suggestion.

It simply gives the Commissioner of the General Land Office a discretionary power to allow greater rates for surveys in Washington and Oregon. It is utterly impossible to get surveys made there at the rates provided for in this bill. Our agricultural lands can not be surveyed at all. We have been unable to get any contracts taken in either Oregon or Washington for the survey of agricultural lands at the rates provided for in this bill.

Augmented rates are provided for heavily timbered lands and lands covered with thick underbrush. We have had some surveys of those lands at the augmented rates, but the agricultural lands, where the tide of immigration is necessarily setting in, can not be surveyed at these rates, for the deputy surveyors can not make surveys at these rates except at a loss.

The surveyors-general have been unable to get any contracts taken at those rates. The surveyor-general of my Territory informs me that unless some provision is adopted allowing a discretionary power in reference to some increase of rates the appropriation of last year will lapse, and we shall get no surveys at all. You might as well make no appropriation for Washington Territory and Oregon as to allow no greater rates than those provided in this bill. The wages for ordinary labor are much higher in that portion of the country than in other districts.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] will prevail. In the last Congress the rates for this service were changed; but experience has demonstrated that a large portion of the lands of Washington Territory and Oregon can not be surveyed under the rates fixed by Congress. The result is that much of the money appropriated for surveys is lying in the Treasury unused, and unless some amendment similar to that now proposed be adopted, it is useless to appropriate further for the survey of lands in Eastern Oregon and the eastern part of Washington Territory. In this statement I am supported by the surveyor-general of my State, whose letter I shall ask to have read. I desire also to have read a memorial adopted by the last Legislature of the State of Oregon, reciting facts which can not be denied or disputed.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington Territory has been submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and has been approved. I hope that the point of order will not be pressed. I now call for the reading of the letter of the surveyor-general of Oregon and the memorial of the Legislature of that State.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of these papers can not be finished in the gentleman's time. Does he desire to have them read, or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that they be read without reference to the termination of the gentleman's time.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope they will be read. This is a vital matter with us in Washington Territory and Oregon.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman's time may be extended, not exceeding five minutes, for the purpose of allowing these papers to be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL,
Portland, Oreg., December 21, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Until to-day I have been unable to find time to write you, and do so now in appreciation of the necessity of an early move on the part of Congress toward the increase in prices for surveys on this coast and particularly with reference to this State, and respectfully ask your attention to the memorial passed by our last Legislature in regard to this matter, which instrument in a measure accorded with my views and was a recital of the general facts. All of the unsurveyed portions of this State are of such a character that present rates afford no profit (in the main would entail loss if undertaken) to deputies, and if said rates are permitted to remain the result must be the entire stoppage of surveys in this State, and, as you can plainly see, will result in great injury to, if not prevention of, settlement. In plain justice, the maximum rates allowed by the appropriation act for 1881-'82 (see paragraph under head of Surveying the Public Lands, page 273, volume 21, United States Statutes at Large) should be the minimum rates allowed for Oregon, with this change in reading: "For standard and auxiliary meridian lines, $16 per mile; for township and meander lines, $14 per mile; and for section lines, $10 per mile." There are some limited areas for which such rates would afford fair compensation, but much the greater portion could not be executed at even those rates; and for them an "augmented rate" (there should be only two rates for this State) should be provided and should read: For standard and auxiliary meridian lines over mountains or lands covered with dense growth of timber or through thick underbrush, $18 per mile; for township or meander lines of same character, $16 per mile, and for section lines, $14 per mile, the character of the greater portion of each mile, as shown by the field-notes of survey, to determine the price of the mile considered.

This latter price is the same as is provided for California and Washington Territory by section 2405, United States Revised Statutes, second edition, 1878, and might serve as a repeal of section 2404 ibid., and be embodied in the regular appropriation act as specially applicable, if necessary, to Oregon, though California and Washington are entitled to the same rates. And these rates should be made available in contracting for work under the appropriation of last year, as not a dollar of the $20,000 then allotted to Oregon has been or can be used at present rates, so far as my effort has yet been rewarded.

Very respectfully, &c.,

JAMES C. TOLMAN,
Surveyor-General, Oregon.

Hon. M. C. GEORGE, M. C., Washington, D. C.

House joint memorial No. 9.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, would respectfully represent that the rates per mile now allowed for the survey of the public domain in the State of Oregon, which rates were established by the last Congress, are insufficient and altogether inadequate to secure the end desired, and that their maintenance must result in the discontinuance of the surveys in this State, for the reason that deputy surveyors will not contract to do the work because of the great expense of reaching the yet unsurveyed portions of the State with supplies and assistants, and the difficult and expensive character of the work now remaining to be done, which is almost exclusively of that character hitherto avoided by surveyors, and for which the immediately preceding prices afforded little or no profit.

The unsurveyed portions of this State consist mainly of lands lying along the coast or on the mountain ranges, and are covered with dense forests and thick and tangled jungles of almost impenetrable brush, in addition to a ragged and craggy nature, and are generally distant from the ordinary bases of supplies. Of these facts all who are acquainted with our State are fully aware, and none more so than deputy surveyors; yet large areas of these lands are of the richest soil; are valuable for their timber as well as other natural advantages, and are now eagerly sought for by persons in search of homes and who are willing to clear and cultivate them. This is attested by the number of applications and petitions to the proper officers asking for their survey. These requests can not be complied with so long as the present prices prevail for the reasons before given.

The results of this condition of things are readily seen and are a matter of much seriousness to this State at this time, now that thousands are here seeking homes and thousands more are coming, the majority of whom are seeking locations upon the Government lands. That portion of the appropriation by the last Congress for the extension of surveys in Oregon is rendered useless and will necessarily be returned to the Treasury and the extension of the surveys be suspended until more remunerative prices are allowed by law. This must result in great damage to the State in preventing settlement and improvement. There is perhaps no State in the Union which is at this time attracting more attention abroad, or which is making such rapid strides in material advancement and prosperity, as Oregon; and it is safe to say that to discontinue the public surveys at this time is to strike a serious and unnecessary blow at the material prosperity of the State.

We, your memorialists, therefore earnestly ask and pray that this impediment may be speedily removed by an advance in the prices for surveys at least equal to those which prevailed before the last reduction, and that such change may at least include the appropriation to Oregon for the current year, as well as for the future. And this your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order I make is that the rates for these surveys are fixed by law, and that the effect of the amendment is to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the recollection of the Chair, the compensation for this class of service has always been adjusted in appropriation bills under such limitations as the particular acts may have prescribed.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been uniformly the case. The act of last session fixed the basis of compensation, which this amendment proposes to change.

Mr. HISCOCK. A single word in reply to the suggestion of the Chair. These divisions of the work have never been changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire whether in view of the exception in this bill, "the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth," it may not be in order to insert an additional exception such as this amendment proposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point I make is that these divisions have always been as they are now. No doubt Congress has at times varied the pay in these divisions; but the divisions have always been maintained. Now the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year contains this provision:

For surveying public lands, $400,000, at rates not exceeding—

Then it goes on to give the terms. We have followed that provision in this bill.

Now, it is barely possible that the prices given for these different classes of work might be changed; but the classes have always been maintained as distinct, and the point I make against this amendment is that it breaks down the classification.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees nothing in this amendment touching the classification. It simply proposes an additional exception to that made in the bill. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to the language. After providing the rates and divisions and classification the language is:

Except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth.

Now the amendment proposes to add the words, "or when, for any cause not already provided for by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid." This language changes the classification in no particular, but only adds another exception. In this point of view the Chair is inclined to consider the amendment in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the Chair to hold this amendment to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman shows it is not germane.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not spend any more time, then, on the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I was about to ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his point of order even if it were held to be good by the Chair. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WASHBURN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, that gives a large discretion, and with that provision in the bill we can not tell what price this work will amount to.

The CHAIRMAN. The limitation follows what the Clerk has read.

Mr. BRENTS It gives a discretion of $2 a mile.

Mr. WASHBURN. There should be further limitation, and I therefore propose to make a limit to the amount. I am satisfied from my knowledge of the situation there should be a discretion between the price paid on this side of the Rocky Mountains and the price paid in Oregon and Washington. In a business point of view, and as a practical question, I am satisfied in order to get these agricultural lands surveyed some discretion of this kind must be reposed in the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark to the gentleman from Minnesota that what follows contains the limitation.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move an amendment limiting the amount to be expended during the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. That will come up in order as an amendment to the amendment after this is adopted.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1341, 1342, and 1343, strike out "9," "7," and "5," and in lieu thereof insert "10," "9," and "7;" so it will read:

"At rates not exceeding $10 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $9 for township and $7 for section lines," &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that amendment changes existing law and increases expenditure.

Mr. CASSIDY. I should like to be heard on that amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that is not a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had better offer his amendment as an independent proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the gentleman withdraw it for the present and offer it again.

Mr. CASSIDY. I will withdraw my amendment until action is taken upon the one now pending.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee and of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to what we have learned in respect to this matter. It has been said this money was insufficient to procure the survey of the lands in the Territory of Washington and the State of Oregon. If that be true it is a remarkable fact we have not heard of it from the Commissioner of the General Land Office or from the Secretary of the Interior. I do not know but gentlemen have obtained later information. I do know when this provision was inserted in this bill it was satisfactory to the General Land Office and to the Secretary of the Interior, so far as he was represented before the Committee on Appropriations.

And there is one other fact I desire to call to the attention of this Committee of the Whole. There is to-day of surveyed lands in the State of Oregon 19,546,918 acres which have not yet been entered. It has been intimated—I do not know but falsely—it has been supposed if these surveying parties refuse to do this work Congress will increase the price. As I have said, I do not know that is true. I know, however, after the fullest consideration and the most mature deliberation, the last Congress fixed these rates as they are provided in this bill. Now, in Washington Territory there are nine and one-half millions of acres of surveyed lands which remain unentered. With these large margins in Washington and Oregon I believe this work could rest a year in order to see whether men could not be found to do it for the rates indicated in the statute.

One other word. We reduced these rates in the last Congress under great difficulty and against an immense amount of pressure. I believe that reduction was right. We satisfied the House it was right. And, Mr. Chairman, we scarcely had the concurrence of those connected with the General Land Office in our efforts, but they did acquiesce in it. With this large margin of surveyed lands in Washington and Oregon which are yet unentered, it seems to me we should wait to see whether the contractors there may not conclude they can do this work for the rates here indicated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASSIDY. Before the vote is taken upon this amendment I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in after the words "Washington Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nevada will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "Washington Territory," the words "Nevada, Utah, Idaho, Montana, and Arizona."

Mr. CASSIDY. The object of this is to make the amendment general in its application to all of the Western States and Territories.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory, which has been read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 21.

Mr. BRENTS. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BRENTS were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 55.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CASSIDY. I offer the further amendment which I have already suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1341, 1342, and 1343 strike out the words "nine, seven, and five," and insert in lieu thereof the words "ten, nine, and seven," so that it will read:

"At rates not exceeding $10 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $9 for township, and $7 for section lines."

Mr. HISCOCK. That is subject——

Mr. CASSIDY. I would like to be heard for a moment upon that amendment. All that has been said by the gentleman from Washington Territory and the gentleman from Oregon applies with equal force to all the Western States and Territories. Under the reduction in the price allowed for these surveys in that Western country, where labor is necessarily much higher than elsewhere, the surveys have been practically suspended during the past year. The reduction made at the last Congress was over 37 per cent. in the price.

In reference to the point made by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asking that this be ruled out upon the point of order, I desire to say simply that it is not proposed by this amendment to change the existing law in any sense whatever. There is nothing in the amendment which goes to the manner or classification of the surveys. It is simply the compensation allowed for them that is affected by this amendment. And I hold, therefore, that, being germane under Rule XXI, it is entirely admissible as an amendment to this bill.

I had the honor of presenting a few days since to this House a memorial unanimously adopted by the Legislature of my State, praying this body to increase the price of the surveys of the public lands in that State. This memorial set forth fully the fact that during the last year there had been no surveys whatever made under the contract system. Prior to 1880 the price paid for this same class of surveys was $12, $14, and $10, according to the classification. At the last session of Congress I joined with the honorable gentleman from New York in repealing that portion of the law upon this subject which related to the deposit system. In other words, we ingrafted upon the bill a provision that certificates taken in payment of the surveys should be applicable only in the land district where the survey is made. I believe that was correct legislation. But I do not believe that it was wise to reduce the rate for the surveying or that the rates should have been cut so largely as they were by that last appropriation bill.

I therefore appeal to gentlemen on this floor to vote with me to restore in a measure the old rates. The amendment I suggest increases the rates $1 per mile on the specific classes of surveys.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I certainly believe that this amendment is subject to the point of order. I do not know whether the Chair has passed upon it or not——

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been made, as the Chair understands, up to this time; but the Chair will recognize the gentleman as making or reserving it if he desires to do so.

Mr. CASSIDY. Let me state again that this does not increase at all the amount of the appropriation carried by the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. It provides for the distribution of the money without affecting the aggregate of the bill.

Mr. BRENTS. It does not make the aggregate of the bill a dollar more or a dollar less.

Mr. GEORGE. No; as it has no effect whatever upon it in that respect.

Mr. CASSIDY. I do not see how it can be ruled out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that these amendments have been affixed uniformly as limitations upon appropriation bills without affecting the amount covered by the bill. It is a limitation upon the expenditure of the amount paid for the service; and being a limitation the Chair feels it to be his duty to submit it as a legitimate question for the action of the committee. He therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I will address myself briefly to the merits of the amendment.

In the State of Nevada, which the gentleman represents, there are today eighteen and a half millions of unentered surveyed lands.

Mr. BRENTS. How many that are entered?

Mr. HISCOCK. I repeat, eighteen and a half millions of acres are open under the pre-emption laws.

Mr. BRENTS. How many altogether?

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I am opposed to the survey of the Rocky Mountains——

Mr. CASSIDY. I do not live in the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. HISCOCK. Until there seems to be some necessity for it while there are, as in this State, such large margins of public lands not yet entered.

Mr. CASSIDY. Let me say to the gentleman that the State of Nevada is as large as New England and New York all together.

Mr. HISCOCK. I recognize the fact that it is a very large State.

Mr. GEORGE. And it is a long way from the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is possible I may have made a mistake in calling them the Rocky Mountains. But they are rocky mountains.

Mr. BRENTS. The gentleman from New York can not see beyond the Rocky Mountains. He seems not to be aware that there is any country beyond the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have heard a great deal said about the desire of the gentlemen of the East to hold down appropriations. But I undertake to say, whether it is due to my influence or that of anybody else, we have been fairly liberal in our appropriations. And I undertake to say another thing——

Mr. GEORGE. When you appropriate money for our use we merely ask that you shall regulate it so that we may have the benefit of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, then, it was discovered by the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress that extraordinary rates were being paid, and that organizations had been formed for the survey of these lands to get the benefit of those rates. In accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office we reduced the rates, and those reductions were made on the advice of men from the West and not from the East. There are gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee who are, if I am not, thoroughly in sympathy with liberal appropriations in this direction; and we called in other gentlemen from the West and they said the rates we fixed were fair. Now comes in a proposition to increase them. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the large margin of surveyed lands that there is in the gentleman's State——

Mr. CASSIDY. This does not apply to one State merely.

Mr. GEORGE. It applies to nearly all the States.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I will say in all of the States, we can afford to wait a while and see if the prices we have offered will not command the work.

Mr. GEORGE. Then why do you not wait in the case of the other States?

Mr. HISCOCK. We are waiting. There has been no other State which has not been willing to accept it.

Mr. GEORGE. Where it is not accepted it is because they can not use it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. As I understand the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] it is that unless settlers go upon those portions of the public lands which are surveyed they are not to go upon the public lands at all; and they are not to have their lands surveyed or to obtain title for their improvements.

Many of those surveys have been made over arid lands and where settlements can not go. And it is true that from all the valleys of those Territories petitions are coming up to have surveys made that the petitioners may get titles to their homes. And I undertake to say under the rates fixed by this bill no contracts can be made in any one of those Territories. They may be perhaps in Kansas, which is represented on the Committee on Appropriations, or in Dakota, whose interests seem to be well taken care of, an innovation having been made on the system of appropriations for the benefit of that Territory. But the great Northwest has no representation on that committee and no one on the committee looks out for its interests.

I hold in my hand a letter from one of the surveyers of the Territory of Montana who was offered and refused to take a contract under the last appropriation. If the gentleman's argument means anything, that the surveys are in excess of the demand, why make any appropriation at all? Why not strike out this amount of $400,000? If the object is to reduce the bill, reduce it by that amount. I would as soon have it that way as have the appropriation coupled with conditions such that money can not be expended except in one or two favored localities. I publish as a part of my remarks the letter I referred to:

HELENA, MONT., January 17, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Being a United States deputy surveyor of long standing in this Territory, and well known to you as such, I beg leave to write to you on the subject of the present pay allowed by the Government for surveying the public lands. You will remember that I spoke to you on the subject previous to your departure for Washington to attend this session.

I have resided in this Territory for twenty-three years, having been almost all the time employed in various branches of surveying. For fifteen years of that time I have been connected with the surveyor-general's department, either in the office or as deputy surveyor. In these various capacities, and also as an explorer, I have visited nearly every part of the Territory and am very thoroughly acquainted with it.

I was offered and intended to take a contract last year, but when the reduction in price was made by Congress in the last appropriation I declined to take one, as I knew by experience that at such prices it was impossible to make any money. I had, however, already made a contract for surveying a single township on the Missouri River under a special deposit. The township was very rough; it took me four weeks to survey and three weeks to write the field-notes, and for all this work I shall barely get back the money which I paid out for expenses. It was at the old rates.

Several surveyors who were already in the field, making surveys under old appropriations, and who had been at great expense in outfitting themselves with horses, &c., at the commencement of the season, finding that they must either keep or sell out at a loss, took further contracts in Eastern Montana, in the Yellowstone, Judith Basin, and Musselshell. Owing to the remarkably fine season they were enabled to work up to December, but have all come in and are now engaged in making up their field-notes and maps. I am told by all that they have lost money, and as I know the country well where they have been surveying to be very rough, I believe it.

Mr. Rodney Page, an old and experienced surveyor, took a contract on the west side on the Missoula and Clarke's Fork Rivers. Getting out late in the season he found the country so rough that he could only do part of his work, and retired from the field in December, not having made enough to pay his expenses. He did not have to purchase an outfit, as he had one already from the previous year. I do not think a single surveyor has made anything by his work this year.

A surveyor's expenses do not end with the survey. Almost all of them have to borrow money from the banks at high rates of interest in order to pay for provisions, horses, hire of men, &c. It takes nearly as much time to write the field-notes and make the maps as it does to make the surveys in the field, particularly if the work is rough and has meanders in it. Then it has to be examined in the Surveyor-General's Office, and transcripts, maps, &c., made, and it frequently happens that a year elapses before he receives his pay from the Government. Besides this he has a number of horses, which must be taken care of in winter, and he has to pay some ranchman $2 per head per month for looking after them. This expense frequently amounts to $25 or $30 per month. All these items and many more which I could name have to be taken into account in calculating the paying value of a contract.

Notwithstanding the increased emigration the expenses have not at all diminished. The contract surveyor when he starts out comes in competition with the farmer and the miner, who want help at that particular time, and are willing to pay for it, and there are many new enterprises now beginning; consequently the surveyor still has to pay from $50 to $60 per month to his hands and even more to those who have skill and experience. Last year, in surveying, I had to pay my hands $2 per day and board, including idle days, in order to get them at all.

I would further remark that a surveyor who takes contracts in this climate, can do little else. Surveyors here are divided into two classes—those who do private and mineral work, and who generally reside in the towns where such work can be obtained, such as Helena, Butts, Benton, and Virginia City, and those who take contracts from year to year for surveying public lands. These latter employ the spring and summer in doing their work, and part of the winter in writing their notes. They can therefore undertake no other work, and they are compelled therefore to earn their living for the whole year in the summer months. None of the surveyors in this Territory, whichever class they belong to, have ever made more than a living.

All the best and most level parts of the country have been surveyed; what remains are in Eastern Montana, the lands along the Missouri, Lower Musselshell, and Lower Yellowstone Rivers, with the country back of them. On the rivers there are small bottoms, with perpendicular bluffs from two to three hundred feet high between them. Back of these is generally a high rolling table-land, intersected by small streams and deep ravines, called coulées, which frequently extend back for miles, and from one to two hundred feet deep, and often very rocky, and, as I know from experience, make the worst ground to survey of any other. Besides this are the Judith, Snowy, Belt, and Highwood ranges, which are all very rugged. All these should be surveyed, as along the streams are bottoms suitable for farming, cattle and sheep ranches, while the uplands will be taken up as desert lands and cultivated, while all of the country is suitable for grazing, and much of the mountainous ground is covered with fine timber. This part of the Territory is now settling up rapidly.

In Western Montana the surveys would lie principally along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in the valleys of the Hellgate, Missoula, and Clarke's Fork Rivers. These are large streams, running in many places through cañons with but few bottoms of any size, and bordered by rough and jagged mountains, covered with a dense growth of pine timber, much of which is of fine quality and very valuable. There are settlements and towns on the Hellgate and Missoula, and but few as yet on Clarke's Fork. It is well known that valuable minerals exist in the mountains on either side of these streams. All of this country has to be surveyed at some time, so that both the Government and the railroad can sell their lands, both timber and agricultural, the profits of which will otherwise be lost to the Government.

This description of the country is drawn in great measure from personal observation, and it is not exaggerated. For what remains to be surveyed the present rates per mile are wretchedly inadequate. The old rates which existed previous to last year should be restored, and would be none too large. Even those for such timbered mountains as are around Clarke's Fork would be inadequate, and I would suggest that a new classification, "mountainous and heavily timbered land," be introduced, to be paid $15 for section lines, and others in proportion. This is none too much for such work. It must be remembered that the surveyor has to blaze every tree on or near his line, cut his way through brush, put four bearing trees to every section and two to every quarter corner, and travel over deep ravines and rough rocks, and he is a lucky man if he can make an average of four miles a day over such ground. Moreover, as I have said before, he has in this climate in five months to make his living for the year.

With the disastrous experience of last year, should the same rates continue, I doubt whether contracts can be let for the ensuing season.

I am, with much respect, your obedient servant,

WALTER W. DE LACY,
United States Deputy Mineral Surveyor.

Hon. MARTIN MAGINNIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the provision which it is proposed to amend. This is an appropriation of $400,000 for surveying the public lands:

At rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township and $5 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines.

I think I may be permitted to say a word on this, having been a practical surveyor for a number of years where the law allowed $3 a mile for running out lines, and it was through a very hard country to run them; large contracts were not made, and it was a paying business at $3 a mile, when proper economy was exercised by those engaged in it. Making allowance for going to the frontier, where, however, living is but little higher, if any, and labor little higher than near the principal settlements, that at least is counterbalanced by the fact that these surveyors when they take contracts take a region altogether to survey. It is a business with them; and a man who can not take a contract and make money under this bill ought to retire from the service. If he wants more he simply wants to billet himself on the Government for an enormous job. The amendment ought not to be allowed, in my judgment. The pay it seems to me is ample, unless we assume in this as in most other things that when a man is being paid by the Government he must be paid several times the value of his work—that in this case he can play the gentleman, sit in his quarters, send out others to do the work for him, and then pocket a large profit for sitting in his tent or hunting with his gun.

I hope the amendment and all amendments in the same direction will be defeated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to strike out the last word. The committee will bear witness that so far as any question of appropriations for the West, and especially for the frontiers, is concerned, I have always been in favor of those that are most liberal. I believe in liberal appropriations looking to the proper development of that great area of country.

I am frank to say, however, that in my judgment it is not wise to increase the price to be paid for these surveys. I believe the abuses and frauds in connection with making the surveys of this country have grown up more from the fact that we pay too large an amount for the work than from any other cause. I believe that by the rates fixed in this bill we will be more likely to obtain honest work than by increasing them.

Originally, when the surveys were first being made, work was done legitimately by deputy surveyors at a fair and reasonable compensation. But the profits of this work became so large that organizations were formed in the country for doing it, and from that fact the abuses under the survey-deposit system grew up.

Now, I believe it is a wise policy to hold these prices down to just and fair compensation to the man who does the work, and not open the door for organizations and frauds and abuses. I therefore do not believe it wise to raise these rates.

If it could be done in an exceptional case, in the case of Washington and Oregon, for instance, where the conditions are different, I should have been very glad to have seen it done. But to open the door for fraud throughout the whole country by increasing these rates I think would be very unwise and very improper.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to say a word. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has spoken of the surplus of surveyed lands in Washington, Oregon, and Nevada that are yet unoccupied. Such is the case all over the country. In the older States there are vast tracts of land which have been surveyed but not yet settled, and probably will not be settled, some of them, for the next hundred years.

But there are great tracts of land all over the West upon which settlers are now living, which lands are still unsurveyed. If the provisions of this bill remain unaltered and surveys have to be made at the rates here proposed those lands will probably not be surveyed for years. The whole appropriation will be used in the survey of other lands, while lands upon which the settlers desire to make their homes will not be and can not be surveyed at the rates here proposed.

I would not pay a dollar or a cent more for the survey of our public lands than is absolutely necessary; I would have the work done as cheaply as possible. But if you retain the rates proposed in this bill, without any discretion to the Commissioner of the Land Office to allow greater rates, we will not be able to get any surveys of our agricultural lands in those sections.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CASSIDY; and upon a division, there were—ayes 29, noes 34.

Mr. CASSIDY. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are called for.

Mr. BRENTS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. That point is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was accordingly not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out these words:

And of the sum hereby appropriated $60,000 shall be expended for surveys in the Territory of Dakota.

This bill proposes to appropriate the sum of $400,000 for surveys. I do not understand why of that sum $60,000 should be set apart for surveys in any one particular Territory. If you were to appropriate that much for each of the eight Territories it would require more than is given by this bill.

I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] what is the reason for assigning $60,000 of this sum for one particular Territory? Why not leave the matter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the authority which controls him, to expend this money where the settlement of the country and the necessity for surveys shall be apparent? Why place this limitation upon the discretion of the Department of the Government having control of this subject?

It is fairly to be presumed that the Interior Department will see that the public lands are surveyed wherever the wants of the country call for surveys. If there is any reason for this discrimination it does not appear upon the bill, and it would seem to be a violation of proper principles and an abridgment of the power of the Department of the Government to exercise its judgment.

I take it that many members on this floor can not be so well informed in relation to the necessity for these surveys as are the proper executive officers of the Government. Those coming from particular Territories or from the land States may know the condition of their several States and Territories; but as to the great body of members of this House, they can not know the necessities of the case.

It seems to me to be unwise, not to say unjust, to take $60,000 of this $400,000 and apply it to one particular Territory. If the public needs shall require it, the Interior Department will cause that or a greater sum to be expended in any one Territory. It seems to me the limitation is improper, and I would say it is unjust and unnecessary, as taking away the proper discretion of the Executive Department having charge of this subject, to have these surveys made where they are most needed.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has offered the amendment which I myself desired to offer. I do not believe that this Committee of the Whole ought to appropriate an amount in bulk for the surveys of the public lands of the United States and then make an exception by making a specific appropriation for any particular State or Territory.

If this money is to be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as has been the practice in the past, then he should be allowed to distribute it all. Or if Congress should see proper to apportion it, as has been done many times since I have been in Congress, then it should apportion it to those States and Territories where there are unsurveyed lands.

I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas striking out this exception will be agreed to. I would like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why an exception is proposed in this particular case. It is true that Dakota is being rapidly settled; but the case is the same with California, Oregon, and Washington Territory. Within the next three years Washington Territory will have as large an immigration proportionately as the Territory of Dakota. Some of the finest lands in America are in Washington Territory, and there is now a large immigration into that Territory. In my judgment it is wrong to apportion to one State or Territory a fixed amount, while the remainder of the sum is left in bulk to be distributed according to the discretion of the Land Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the reason of the Committee on Appropriations for adopting this provision was their belief that the needs of immigration called for the expenditure of more money in Dakota than in some others of the Territories or States. Take, for instance, the State of California; 35,000,000 acres of land have been surveyed there.

Mr. PAGE. That statement certainly is calculated to mislead, from the fact that as to millions of acres township lines have been run where perhaps settlement will never go; for instance, in the heights of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. There are parts of that State already surveyed to which, until there is water for irrigation, settlement will never go.

Mr. HISCOCK. The suggestion of the gentleman bears upon the policy of the committee in limiting the expenditures for surveys to arable and farming lands rather than mountainous regions.

I was remarking that in California there are 35,000,000 acres of surveyed lands undisposed of, and in Colorado 40,000,000 acres; while in Dakota, this large Territory about which so much has been said, there are only 9,000,000 acres undisposed of. I call the attention of the gentleman to this fact.

Mr. REAGAN. I inquire whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office can not in his discretion expend this money for surveys where he may deem the expenditure most necessary?

Mr. HISCOCK. He can. But it seemed to us that the needs of immigration demanded the expenditure of more money in Dakota than in other Territories or States.

Mr. PAGE. Washington Territory, according to the gentleman's own statement, has only 8,000,000 acres undisposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. I concede it; but there is not such a tide of immigration to that Territory as to Dakota.

Mr. BRENTS. There will be in a year or two.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose there may be in a year or two. Nevada is not increasing very rapidly in population. There are 18,000,000 acres of surveyed lands there undisposed of; only 4,000,000 acres of all that have been surveyed have been sold.

Now, I concede—and on this point I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]—that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has power to distribute this money in his discretion, and will very probably do it in a just way; but last year, in submitting with his estimates his divisions of lands in these States and Territories, he said that if we gave him $400,000 for this purpose he would expend $45,000 of the appropriation in Dakota. For some reason—I have no doubt a good one—he reduced the amount to $40,000. We made our appropriation upon the basis which he submitted to us—$45,000; and he said that was right. We thought it would not be unwise to relieve the Commissioner of the General Land Office from the pressure that is being brought to bear upon him in regard to the distribution of this money, and that if the needs of immigration in Dakota require this amount, it should be given.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Why did not the committee follow in regard to Dakota the same practice which has been adopted in reference to the other States and Territories?

Mr. HISCOCK. Because it seemed to us that immigration was tending especially in that direction.

Mr. BRENTS. As soon as the Northern Pacific Railroad is completed the tide of immigration will pour into Washington Territory.

Mr. HISCOCK. When the Northern Pacific Railroad is completed we will make similar provision for Washington Territory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. Chairman, last year there were disposed of in the United States 13,998,000 acres in round numbers of public lands. One-third of this quantity, 4,360,000 acres, were disposed of in the Territory of Dakota. Congress appropriated last year $400,000 for the survey of public lands; and of this amount Dakota received $40,000, only one-tenth of the appropriation. There are in Dakota to-day 10,000 people living upon unsurveyed lands unable to acquire titles to their lands, because a sufficient amount has not been allotted to that Territory for making surveys. It seems to me that Dakota ought to have for this purpose not only $60,000 but $1,000,000 or more. One-third of the entire appropriation would not be more than is justly demanded.

We have found that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, surrounded and pressed on every side, has been unable to do justice to Dakota. Last year he allotted only $30,000, and by the most strenuous effort on our part and on the part of those whom we solicited to assist us, we succeeded in getting it raised to $40,000, and that was every dollar we could get. Why? Because States which have Representatives who vote appropriations in this House and Senators in the other Chamber had more influence than the Territory of Dakota, with no voice in the other House and no vote here. For that reason the Committee on Appropriations determined to make this allotment to Dakota, and now instead of striking it out, this House ought to increase the amount to the extent of one-third the appropriation.

I am satisfied this year 100,000 people will go to the Territory of Dakota, and I know equally well if this amount is not allotted to that Territory we will not receive anywhere near sufficient to survey the lands which will be occupied by actual settlers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I concur fully in all that has been said by the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. In my judgment there ought to be $100,000 appropriated for the survey of Dakota. But I wish to call the attention of the Chair and of the House to this fact: Formerly it was the practice of this House to vote separate appropriations for the survey of the several States and Territories, and not an amount in gross, leaving the discretion to the officers in the General Land Office to make allotment as to them seemed best. When the Committee on Appropriations under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] changed the old practice from separate appropriations to the several States and Territories to an appropriation in bulk as it is in this bill, I then made the remark which the gentleman from Dakota has just repeated, that we would not get a fair share of the appropriation when it came to be divided. I begged the House at that time to maintain its old practice, and consider the necessity as to each State and Territory, to make itself appropriations in detail.

I am not opposed to my friend from Dakota having the appropriation which is provided. Indeed I think he should have a larger appropriation; but I do object to this discrimination made by the committee in favor of one Territory and against all the other States and Territories. If the practice of the House is to be abandoned and we are to go back to the old practice, then the Committee on Appropriations ought to have made the proper allotment to each one of these States and Territories.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say a single word. This is to a certain extent in the line of the policy of making detailed appropriations to these States and Territories. If the attention of the committee had been called in time to this point, I have no doubt it would have reported separate items, as in the case of Dakota; but separate estimates were not submitted to us, and there was not sufficient time on the part of the committee to make full inquiry touching each State and Territory. We did see, however, from the examination we made that Dakota furnished one-third of the lands sold last year, and concluded it was only just and proper that one-seventh should be allotted to that Territory. As I have said, it is in the line of making separate appropriations, as suggested by the gentleman from Montana, to these several States and Territories.

The question recurred on Mr. REAGAN'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. I have an amendment to offer, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1341 insert the following:

"Or where, for any cause not provided by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid he may allow a sum not exceeding $12 per linear mile for standard lines, $10 for township lines, and $6 for section lines."

Mr. GEORGE. This is $1 less than was proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory.

Mr. RYAN. That ought to be adopted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 17.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GEORGE and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out $400,000 wherever it occurs and insert $300,000. I understand the original proposition is still pending, and I move my amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The original paragraph is still pending, and the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is entertained thereto.

Mr. HOLMAN was recognized.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to ask him a question it may enable us to proceed a little more expeditiously with the bill. Did the gentleman from Indiana intend to address himself to the repeal of the pre-emption laws?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; to another part of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not know but the gentleman had intended to refer to that part of the bill, and if so it would probably be more appropriate at another point for him to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to occupy a few minutes upon the pending proposition.

There are, Mr. Chairman, some facts that should arrest the careful attention of this country: first, the rapid disposition being made of the public lands which are adapted to agricultural purposes; and, secondly, the great forces which are now at work throughout the country seeking to accelerate the disposition of these lands. First, there is a large body of men, yearly growing larger as wealth increases, who are seeking to speculate in the public domain, and in their interest the means of reaching the public lands are everlastingly sought to be enlarged.

In vain you have in the sections of the West and Northwest which mostly attract emigration limited the disposal of the public lands to the homestead, pre-emption, and forest-culture laws, for these laws, wise in their purpose, are being forced to gratify the cupidity of the land monopolist. Even the commutation feature of the homestead law is being used to build up great landed estates in the West. As the public lands are diminished the motive to monopolize them is increased.

The strong speculative motives operating at this time have produced and are producing unexampled efforts to secure large surveys of the public lands. In the work of exhausting the public domain the land-grant railroads are powerful auxiliaries.

The land speculators and land-grant railroad companies have a common interest. These corporations which have hitherto received immense grants through Congressional action to more effectually avail themselves of the benefits of those grants seek to enlarge the surveys; and under these influences and with perfect integrity of purpose I have no doubt the Committee on Appropriations was induced at the last session of Congress to increase the appropriations covered by this paragraph of the pending bill from $300,000, which was the amount before that time appropriated, up to $400,000, the amount contemplated also by the present bill.

Notwithstanding the fact that under the system of advancing money by parties interested in securing surveys on account of the profitableness of that business and also for the purpose of speculation, large sums had been supplied in addition to our appropriations to facilitate the surveys, and millions of dollars have gone into the offices of the surveyors-general to hasten those surveys, and yet the appropriations out of the public Treasury are increased annually $100,000. We seem to go upon the theory that the sooner these public lands are surveyed and disposed of the better; and so under this pressure 14,309,166 acres were disposed of last year, a territory equal to half the area of a great State.

But my object in seeking the floor at this time was to give as much publicity as I can to the fact that notwithstanding the rapid exhaustion of the public lands rendering due consideration of the subject the more imperative, Congress has repeatedly been urged by the gentleman at the head of the Interior Department to take action on the subject of the lands heretofore granted to railroad corporations and which have been forfeited by these corporations, yet Congress refuses to take one step in that direction; and the only affirmative report made by any committee during this entire term to Congress in reference to this matter (although near 100,000,000 acres of the public lands covered by these grants have been clearly and unquestionably forfeited by reason of their failure to comply with the condition of the grants) is one which in effect, though not in terms, confirms a grant which expired years and years ago, some twenty years before the organization of the corporation now seeking to obtain the benefit of the grant, and that report was rejected by the House, and this is the only result of an entire Congress on this vital question.

The conditions of these grants, and conditions on which alone these lands could have been secured to the corporations, and which were not performed, was that the lands should revert back to the public domain unless the railroads should be completed within a specified period. With the public lands rapidly passing from beyond the control of this people near 100,000,000 of acres are being left in a condition where a decision of the law officers of the Government may secure them for the benefit of these corporations which long since have forfeited all right to them, the most grasping, heartless corporations that ever oppressed mankind. And yet, sir, we come to the very edge of this Congress with nothing done to secure the rights of this Government in reference to these forfeited grants, and that too notwithstanding the fact that vigorous efforts have been made under the rules of this House from the beginning of the term to bring the matter before Congress for consideration, and not a minute's time has been given to the consideration of a matter involving such vital consequences to this people.

Every gentleman who has ever examined the subject knows well that inside of twenty years' time scarcely an acre of this land adapted to agricultural purposes will remain for the landless people of this country. Then, but not till then, the real perils that endanger a republican form of government are to begin with us; and yet we seek year after year to exhaust the public domain, as if unconscious that we but hasten on that period which is to test the permanency of our free institutions. For, Mr. Chairman, when we shall have exhausted this public domain; when we shall no longer have an outlet for overcrowded labor, struggling in vain for relief; when there are no more homes to offer to strong hearts and willing hands, then and not till then will we have reached the period when the real strength of our system of government is to be tried. I for one will not hasten that period, and I for one will seek to give strength to our free institutions by enlarging to the furthest possible extent the ownership of the freeholds and homes of our country by its people.

For one, sir, I believe, instead of this extraordinary effort which is being made in the Territories and the new States to exhaust the public domain, and which Congress so willingly yields to, the true policy of this Government should be now more than ever to husband that most valuable of all our wealth, that wealth which can secure homes to the people, the wealth which can identify and which can alone identify every citizen with the permanent interests of his country. That much, in my judgment, it is our duty here to do, a duty which we owe to the future more than to the present.

I have said, sir, that my purpose was if possible to arrest the attention of the country to the fact that Congress remains passive with near 100,000,000 acres of land rightfully belonging to the people of this country in a condition that it may by crafty entanglements of law be craftily framed in the interests of grasping and remorseless corporate monopolists, yet Congress remains passive and refuses to assert the rights of Government and people after being called upon year after year by faithful public officers to act, and informed of the imperative necessity for action.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last annual report points out the necessity for Congressional action:

> The status of various grants for railroad purposes where the roads have not been constructed within the time prescribed by law was reported to Congress on March 28 last. The absence of legislative action touching the renewal of these grants, or declaring the forfeiture thereof, seriously embarrasses the work of this office. It is not deemed expedient to certify additional lands to the railroad companies, nor to award to the companies lands in dispute between them and settlers or other claimants, pending the determination of Congress in the premises. Large numbers of settlers are occupying such lands, and it is important to them to know whether they can receive their titles from the United States or whether they will be required to purchase from the railroad companies. The prevailing uncertainty necessarily retards improvements and impairs values.
> New applications are also constantly being made to enter the withdrawn lands under the public land laws.
> I deem it of pressing importance to the public interests that Congress should take early action in respect to these grants.

And the Secretary of the Interior in his last annual report to Congress urges the subject upon Congress in a vigorous statement of the necessity for action:

> Congress has from time to time, commencing in 1850, made grants to the several States or to corporations to aid in the construction of railroads. In some instances the roads have been constructed and in others partially completed; but in some cases no attempt has been made to build the roads and thus secure a title to the land. The lands thus granted have been withheld from the operation of the settlement laws. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared, in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 22 Wallace, 44, that a failure to complete the road within the time fixed in the grant did not forfeit the grant. Lands thus withheld from the operation of the settlement laws must so remain until Congress shall declare such lands forfeited.
> If it is the intention of Congress to allow the railroad companies to complete their roads after the expiration of the term fixed in the grant, and thus claim the benefit of the grant, it should be so declared at an early day. Large tracts of land are not available for settlement because the settler can not determine whether the title is in the Government or in the railroad company. If he purchase from the railroad company and it fails to complete its road and secure the title he takes nothing by such purchase, and he can not secure the land under the settlement laws, for the Department is not authorized to treat such lands as public land. Besides this, the even sections within the limits of the grants are subject to cash entry at not less than $2.50 per acre. Thus the settler is sometimes compelled to pay a double price for the privilege of owning lands near a railroad which is never constructed.
> Doubtless in some cases, the companies having in good faith attempted to build within the time fixed, a forfeiture would be a great hardship, and might be unjust, but in every case where no effort was made to construct any portion of the road until the expiration of the time fixed, the grant ought to be declared forfeited and the land so withheld from the operation of the settlement laws declared public land.

Yet with these great interests at stake this Congress has deliberately refused to act. The Secretary of the Interior, as becomes the head of a great Department, is moderate and forbearing. In my judgment a just regard for the rights of the people demand that every acre of the forfeited land should be restored to the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 53.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think upon a question like this that we should have a reasonably fair approach to a quorum. I am only asking to restore this appropriation to what it was in years past.

Mr. HISCOCK. Right here I desire to say to the gentleman from Indiana that the amount expended for surveys was decreased more than $100,000 by the reduction of rates which were put upon the last bill, and which are in this.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend knows that for the first time in years this appropriation at the last session of Congress was increased to $400,000. It has always been $300,000 heretofore.

Mr. HISCOCK. The appropriations for this purpose have been $300,000, with the power to use certificates which were given on the depositions of pre-emption, assignable to be used all over the country, which largely increase the expenses of the surveys beyond what the bill carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, as the committee is dividing. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 47, noes 64.

So (there being no further count called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 1361 to 1364, as follows:

> For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at a rate not exceeding $13 dollars per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

Mr. DWIGHT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In line 1361 strike out the words "preliminary survey of unconfirmed and."

Mr. DWIGHT. I understand the policy of the Government up to within a very few years has been never to survey unconfirmed land claims. But five or six years ago a provision was enacted upon a sundry civil bill whereby authority was given to survey unconfirmed as well as confirmed land claims.

I have looked into one case in connection with this. Some ten years ago there was in New Mexico a claim made that covered one square league, which amounted to 4,438 acres. Since then it has run up. There have been different claims made for the same lands precisely. The second claim was for 9,978 acres. And this [holding it up] was the map on which that claim was predicated. The third claim was for 17,754 acres. The fourth was for 71,018 acres. And to-day there is a bill pending before this Congress which proposes to confirm the title for these same lands for 243,000 acres under a survey that was authorized by such a provision as this in a sundry civil act. A preliminary survey has been made and as gentlemen will see by looking at it it covers 243,000 acres; the same land precisely, as will be seen by examination of the original map, upon which the claim was based and the map and survey made by such an appropriation as is proposed by the provisions of this bill, which I ask the committee to strike out.

Gentlemen are invited to examine both maps and judge whether they are willing to vote money out of the Treasury to continue this needless and unwise departure from the older and safer policy of not surveying unconfirmed lands.

The result of such legislation as is now urged has resulted in one case, as I have stated, and there are many others of the same character.

When these lands were originally granted by the Mexican Government the country was poor and the people were all poor, and there was but little land desired and but little granted. But now the time has come when these large grants pay everybody that holds them better profits than almost any other investments in the country. And now you propose to provide for these preliminary surveys. And what will be the result? Somebody who has bought somebody else out, somebody who has assumed to get a title, goes to the surveyor-general of the Territory. The surveyor-general knows nothing about it, but delegates one of his deputies. The deputy goes and the parties are on the ground who are interested in extending these lines and increasing these large grants for the purpose of making cattle ranches.

And I understand to-day the man who is making the claim I have referred to and has a bill before this Congress for the purpose of confirming the title to what was originally one square league of land and which has run up to 243,000 acres, has a large cattle ranch and desires these lands in order to use them for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. The object in making appropriations for the survey of these unconfirmed land grants ought to be obvious to the members of this House. Thirty years ago and more I went to California to live and to make there my home. I found there every acre of arable land in that State was claimed under a Mexican grant. People were settling in that State, and every homestead and pre-emption settler did not know but the land he was on was claimed to be a Spanish grant. It retarded settlement in California. It has retarded the settlement of every State and Territory in the Union where these Spanish grants exist. And until the lands are surveyed by the Government, until the boundaries of these grants are ascertained, these cormorants who hold or pretend to hold title to large amounts of Spanish lands will claim the whole Territory of New Mexico as they claimed at one time the whole State of California.

This is the only protection you have for actual, bona fide settlers. Let the Government make this survey. Let it set apart the lands that belonged to the Spanish grants and are covered by them, and let the boundaries be fixed by the Government, beyond which the lands shall be open to actual settlement.

There are gentlemen on the floor of this House who know well the truth of what I say. My friend and colleague from the San Francisco district, who was there at an early day, knows these lands were sought to be claimed by owners of these Spanish grants who would have gobbled up the entire arable lands of the State. And until you make the boundaries, until the Government has made the survey of these lands or orders it to be made, the whole country will be at the mercy of those people, and no man who enters on these lands will know whether he is making improvements that will not be taken away from him or that will not be claimed by some representative of a Spanish grant. Until that is done he does not know whether he is making an entry on a Spanish grant or on the public domain.

I know my friend from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] does not want this state of affairs to exist. If there can be any reason which can be suggested why these surveys should not be made, if there is any fraud suspected, if anybody is to be injured by the Government making an appropriation for this purpose, let us understand it. But I say from the experience I have had with these lands it is the duty of the Government to survey them at the earliest practicable moment so as to define their boundaries and allow actual settlers to enter on the unoccupied lands of the Government.

These lands were first granted by the Mexican Government to citizens of Mexico, and we were bound to respect those grants when we acquired the country. A grant would be made for, say, five leagues, and then the party would claim ten or fifteen leagues. In that way they absorbed all the arable lands of the State of California as they are now absorbing those of the Territory of New Mexico.

I say that we should make surveys of these lands and establish boundary lines between the lands belonging to the Government and those covered by these Spanish grants.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] has made a very strong argument, it seems to me, in favor of a bill establishing a court and requiring Mexican land-grant claimants to go into that court to establish their claims, and providing that lands shall be surveyed by order of the court, by a United States surveyor, so that the Government may know what lands in the Territories belong to it and what belong to the land-grant claimants. The proposition now in this bill, however, to make an appropriation to survey unconfirmed land grants is certainly not in the direction of the argument of the gentleman.

Propositions have been pending before Congress for years looking to the settlement of these land-grant questions, which I admit are a blight upon the Western Territories and will continue to be a blight until they are finally settled. But it seems for some reason or other that these questions can not be brought forward, can not be acted upon here.

Although the Government of the United States in its treaty with Mexico promised that it would settle these land-grant questions, for thirty years they have been outstanding, and for more than twenty years, I believe, or nearly twenty years, there has been not more than one or two cases where a land grant has been confirmed.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not important that these grants shall be surveyed before they can be confirmed by the Government?

Mr. CONVERSE. If surveyed they should be surveyed in pursuance of some authority of the Government. This bill merely appropriates money out of the Treasury to enable private persons to have their lands surveyed, whether they have any claim or not. It is simply in the direction of aiding them to manufacture claims which may be brought forward at some future time, and which may be ripened into more perfect claims.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Will the gentleman permit me to state a fact in this connection?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly; I would be very glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Under the act of Congress of July 23, 1866, it was made the duty of the United States surveyor-general of California to survey and segregate from the public lands any and all ranches deriving title from Mexican grants, which ten months after the passage of that act had not been segregated by application from the owners thereof.

The following is the section of the act which prescribes this duty, namely:

SEC. 8. That in all cases where a claim to lands, by virtue of a right or title derived from Spanish or Mexican authorities, has been finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not have been requested within ten months from the passage of this act, as provided by sections 6 and 7 of the act of July 1, 1864, "to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," and in all cases where a like claim shall hereafter be confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not be requested as provided by said sections within ten months after the passage of this act, or any final confirmation hereafter made, it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general of the United States for California, as soon as practicable after the expiration of ten months from the passage of this act, or such final confirmation hereafter made, to cause the lines of the public surveys to be extended over such lands; and he shall set off, in full satisfaction of such grant, and according to the lines of the public surveys, the quantity of land confirmed in such final decree, and as near as can be done in accordance with such decree; and all the land not included in such grant, as so set off, shall be subject to the general land laws of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed so as in any manner to interfere with the right of bona fide pre-emption claimants. (United States Statutes at Large, volume 14, 1865–'67, Chapter CCXIX, page 220.)

But in California there never has been an adequate fund to enable the surveyor-general of that State to carry out the requirements of that act; and so it has come to pass that only those persons owning Mexican land grants who chose to ask for the survey and to furnish the funds to pay for the surveys have had their grants segregated from the public domain.

I have had many conferences on this subject with the United States surveyor-general for California, Nevada, and Arizona. The invariable complaint in all cases was that he had not had the funds to comply with the requirements of this act with regard to those ranches which, after the expiration of ten months from the passage thereof, were required to be segregated by the surveyor-general from the public lands.

It is therefore clear that for California at least there is plain and ample statutory provision for the survey of all lands having title from Mexican grants.

It is my testimony to this committee that the failure to make the separation of these from other lands for fifteen years past has been due to the failure of Congress to provide money to pay the necessary expenses of the work.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman is mistaken. There was a law applicable to California which settled these questions of title under form of law. If surveys failed to be made under that law, then provision ought to be made for them. But the provision in this bill is not in that direction, and I think the amendment should prevail.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state for the benefit of the Committee of the Whole what little I think I know upon this subject. Since I have been in Congress each annual appropriation bill has carried for the survey of private lands in New Mexico the same amount, I think, which is carried in this bill, and a like amount has been carried for the Territory of Arizona.

I do not now recall a case in which one of these private land claims has been adjudicated, passed upon, and confirmed by Congress. If there is one or has been one, I hope some gentleman who knows that fact will call my attention to it.

We put these items in this bill because it seemed to us that if Congress was to be the judicial forum where these private land claims were to be settled, it was but proper that we should furnish Congress with the necessary evidence to act upon the subject. And I will say in this connection that it has seemed to me that enough has been appropriated during the last five or six years to pile up an immense amount of business for Congress to do in this direction.

From my experience, and from the experience which we have all had in the past, it would seem that Congress would never confirm one of these private land claims, and for the reason stated by my colleague from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] whenever one of these claims is brought here for confirmation, it turns out that there has been something in connection with the surveys which is suggestive of fraud. When we go through the papers it would seem as if the agent of the Government, the person selected by the Government, instead of surveying honestly had attempted to fabricate a case for the claimant.

This is what I think I know in reference to these cases; yet if Congress is to adjudicate upon these claims, it is necessary that we should have these lands surveyed. There is no doubt about that.

If we are to retain in the hands of Congress the power to confirm or not confirm these titles, we must have surveys before us to be used in considering the question before we enter judgment of confirmation. And I do not know that we can strike down these appropriations, because it turns out that in some cases our officers are dishonest—perhaps I ought not to use so harsh a word in connection with them; but it is true that their surveys have defeated the confirmations of all private land claims, certainly for the last six years.

Now, I do not know what to do, the committee did not know what to do in this connection. I believe for one that some forum should be provided as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE]. I believe there should be some court into which these parties might go and have these claims settled. I do not believe that these claims will ever be confirmed by act of Congress, because in the majority of instances the same kind of facts which my colleague has brought to light here will be presented. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned it is a matter of entire indifference to me whether these items be voted in or voted out.

Mr. CONVERSE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, under the treaty of Gaudalupe Hidalgo of 1848 and subsequent legislation this question with reference to titles originating under Mexican grant has been frequently dealt with. I am not able now (because I have not recently had my attention called to the subject) to give precise information as to the action which has been taken. In the portion of country acquired from Spanish America there has been a great deal of difficulty about these large land grants. Perhaps no subject has been more fruitful of stupendous frauds than land titles in Florida, in the Louisiana Territory, in Texas, and in the territory acquired from Mexico under the treaty of 1848. This is so well known to men who have been much in the courts of the country that it is proper Congress should be cautious in any action it may take.

If there is any title which is authorized to be perfected under this treaty it must have its descriptive boundaries; it must have its legitimate foundation in the laws under which it originated. It can not be that any person has any claim to confirmation unless his title has descriptive boundaries. If so, it has the basis for coming before Congress or the courts to secure confirmation. If it has no such thing—if it is a vague claim to something undefined—I submit that it would be improper for Congress to enable some claimant, under some sort of ill-defined pretense of a right to land, to have a survey unauthorized by law. Why should persons claiming immense land grants as their private property be placed in a higher position than the settler with his one hundred and sixty or three hundred and twenty acres? When the settler is obliged to litigate the Government does not survey his land for him, but he must employ his surveyor or a survey must be made by order of the court to ascertain the boundaries and the description of his land. Why should a different rule prevail where these large grants of many leagues are concerned? If any one has a title recognized under the treaty of 1848 or under any law of Congress, he knows that he can maintain his action in the courts of the country, and if (as often happens in litigation) a survey is necessary for the more precise determination of the boundaries, he can do as others do—he can ask an order of the court for a survey which shall settle disputed questions which can not be settled without a survey.

I can not but believe that the suggestion made a while ago by the gentleman from Ohio is true; that the object is to enable men to get a descriptive survey with precise boundaries in order to give them a foothold in the courts of the country to which they are not now entitled, and enable them to absorb large bodies of the public land. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McLEAN, of Missouri. Where these Mexican grants are in question the necessity of having the land surveyed is often very great. I know of one instance where the boundary of a grant is defined as the side of a certain mountain, extending from a certain ranch to another ranch. Since the miners have come in a large gold-mine has been found on the other side of the mountain, and now the owners of that grant undertake to extend it to that side. It is necessary to have a survey of the land in such cases in order to determine just what the grant is and what it is not. If the United States survey should give wrong boundaries, then a resort to the courts, as the gentleman from Texas suggests, would be very proper. But the necessity for surveys in these cases is very apparent.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DWIGHT. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the present Commissioner of the Land Office in his last annual report makes the extraordinary statement that down to his advent the Land Office held that it had no power to call on the surveyor-general to send up the original surveys upon which these claims are supposed to be based.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, this is a one-sided ex parte transaction from beginning to end. As I showed in the statement I have made, the claim for this particular piece of land swelled from 4,438 acres to 243,000 acres. What would be the effect if you had a title to a piece of land that I claimed? Would you make a survey to accommodate me or would I be required to make my own survey and make my claim against you? You might then resurvey your land, and we might test in the courts as to whose survey was right and whose was wrong. If I establish my survey as the true one and the better one, then of course the courts would grant me the land. But how is it with these men? They start out with a claim for 4,438 acres and run it along until they get it up to hundreds of thousands of acres, and when the land becomes valuable and is in demand they come here and ask you to establish their claims, when even the surveyor-general is not required to send up the original maps or the papers on which the claim is founded.

There is a bill pending in the Senate to cover just such a case as this. It is such a bill as we ought to enact. It is a measure which will carry these cases to the proper tribunal. Then, when a claim is made, the claimant must go before the court. If he is successful, of course his claim will be granted. Otherwise it should not and will not be. The rights of the Government should be asserted, and somebody provided to represent it. Both sides should be heard, and not, as now, the whole thing made ex parte on the part of interested parties.

These claims have extended, as my friend from Missouri has said, from one hill to another. It has been done in this case, and this is only one of those in the Land Office to-day. I have discovered this one, but there are others. I believe the whole thing is an outrage on the public domain. Claims are being made for confirmation here and will continue to be when the House is unguarded and not conscious of what is done. Thus large claims will be granted and hundreds of thousands, yes millions of dollars will be squandered by this loose, wild, and reckless legislation which ought to be saved to the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am sure the Committee did not understand the question was being put a while ago on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT.] Nobody around me understood it. Therefore, for the purpose of presenting the question again, I move to strike out the words "preliminary survey of unconfirmed and."

The CHAIRMAN. That was the pending motion.

Mr. CONVERSE. I understood the motion was to strike out the entire clause.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope by unanimous consent the vote may be taken over again. That will be the shortest way.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let the section be read as it will stand in case the amendment prevails.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as requested.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the question might be taken on the motion to strike out those two clauses. That presents the whole question and disposes of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs, Shall the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] prevail?

Mr. DWIGHT'S motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the motion be put to the House to strike out the two clauses.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean the entire paragraph?

Mr. HISCOCK. From lines 1361 to 1368.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraphs as they stand in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claimes in Arizona, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask whether it is not a fact there are no confirmed surveys?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know whether there are or not.

Mr. CONVERSE. None made for the last twenty years.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the motion to strike out?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not, but I think that is the proper motion.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be entertained unless made.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the motion.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard a moment on the motion to strike out. I do not think that the committee understands either the nature of the law covering private land claims in the territory of New Mexico, or the real merits of the pending question. There can be no doubt that the House desires to carry out in good faith the stipulations of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo concerning the rights of those citizens whose allegiance by the triumph of American arms was transferred to our Government and whose property interests we solemnly covenanted to protect and secure by the terms of that treaty.

Marvelous as it may seem, Mr. Chairman, this Congress seems to have lost sight of the great fact that in 1854 a former Congress enacted a law which prescribed the exact mode in which these titles were to be tested and confirmed, and by which the provisions of the treaty as to land titles resting thereunder should be carried into effect. And yet we are proceeding here, if this motion prevails, precisely as though we had no such law on the statute-books, as if no such law had ever been enacted or rule of action prescribed for the enforcement of the treaty, and as I believe in direct violation of the letter and the spirit of the treaty, the law of 1854, and the instructions given by the Department of the Interior to the surveyor-general of New Mexico pursuant to that law and to give it effect.

By law the surveyor-general is required to examine the title to the grant and report his findings both of law and fact to the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn reports the same to Congress for its consideration and action thereon; and here, and here only, can the claimant find a court that can confirm and settle his rights as the law now stands. And yet here are distinguished men of this Congress of the American people in their places upon this floor telling us that we may go into the courts of the Territories and get a title to these unconfirmed land grants, or that we may in the courts obtain orders for a survey of the same at our will and at our convenience. We have denied to the courts by this very law of Congress all such power, and made Congress the only court having jurisdiction of the subject.

Why can not we ascertain, as becomes members of Congress charged with the responsibility, being as we are the law-making power of this great country, our duties and the duty of this Government toward the parties owning these claims? We ought to discharge the solemn duty. Why, it is said if you survey the unconfirmed grants the Government must pay the expense. Mr. Chairman, if they are a part of the public domain, then it should pay the expense; but we have a law which in express terms requires the owner of the grants to pay every dollar of that expense if his title is confirmed thereto. Here are maps and diagrams of a preliminary survey, brought in here by the gentleman from New York to show the frauds which he claims has occurred under this class of grants.

What is the modus operandi? There is the surveyor-general, there is that Department of the Interior having control of these surveys, and every one of these questions are submitted to them, examined, reviewed, and understood, until if there is any tribunal on earth that can judge whether the survey is correct or not it is that Department. It passes the scrutiny and most rigid examination of the best experts that the Government can employ one after another. And yet in the face and eyes of all that we are asked to assume that these three or four great Departments are either guilty of fraud or that they do not know their business, because somebody here totally ignorant of the true condition and the facts of the case and of all the law governing this subject asks us to do so on a mere whisper perhaps floating in the air of Washington. We have no right to so assume, and there is no ground for so doing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say these preliminary surveys are not binding on any Department of the Government.

We have not a bill on this subject, not a single bill pending before Congress, which does not authorize the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office to make a resurvey to determine whether they conform to the original preliminary surveys and are correct.

I say this Government has never committed a greater outrage. Congress never slept on a right more sacred than that which she gave and now denies to the people of these Territories under the treaties made in 1848.

Mr. Chairman let us go to work and learn the law if we do not know it, and take another day to come and discuss this question in the light of the law made by Congress itself.

Permit me, sir, to cite the following letter from the Commissioner of the Land Office in 1854 to the surveyor-general of New Mexico, full and complete on this subject:

Instructions to the surveyor-general of New Mexico by John Wilson, Commissioner of the Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 21, 1854.

SIR: The eighth section of the act approved 22d July last, for the establishment of the office of surveyor-general in New Mexico, declares as follows:

"SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico; and for this purpose may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises.

"He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the Territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of 1848, denoting the various grades of title, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land. Such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants, and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico; and until the final action of Congress on such claims all lands shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act."

The duty which this enactment devolves upon the surveyor-general is highly important and responsible. He has it in charge to prepare a faithful report of all the land titles in New Mexico which had their origin before the United States succeeded to the sovereignty of the country, and the law contemplates such a report as will enable Congress to make a just and proper discrimination between such as are bona fide and should be confirmed and such as are fraudulent or otherwise destitute of merit, and ought to be rejected.

The treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico (United States Statutes at Large, volume 9, page 922) expressly stipulates in the eighth and ninth articles for the security and protection of private property. The terms there employed in this respect are the same in substance as those used in the treaty of 1803, by which the French Republic ceded the ancient province of Louisiana to the United States, and consequently in the examination of foreign titles in New Mexico you will have the aid of the enlightened decisions and the principles therein developed of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the titles that were based upon the treaty of cession and the laws of Congress upon the subject.

The security to private property for which the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo stipulates is in accordance with the principles of public law as universally acknowledged by civilized nations.

"The people change their allegiance; their relation to their ancient sovereign is dissolved; but their relations to each other, and their rights of property, remain undisturbed." (United States vs. Perchman, 7th Peters's Reports.)

In the case of the United States vs. Arredondo and others, 6th Peters's Reports, the Supreme Court declare that Congress "have adopted, as the basis of all their acts, the principle that the law of the province in which the land is situated is the law which gives efficacy to the grant, and by which it is to be tested whether it was property at the time the treaties took effect."

Upon the same basis Congress has proceeded in the present act of legislation, which requires the surveyor-general, under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to land "under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico," and arms the surveyor-general with power for the purpose by authorizing him to "issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises."

The private land titles in New Mexico are derived from the authorities of Old Spain as well as of Mexico. Among the "necessary acts" contemplated by the law and required of you is that you shall—

First. Acquaint yourself with the land system of Spain as applied to her ultramarine possessions, the general features of which are found—modified, of course, by local requirements and usages—in the former provinces and dependencies of that monarchy on this continent. For this purpose your must examine the laws of Spain, the royal ordinances—decrees and regulations as collected in White's Recopilacion, two volumes.

By the acts of Congress approved 26th May, 1824, 23d May, 1828, and 17th June, 1844 (United States Statutes at Large, vol. 4, page 52, chap. 173; page 284, chap. 70; and vol. 5, page 676, chap. 95), the United States district courts were opened for the examination and adjudication of foreign titles. Numerous cases on appeal under these laws, and other cases on writs of error, in which actions on ejectment in the courts below had been instituted, were brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, where the rights of property under inceptive and imperfect titles which originated under the Spanish system have been thoroughly examined and discussed with eminent ability.

For these decisions I refer you to Peters's and Howard's Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is important you should carefully examine them in connection with the Spanish law, and the legislation of Congress on the subject, in order that you may understand and be able to apply the principles of the Spanish system as understood and expounded by the authorities of our Government.

Second. Upon your arrival at Santa Fé you will make application to the governor of the Territory for such of the archives as relate to grants of land by the former authorities of the country. You will see that they are kept in a place of security from fire, or other accidents, and that access is allowed only to land owners who may find it necessary to refer to their title records, and such references must be made under your eye, or that of a sworn employé of the Government.

You will proceed at once to arrange and classify the papers in the order of date, and have them properly and substantially bound. You will then have schedules marked (1) of them made out in duplicate, and will prepare abstracts (No. 2), also in duplicate, of all the grants found in the records, showing the names of grantees, date, and locality, by whom conceded, and under what authority.

You will prepare, in duplicate, from the archives or authoritative sources, a document (No. 3) exhibiting the names of all the officers of the Territory who held the power of distributing lands from the earliest settlement of the Territory until the change of government, indicating the several periods of their incumbency, the nature and extent of their powers conceding lands; whether, and to what extent and under what conditions and limitations, authority existed in the governors or political chiefs to distribute (repartir) the public domain; whether in any class of cases they had the power to make an absolute grant; and, if so, for what maximum in area, or whether subject to the affirmance of the department or supreme government; whether the Spanish surveying system was in operation, and since what period in the country and under what organization; also, with verified copies in the original and translations of the laws and decrees of the Mexican Republic, and regulations which may have been adopted by the general government of that republic for the disposal of the public lands in New Mexico.

Herewith you will receive a table of land measures adopted by the Mexican Government, translated from the "Ordenanzas de Tierras y Aguas," by Marianus Galvan, edition of 1844, as printed in Executive Document No. 17, first session Thirty-first Congress, House of Representatives, containing much valuable information on the subject of California and New Mexico, and of which document I would invite your special and careful examination.

In a report of the 14th November, 1851, from the surveyor-general of California, it is stated that all the grants, &c., of lots or lands in California, made either by the Spanish Government or that of Mexico, refer to the "vara" of Mexico as the measure of length; that by common consent in California that measure is considered as exactly equivalent to thirty-three American inches. That officer then inclosed to us copy of a document he had obtained as being an extract of a treaty made by the Mexican Government, from which it would seem that another length is given to the "vara;" and by J. H. Alexander's (of Baltimore) Dictionary of Weights and Measures, the Mexican vara is stated to be equal to 92.741 of the American yard.

This office, however, has sanctioned the recognition in California of the Mexican vara as being equivalent to thirty-three American inches. You will carefully compare the data furnished in the table herewith, and in the foregoing, with the Spanish measurements in use in New Mexico, and will report whether they are identical; or if varied in any respect by law or usage, you will make a report of all the particulars.

You should also add to "document No. 3" the forms used under the former governments to obtain grants, beginning with the initiatory proceeding, namely: the petition, and indicating the several successive acts until the title was completed. A copy of the "schedule," "abstract," and "document" required of you in the foregoing, duly authenticated by you, should constitute a part of the permanent files of the surveyor-general's office, and duplicates of them should be sent as soon as practicable to the Department of the Interior.

The knowledge and experience you will acquire in arranging the archives, collecting materials, and making out the documents called for by these instructions, will enable you to enter understandingly upon the work of receiving and examining the testimony which may be presented to you by land claimants and prepare your report thereon for the action of Congress.

In the first instance, you will provide yourself with a journal, consisting of substantially bound volume or volumes, which is to constitute a complete record of your official proceedings in regard to land titles; and with a suitable docket, for the entry therein of claims in the order of their presentation, and so arranged as to indicate at a glance a brief statement of each case, its number, name of original and present claimant, area, locality, from what authority derived, nature of title whether complete or incomplete, and your decision thereon.

Your first session should be held at Santa Fé and your subsequent sessions at such places and periods as public convenience may suggest, of which you will give timely notice to the Department. You will commence your session by giving proper public notice of the same in a newspaper of the largest circulation in the English and Spanish languages; will make known your readiness to receive notices and testimony in support of the land claims of individuals derived before the change of government.

You will require claimants in every case, and give public notice to that effect, to file a written notice setting forth the name of the present claimant, name of the original claimant, nature of claim, whether inchoate or perfect; its date; from what authority the original title was derived, with a reference to the evidence of the power and authority under which the granting officer may have acted; quantity claimed; locality, notice, and extent of conflicting claims, if any; with a reference to the documentary evidence and testimony relied upon to establish the claim, and to show a transfer of right from the original grantee to the present claimant.

You will also require of every claimant an authorized plat of survey, if a survey has been executed, or other evidence showing the precise locality and extent of the tract claimed. This is indispensable in order to avoid any doubt hereafter in reserving from sale as contemplated by law the particular tract or parcel of land for which a claim may be duly filed, or in communicating the title to the same hereafter in the event of a final confirmation.

The effect of this will be not only to save claimants from embarrassments and difficulties inseparable from the presentation and adjudication of claims with indefinite limits, but will promote the welfare of the country generally by furnishing the surveyor-general with evidence of what is claimed as private property under treaty and the act of July 22, 1854, thus enabling him to ascertain what is undisputed public land, and to proceed with the public surveys accordingly without awaiting a final action of Congress upon that subject.

You will take care to guard the public against fraudulent or antedated claims, and will bring the title-papers to the test of the genuine signatures, which you should collect of the granting officers, as well as the test of the official registers or abstracts which may exist of the titles issued by the granting officers. In granting all cases of course the original title-papers are to be produced, or loss accounted for, and where copies are presented they must be authenticated; and your report should also state the precise character of the papers acted upon by you, whether originals or otherwise; where the claim may be presented by a party as present claimant in right of another you must be satisfied that the deraignment of title is complete, otherwise the entry and your decision should be in favor of the legal representatives of the original grantee.

Your journal should be prefaced by a record of the laws under which you are required to act, and of your commission and oath of office, and should contain a full record of the notice and evidence in support of each claim, and of your decision, setting forth as succinctly and concisely as possible all the leading facts, particulars, and principles applicable to the case, and upon which such decision may be founded. All the original papers should of course be carefully numbered, filed, and preserved; and upon each should be indorsed the volume and page of the record in which they are entered, and such reference should be made on the journal and docket as will properly connect them with each other. Your docket should be a condensed exhibit of every case, and of your decision. The claim both as to grade and dignity may be classified by numerals or alphabetically accompanied by explanatory notes in such a manner that it will show every case confirmed and every one rejected by you.

In the case of any town lot, farm lot, or pasture lots held under a grant from any corporation or town to which lands may be granted for the establishment of a town by the Spanish or Mexican Government, or the lawful authorities thereof, or in the case of any city, town, or village lot, which city, town, or village existed at the time possession was taken of New Mexico by the authorities of the United States, the claim to the same may be presented by the corporate authorities; or where the land on which the said city, town, or village was originally granted to an individual the claim may be presented by or in the name of such individual, and the fact being proved to you of the existence of such city, town, or village at the period when the United States took possession may be considered by you as prima facie evidence of a grant to such corporation or to the individuals under whom the lot-holders claim, and where any city, town, or village shall be in existence at the passage of the act of July 22, 1854, the claim for the land embraced within the limits of the said city, town, or village.

Such is the principle sanctioned by the act of 3d March, 1851, for the adjudication of Spanish and Mexican claims in California, and I think its application and adoption proper in regard to claims in New Mexico.

In the month of March, 1849, there was published in the Atlantic States an extract of a letter dated December 12, 1848, at Santa Fé, New Mexico, purporting to be from a young officer of the Army, in which it was stated that the prefect at El Paso del Norte has for the last few months been very active in disposing (for his own benefit) of all lands in that vicinity that are valuable, antedating the title to said purchasers that these land titles would be made a source of profitable litigation, &c. It will be your duty to subject all papers under suspicion of fraud to the severest scrutiny and test in order to settle the question of their genuineness.

You will also collect information from authentic sources in reference to the laws of the country respecting minerals, and ascertain what conditions were attached to grants embracing mines; whether or not the laws and policy of the former governments conferred absolute title in granting lands of this class in New Mexico. It is proper also, and you are instructed in the case of every claim that may be filed, to ascertain from the parties and require testimony as to whether the tracts claimed are mineral or agricultural; and you will be careful to make the necessary discrimination in the record of your proceedings and in your docket.

Your report should be divided into two parts. Part first should embrace individual and municipal claims, and should be prepared in the manner contemplated by law, and in accordance with the requirements in the foregoing instructions. The law further requires you also to make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each; stating the numbers of inhabitants in the said pueblos respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land. Part second of your report should be devoted to this branch of your duty. It will be your business to collect data from the records and other authentic sources relative to these pueblos, so that you will enable Congress to understand the matter fully and legislate in such a manner as will do justice to all concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is possible, Mr. Chairman, that I may be mistaken about the confirmation of these land claims, and therefore I think the motion had better be limited to strike out the words suggested by the gentleman from New York, the original motion.

The CHAIRMAN. That question will then be submitted to the committee in the original form.

Mr. DWIGHT. I want to correct a plausible statement which my friend from Wisconsin has made in his remarks. He stated that the Government has the means of determining all these facts, and the amount of land contained in these grants from the surveys. I made some inquiries at the Land Department in reference to the matter and I have just this word to add. I want to ask but a moment as I would like to read the questions and replies, for they are certainly in contradiction of what the distinguished gentleman has just said. I wrote to the Department of the Interior asking these questions:

First. What quantity of land is contained in the grant?

Second. Whether the ancient boundaries of the corners or the landmarks mentioned in the original record have been preserved as a guide to the later survey?

Third. Whether the original grant, which as applied for to the governor and captain-general, was for a league and a half more or less is now extended so as to be some thirty or thirty-five miles in area?

Fourth. What facts the Department is in possession of respecting the position of the whole tract claimed by those claiming title or those under whom they claim?

The answer of the Department is as follows:

I have the honor to state in reply, first, that this office has no knowledge as to the quantity of land granted, nor means at hand of ascertaining the same other than transcripts of the papers embraced in the surveyor-general's report and the plat of preliminary survey, all of which are before Congress.

Now, that is what the Department states, and then again it goes on:

It will be seen that in the petition for the grant the applicants designated boundaries and estimated the extent of the tract asked for at "one league and a half on each side, more or less," which would give an area of two and one-quarter leagues, equal to 9,987.03 acres.

Now, that is what the Land Department says, and notwithstanding that, the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat is here with a bill before Congress asking for 243,000 acres of land, and that this shall be confirmed to these applicants under the preliminary surveys which have been made. I have therefore made this motion to strike out.

Mr. HAZELTON. Now a word in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. HAZELTON. But let me call the gentleman's attention to a mistake he has made.

Mr. DWIGHT. I have given my authority for the statement.

Mr. HAZELTON. But the gentleman misrepresents me. He says I am here with a bill. The Committee on Private Land Claims is here with a bill. I am not. He says they have no evidence down here in the Interior Department about these surveys. Why, they have the field-notes. They have all the preliminary surveys.

Mr. DWIGHT. The Department say they have no such information as the gentleman claims, as I have shown by the written statement of the Department itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT], the gentleman from Kansas having withdrawn the motion made by him. The question is on striking out the words indicated in the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of order. The committee voted on that.

The CHAIRMAN. By consent that vote was nullified.

The question being taken on Mr. DWIGHT'S amendment to strike out the words "preliminary survey of unconfirmed and," it was agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 1365 to 1368, as follows:

For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claims in Arizona, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the same amendment be made in this as in the previous section by striking out the words "preliminary survey of unconfirmed and."

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read lines 1369 to 1372, as follows:

For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $60,000, of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. POUND. I desire on behalf of the Committee on the Public Lands to submit a very important amendment to this clause, which I believe will be accepted by the Committee on Appropriations. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 1772, after the word "available," insert the following:

"Provided, That the pre-emption laws, together with all laws authorizing the filing of declaratory statements for entries of the public lands by agent or attorney, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided further, That this repeal shall not affect the disposal of lands under treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, nor be deemed to impair any legal rights heretofore acquired under the laws hereby repealed; but all existing settlements, entries, or filings may be perfected upon proper proof of the lawful and bona fide character of said claims and of due compliance with the provisions and requirements of the laws under which such entries, settlements, or filings were made: And provided further, That any person who has heretofore made or may hereafter make a bona fide entry of public lands under the homestead laws shall have the privilege of paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time before the expiration of five years from the date of entry and after actual residence, improvement, and cultivation has been maintained for a period of not less than two and one-half years after entry; and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to require evidence of actual compliance with the requirements of law in respect to settlement, residence, improvement, and cultivation in all cases in which title now is or may hereafter be claimed under the homestead or other settlement or improvement laws of the United States: And provided further, That any person applying for the benefits of the timber-culture laws shall make his entry in person, at the proper local land office, and shall make affidavit that he is an actual resident of the county, State, or Territory in which the land is situated, and that he has not entered into any contract or agreement to relinquish the entry he may make, and that he has no present or prospective purpose of making such relinquishment; and the offering for sale, as a matter of traffic or speculation, of relinquishments of public land entries shall be deemed prima facie evidence that such entries were made for speculative purposes, and not in good faith, as required by law, and such entries shall thereupon be liable to cancellation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the land covered thereby shall be deemed subject to entry by the first legal applicant; and the first section of the act of May 14, 1880 (authorizing lands covered by relinquished claims to be held as open to settlement or entry without further action by the Commissioner of the General Land Office), and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed: And provided further, That when the timber-culture entry shall have once been made on a tract of public land subject to such entry, and the same shall be canceled or relinquished, the land covered thereby shall thereafter be subject to entry only under the timber-culture laws; and no patent shall be issued for such land until the requirements of such laws shall have been fully complied with."

Mr. VALENTINE. I wish to ask the Chair whether the action of the House last evening relieved this amendment from the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman has made the point of order.

Mr. VALENTINE. My question is whether the action of the House relieved it from the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the gentleman to decide.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to make the point of order if the action of the House last night did not annul the right to do so. The point of order is that the amendment is new legislation, or that it changes existing law and is not in the line of retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND], unless the gentleman from Nebraska desires to be heard further on the point of order.

Mr. POUND. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] submits to the Chair the question whether or not the House on yesterday relieved this amendment from being amenable to the point of order were it to be raised.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the Chair will decide that question it may settle the whole matter. It is the opinion of some of the members here that the action of the House relieved the amendment from liability to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Wisconsin is familiar with the matter, and will hear him.

Mr. POUND. I read from the RECORD what took place in the House last evening:

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4993) to repeal the laws allowing the pre-emption of the public lands and amending the homestead law be taken from the House Calendar and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with power to report it with or without amendments. The object is to have the bill reported as an amendment to the bill making provision for the sundry civil expenses of the Government. The bill is for the purpose of preventing frauds in connection with the public lands.

Mr. ELLIS. I suggest that the bill had better be read.

Mr. RYAN. It is the same that we have reported.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not insist on the reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that that order of the House gave power to the Committee on Appropriations. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin report it from his committee?

Mr. HISCOCK. On the part of the Committee on Appropriations I accept the amendment, and if more is needed I will move it on the part of that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as this is concerned, it is the Committee on Appropriations that is authorized to make the report.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I make the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will treat it as an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VALENTINE. I still insist on the point of order that the amendment is not germane, that it changes existing law, and that it does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, who accepts this amendment in the name of the Committee on Appropriations whether there is not more in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] than the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was authorized to accept?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not.

Mr. RYAN. I answer, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he reported this as a report of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from New York answers he does report it from the Committee on Appropriations. The question therefore is as to the point of order made to the amendment reported under those circumstances.

Mr. POUND. I desire to say in connection with my statement that I do not regard this amendment amenable to the point of order, even though the action of the House yesterday had not been had.

The CHAIRMAN. As long as this is now offered as an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair would prefer that the point of order be argued with reference to that condition of the amendment.

Mr. POUND. The Chair and the Committee of the Whole will bear in mind that this amendment is to a provision which appropriates $60,000, of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available, to protect the public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation. That this amendment is in the interest of economy and retrenchment is made apparent by reason of the fact that it is to prevent the fraudulent and illegal entry of public lands by repealing the laws under which those fraudulent entries are now made.

The frauds alluded to and to be prevented by this appropriation of $60,000 have mainly arisen under the pre-emption laws. Originally the pre-emption law was a beneficent one, but it must be evident to all familiar with the subject that to-day at least nine-tenths of all the entries made under the pre-emption laws are fraudulent and involve perjury and corruption. It is therefore made necessary for the Government to appropriate $60,000 to prevent those illegal entries.

It will certainly be in the interest of economy to repeal the laws under which those illegal entries are now made. This repealing provision preserves the homestead law under which all bona fide settlements can be made, modifying that law by extending the time of acquiring title from six months to two and a half years.

And furthermore it will be apparent to the committee and the Chair that if these pre-emption laws are repealed the clerical force employed in the local land offices and in the General Land Office may be very much lessened, and the expense incurred in those different offices under those laws be done away with.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the Chair decides that the action of the House has not taken it out of my power to make the point of order, I would like to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that his recollection is not in accordance with the statement which has been read from the RECORD.

Mr. VALENTINE. Nor is mine.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair therefore has sent for the Journal, which is the highest authority, and will direct the Clerk to read that portion of the Journal referring to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. RYAN, by unanimous consent, the bill of the House (H. R. 4993) to repeal the laws allowing pre-emption of the public lands, and amending the homestead law, was taken from the House Calendar, and with the accompanying report referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the power to report the same with or without amendment as an amendment to the bill of the House (H. R. 7595) (sundry civil appropriation bill).

The CHAIRMAN. It will appear that power was expressly given by the House to the Committee on Appropriations to report this as an amendment to the pending bill, and the Chair decides that it is now before the Committee of the Whole for its action.

Mr. VALENTINE. And the question of its being germane is not now before the committee for its consideration at all?

The CHAIRMAN. Not under the action of the House.

Mr. POUND. Upon the merits of the proposition I desire to say that the Committee on Public Lands have had this subject under careful consideration and have given it very exhaustive examination. They learned that the Commissioner of the General Land Office especially has from time to time recommended the repeal of these pre-emption laws.

Perhaps the merits of the question can be better presented to the committee by the reading of the report which the Committee on Public Lands authorized to be made touching a bill embracing the same provisions as this amendment. I will therefore ask the committee to listen to the reading of the report submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] from the Committee on Public Lands upon this subject, and if a little more time than five minutes be required for its reading I hope the committee will by unanimous consent permit the entire report to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk can read until the time of the gentleman expires.

Mr. STRAIT. I will yield to the gentleman my time for the purpose of having the entire report read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4983) to repeal the laws allowing pre-emption of the public lands, and amending the homestead law, submit the following report:

The pre-emption law and the various amendments which have been made to it from time to time were enacted for the purpose of reserving the public domain to the occupation of actual settlers, and for many years was the only law under which title could be acquired to unoffered lands.

The effect of this law throughout the entire region where the public lands were situated was of the most beneficent character, and saved a large region of country from being taken for the purpose of speculation. But, with the subsequent passage of the homestead act, there seemed to be little use for the pre-emption law, as those who, in good faith, desired to occupy the public lands for the purpose of establishing homes could do so to much better advantage under the provisions of the homestead law. And since the passage of the homestead law the pre-emption act, as a rule, has been "used only to be abused," and since that time the most extensive frauds have been committed under this law.

Your committee are informed that in many sections of the country the evasion of the law has become a regularly organized business, and that offices are opened for the express purpose of pre-empting and selling lands located under the pre-emption law. Men are employed and paid definite amounts to make pre-emption locations, and agreements are made to transfer lands so acquired the moment the title vests in them. But, beyond making such agreements in defiance of law, these locations, in many cases, are, in every respect, fraudulent, the parties to them never making the required improvements, and seldom going upon the land claimed. The consequence is that this law, which was so wisely enacted, and which for a long time after its enactment was so beneficent in its results, is now made use of almost exclusively to accomplish results that it was enacted to prevent, to wit, the passing or transferring of the public domain into the hands of speculators instead of reserving it for the actual settler; and not only this, but, in too many cases, passing into the hands of dishonest speculators, who are willing to become parties to perjury and fraud.

With this state of things existing to so alarming an extent in all sections of the country where there is any Government land, and more especially in regions where the land is almost entirely valuable for its timber, coupled with the fact that the actual bona fide settler can acquire title to land for a home without money and without price, there seems no good reason why the pre-emption law should longer remain on the statute-book, and your committee therefore recommend its repeal.

Your committee, in order to give effectiveness to this repeal and to prevent the consummation of the same class of frauds under the homestead act, commend the provision extending the time in which homestead claimants can commute payment. The bill under consideration extends this time from six to eighteen months. Your committee recommend that this time be further extended to thirty months.

The question of the repeal of the pre-emption law and the amendment of the homestead law is not a new one, but has been repeatedly urged by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In his last report he uses the following language:

"Previous to the passage of the homestead laws the pre-emption system afforded the only means by which settlers could acquire title to unoffered lands. The wise policy of Congress, maintained for many years, has been to withhold the public lands from disposal at ordinary cash sale, with a view to their occupation by actual settlers, and to prevent the appropriation of large bodies by individuals for speculative purposes. The pre-emption system was designed to enable actual settlers to establise their homes on the public domain, and thus to improve and build up the country.

"With the passage of the homestead act, however, the pre-emption law became of less importance, and recent supplemental legislation having placed homestead parties on an equal footing in all respects with pre-emptors, the special utility of the pre-emption law for purposes of bona fide settlement on the public lands has wholly ceased.

"Any person who could make a pre-emption entry can make a homestead entry. Any land that can be entered under the pre-emption laws can also be entered under the homestead laws. Under the homestead laws, also, the homestead party may purchase the land entered by him within the same time, upon the same terms, and by the same proofs as in pre-emption cases. There is therefore no practical necessity for continuing the double system in operation. A repeal of the pre-emption law would simplify the public business and be in the interest of public economy and good administration. Such repeal would, moreover, remove one of the causes of frauds in land entries which have approached great magnitude. The correspondence of this office, and reports from officers and special agents, indicate that a material proportion of the pre-emption entries now made are fraudulent in character, being chiefly placed upon valuable timber or mineral lands, or water rights, and made in the interest and by the procurement of others, and not for the purpose of residence and improvement by the professed pre-emptor."

Your committee, believing that the remainder of the public domain should be sacredly held for the actual settlers who are now crowding to the frontier in such large numbers, and that few opportunities would be left to speculators to acquire lands for speculation, urgently recommend the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to amend the amendment so as to strike out the words "public-land entries" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "entries made under the provisions of the timber-culture laws." It would be very unjust to homestead settlers if the provision of the amendment to prevent frauds should be confined to the tree-culture entries.

Mr. RYAN. That is right.

Mr. POUND. Let the Clerk read that clause as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any person applying for the benefit of the timber-culture laws shall make his entry in person at the proper local land office, and shall make affidavit that he is an actual resident of the county and State or Territory in which the land is situated, and that he has not entered into any contract or agreement to surrender the entry he may make, and that he has no present or prospective purpose of making any such relinquishment; and the offering for sale as a matter of traffic or speculation of relinquishments of entries made under the provisions of the timber-culture laws shall be deemed prima facie evidence that such entries were made for speculative purposes, &c.

Mr. POUND. I do not think there is any objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to further amend by striking out "two and one-half" and inserting "one and one-half;" so that it will read:

After actual residence, improvement, and cultivation have been maintained for a period of not less than one and one-half years after entry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that amendment to the amendment?

Mr. POUND. There is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. Chairman, when a settler enters upon a homestead he is allowed six months in which to begin his settlement and improvements upon the land. My amendment will require him to reside upon that land one year and a half after he begins his settlement before he can acquire title by paying $1.25 per acre. I believe that this is long enough.

In many cases settlers, after making bona fide settlement and occupancy, are obliged, owing to sickness, business, or other circumstances, to leave the lands within a year and a half after the actual settlement and cultivation are commenced. If the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations should be adopted the settler can not obtain title in less than two years and a half after settlement.

Six months are allowed the settler after making entry before he is required to begin actual residence and cultivation. Almost every settler avails himself of this privilege. These men after making their filings go back for their families and their property, and it is six months generally before they return to make settlement and begin their residence. But under the amendment of the committee the settler must remain two and a half years upon the land before acquiring any title whatever; and if within that time he be compelled for any cause to leave, he forfeits everything.

It seems to me that a term of a year and a half is long enough. Is it supposed that this Government is unable to protect itself against fraud? Is that the reason why the term of residence should be extended? I do not believe that such an amendment as that offered by the Committee on Appropriations is necessary to prevent fraud. I believe that if proper men are appointed as land officers and inspectors frauds can be prevented, the law can be executed in good faith, and justice done to the settlers upon the public lands.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of discussing more particularly the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations. I am very anxious that the Committee of the Whole should vote intelligently on this very important question. I believe that scarcely any law on our statute-book has been productive of so many abuses, so much perjury, so much absolute fraud as the pre-emption law. When originally enacted it was wise, and its effect in the new portions of the country was very beneficent, because it did just what it was intended to do—it held the public domain for the benefit of the actual settler. But after the passage of the homestead law there was of course no further necessity for the pre-emption law; for every one desiring in good faith to seek a home on the public lands could do so under the homestead law "without money and without price."

Hence there is not and has not been for years any necessity for this law. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred its privileges have "been used only to be abused." Something more than a year ago my attention was especially called to the frauds which were being perpetrated under this law, and in the early part of last session, feeling that some step should be taken to remedy these abuses, I introduced a bill providing in terms for the repeal of the pre-emption law. I did this in order to "draw the fire" of the country and to ascertain whether any one knew good reason why the law should not be repealed. Since that time I have received letters on the subject from land officers and from prominent citizens all over the country, and almost without exception my action in this matter has been approved and I have been requested to go forward and secure the enactment of that bill.

In my own State there is one land district in the northeastern portion where the lands are valuable only for their timber, so that under the spirit of the pre-emption law they could not be taken. But within the last year and a half 125,000 to 150,000 acres of those lands have been taken under the pre-emption law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I want to hear the facts in regard to this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let us fix the time for debate now; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] can be recognized afterward. I ask unanimous consent that this debate be limited to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to ordering that the debate on this proposition close in thirty minutes? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN. Within the last few months 150,000 acres of land in my own State have been taken fraudulently. So scandalous had these frauds become, so much attention had been attracted to them in our section of the country, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office felt it his duty to send an agent there to make an investigation.

For this purpose he appointed ex-Governor Marshall, of our State, one of the most reliable and conscientious men in the country. He examined this whole question, and of one hundred and twenty-four claims which he examined, covering thousands and thousands of acres, there were only two in which the law had been complied with. This business had been carried to such an extent that there were pre-emption brokers who made it their business to hire persons to go on the land and pre-empt it and then to transfer their certificates the moment they were obtained. The condition of things in this respect can hardly be exaggerated.

It may be said that these abuses relate mainly to the timber lands of the country; but I will say that my remarks apply more forcibly, if possible, to the prairie country, for instance in Dakota. It has then become a matter of scandal. It has come to this, that no honest man who undertakes to make a legitimate claim can do so without being black-mailed by the adventurers and land-sharks who anticipate them. The Commissioner of the General Land Office only a few days ago canceled one hundred and nine fraudulent filings. A party comes forward and makes fictitious claim. He takes the names of persons in some cases who have no actual existence. He files these claims and covers a broad area, often to the extent of a township. When the actual settler comes along of course he has no show. He does not want to buy a contest or lawsuit, and it ends finally by his paying from $100 to $500 to get his claim.

Now, every land office in the country is surrounded by a ring of these sharks and adventurers. It has become so scandalous, Mr. Chairman, there is not a gentleman—and I will refer to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON]—there is not a man in any part of the country who has gone there but has had his attention called to this shameful condition of things. Now is the hour to have this business stopped. These public lands have been dedicated by Congress to the actual settler. Let us guard them for that purpose. Let us shut out this army of harpies and adventurers who go there to sap the life-blood of the actual settlers who really develop the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to have certain letters of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, reports and letters of the special agents sent to examine these frauds, printed as a part of my remarks. They are as follows:

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
Duluth, Minn., November 23, 1882.

SIR: I inclose with this a report of the examination of certain pre-emption entries in tp. 59 N., R. 14 W., fourth meridian, which you specially instructed me to make by letter dated August —, 1882. (I am not able to give the date and initial, the letter being at my home, Saint Paul.) The other entries embraced in same instructions I have not reached in the progress of my examinations. They lie chiefly in the extreme western part of this district. I expect to examine them within a few weeks.

I also transmit by this mail in separate envelope detailed report of examinations in tp. 59 N., Rs. 14 (including these specially reported with others), 17, and 18; tp. 60 N., R. 18 W., and tp. 58, R. 19 W. You will see that the larger part of these are in the newly surveyed towns, declaratory-statement filings, in which I have been able to prevent entries. Under your instructions I will request the local land officers to order hearings in the case of pre-emption entries where I found no evidence of improvement or other compliance with requirements of the law.

I will await your instructions before ordering hearings in these cases examined under special instructions of August.

Very respectfully,

WM. R. MARSHALL, Special Agent.

Hon. N. C. MCFARLAND,
Commissioner General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1883.

SIR: In compliance with request contained in your letter of December 23, 1882, I transmit herewith map showing location of the canceled pre-emption filings and timber-culture claims in Douglas County, Dakota Territory, known as the F. Le Cocq, jr., claims; also copy of report of Special Agent William W. Burke, and affidavits relative thereto.

Special Agent Burke reports that he made a personal examination of each of the tracts, the filings on which were canceled, and that the claimants did not make an actual personal settlement on their respective tracts prior to filing therefor. A pre-emption filing made without an actual personal settlement prior to the filing therefor is void. A pre-emption settlement can not be made by proxy, and if so made is of no effect; hence the cancellation of the declaratory statements aforesaid. This office is constantly in receipt of letters calling attention to fraudulent and illegal appropriations of the public lands, in addition to the reports of like nature from special agents of this office. It seems absolutely necessary for the protection of the interests of the Government and the bona fide settler that special agents should be appointed to act in all the large and new land districts so that fraudulent entries may be prevented, but this can not be done now as no appropriation is available with which to pay the salaries and expenses of such agents.

I have under preparation a report which is intended to be laid before the House of Representatives for consideration. The manner in which the public domain is being appropriated by fraudulent and illegal practices in the interest of speculators and others will therein fully appear, together with a brief synopsis of the information and data in possession of this office, and on which said report is based.

Very respectfully,

L. HARRISON,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. W. D. WASHBURN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

YANKTON, DAK., December 6, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report upon one hundred and nine pre-emption filings described below, situated in townships 100, ranges 64, 99, and 100, ranges 65, and 99, and 100, range 66, namely:

* * * * * * *

Upon my arrival at this place, I was informed that one Francis Le Cocq, jr., was covering up a large tract of land in Douglas County under the pre-emption and timber-culture laws; that he was doing it under the guise of an agent for a colony of Hollanders, which, as he says, was to be planted there; that none of the parties filing the declaratory statements were or had been living on or had in any manner improved the land.

Upon the above information, after having obtained from the records of the land office all the data necessary for making an examination of the land, I proceeded to Douglas County where the land is situated, arriving there on November 22 and immediately began a thorough investigation assisted by Charles E. Huston, a practical surveyor, who is well acquainted with the lands.

On the 23d and 24th days of November, I visited the above-described lands, marked upon the plat herewith (Exhibit A) in red ink, denoting the pre-emption filings, and failed to find any of the claimants upon their claims, or any improvements upon them that would give the parties any rights whatever under the pre-emption law, which requires actual settlement and improvement.

Upon some of the tracts the claimants, or some one for them, have pretended to commence improvements by taking a spade and digging a hole in the ground one spit deep, about two and one-half feet in diameter. This is what is called "commencing the improvements" by "commencing to dig a well."

After making an examination of the land I waited upon Mr. Le Cocq, who has an office upon the SW. ¼ sec. 24, T. 100, R. 65, for an explanation as to the non-residence and non-improvement of these tracts by the claimants. At first he was very reluctant, but after informing him that it might be to his interest to explain, he stated that he was acting as attorney for most or nearly all of the parties; that he made out and filed their papers in the land office at Yankton; that the parties are not residents of Douglas County, but of Turner and Plankington, Dakota; Orange City, Pella, Alton, and Parkersburgh, Iowa; and South Holland, Illinois; that he knew that their filings could not stand as against any legal ones that might be filed over them, and that he thought there would be no resistance to any filings so made on account of the non-residence of the present claimants, and for the further reason that the parties had not made any improvements upon their claims. (See affidavit marked Exhibit B.)

When Le Cocq was asked how he could act as attorney for parties and file their papers in the land office, when he knew that they were not complying with the law, nor never intended to comply, he replied: that the parties had commenced improvements by "commencing to dig wells." (No doubt he was referring to those already described.) When informed that those "wells" which he referred to could not be considered improvements, he tried to excuse himself by saying: "Well, it is done every day. They are as good as most others," or words to that effect, which is the general excuse for all who try to evade the law.

These lands are the best in the county, and as good as any in the Territory. It is my opinion, and am induced to form such from the surrounding circumstances, that Le Cocq had one or two plans by which to speculate with these claims, as follows, to wit:

First. He got their filings on the land, and hence this land is virtually out of market, as no one cares to file or enter over a pre-emption filing, even if they do think the first filing is illegal. They do not care to run the risk, when they come to make final proof, of having some one who has a prior filing come in and allege prior settlement, thus delay their cases and be a source of expense to them. All honest, bona fide settlers avoid clashing of filings, and will not interfere for fear of losing their rights. They will pass an illegal filing by rather than run any risks, especially when they know that a man of means is interested. Le Cocq knows this, and his object may be to hold this land under these filings until the bona fide settlers begin to come in next spring, then if parties want any land upon which these filings are he will for a consideration obtain relinquishments of the same, thereby make a large sum of money out of the settlers, when all that it should cost them is the Government price; or—

Second. He might induce these ignorant parties, for a small consideration and a misinterpretation of the law, to make proof and deed the land to him or some other interested parties.

Of the two modes, I am inclined to think that he would adopt the latter, for the following reasons, namely:

I learn from good authority that it is his intention to start a newspaper at his so-called settlement; his object in this is to have the final proof notices printed in it and not allow the paper to go into general circulation. This mode has been adopted to a great extent in this Territory. Again, he has been trying for some time to obtain an appointment as deputy clerk of the court or position as probate judge, for the reason, as he says, that it would be more convenient for his men to prove up.

It is true the present filings upon these lands is no bar to a second filing, but, sir, it is not so easy and agreeable as it seems to file over them and bring the second to maturity. This man Le Cocq (if I may be allowed to use a vulgar expression) is a "bulldozer" and has means at his command. The parties who would attempt to file over one of his claims would be subjected to pretty harsh treatment. He has warned all to keep off of what he calls "my settlement."

I did not think it necessary to go to the expense of obtaining additional testimony by interviewing the parties in whose names these filings are made for the reason that a pre-emption filing is void unless preceded by settlement and improvement, which settlement and improvement these parties have failed to show.

Therefore, in view of the above facts, and the circumstances surrounding these cases, I would most respectfully recommend that all of the above filings be canceled upon the records of the office, so that the land may be taken by honest, bona fide settlers; and that the pre-emption rights of the parties making these filings and all moneys paid by them be forfeited; and further, that Francis Le Cocq, jr., be disbarred from practice before the local land offices or the general office as an attorney.

I would state further that there are a large number of timber claims taken in the same townships as the pre-emptions. These claims, it is alleged, are also taken in Le Cocq's interest, and the inference is that the allegation is true.

From an examination of the plat inclosed you will find the timber claims which are supposed to have been taken in Le Cocq's interest marked; and here allow me to call your attention to one prominent point, which may appear to you very insignificant, but to those who are acquainted with the ways of the "land shark" it is not; it is one of the points which leads me to believe that the allegation is true.

It is the contiguity of these entries. If you will notice they are in groups of twos, threes, and fours. Now this is a good point, and one which every person would try to make.

This contiguity makes a great difference to parties who have relinquishments for sale. They can sell them more readily and obtain larger prices.

The location of these claims strengthens my belief that Le Cocq is an interested party or else he was not acting in good faith with his clients, in another way, namely: Aril Emisse's D. S. was placed upon the SE. ¼, 24, 100, 66, September 12, 1882, while his timber culture is placed upon the NE. ¼, 15, 100, 66, June 1, 1882; Jan Plooster's D. S. was placed upon the NW. ¼, 26, 99, 65, while his T. C. is placed upon the NW. ¼, 24, 99, 65, both June 1, 1882. Both claims of both these parties are not contiguous, but far from it, but they could have been if Le Cocq located them in good faith. At the time these claims were located every applicant could have had his pre-emption and timber claim contiguous; and this point is made if possible by every person who locates.

Other cases than the above two can be picked out, that are in the same condition as to contiguity, but these being enough for illustration, I will proceed to inform you where and how the timber-culture affidavits were made.

I am informed by the local officers here that most of these affidavits were made before the clerk and deputy clerk of the court of Union County, Dakota Territory, not at the county seat but at a place in the Territory, just over the line opposite Calliope, Iowa, within the Yankton district. Le Cocq admitted that the affidavits were made in Union and Turner Counties, he having made such arrangement with the officers who administered the affidavits so as to save time and expense for the parties. He also admits that the parties never saw the land applied for.

I gave Mr. Le Cocq the opportunity to submit an affidavit explaining the irregularities connected with these entries and filings for transmittal to you for inspection. He said he had not time then, but would make it by the next day or two and transmit the same to me. The affidavit has not been received, but in its place he sends me a postal card, of date December 1, 1882, saying: "I have decided not to make the affidavit you ask of me." * * * (Card inclosed marked Ex. "C.")

From the above circumstances and facts, which are good grounds for an investigation, I consider it my duty to make an investigation at the earliest opportunity and report fully.

A list of the timber claims will be transmitted in a separate letter with a request that the local officers at Yankton be instructed not to accept relinquishments for any of them until an investigation is had.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your consideration and action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. W. BURKE, Special Agent.

Hon. N. C. McFARLAND,
Commissioner General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in favor of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands, and at the same time to enter my protest against the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Dakota. It is notorious that our pre-emption laws have become the vehicle of frauds, and it is the duty of Congress to repeal those laws. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who are in favor of reserving the entire public lands for the benefit of the actual settlers. Therefore I am in favor of the homestead law. And I would be glad to see such restriction thrown around the homestead law as would require the entire five years' residence. If an individual desires to make a home upon the public domain for himself and family, and this Government proposes to give him the land for that purpose, only requiring a residence of five years, I do not see what hardship there can be. I believe it to be the true policy to reserve the public domain for the actual settler and cultivator under that condition. No one who desires to settle in good faith upon the public lands could object to it. I am willing, however, under the circumstances to accept two and a half years' residence before the privilege of commuting shall be granted.

In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Dakota I desire to say that every deduction of time is really of no benefit to the actual bona fide settler, while the benefit of time within which commutation can take place is in the interest of frauds like those now perpetrated under the pre-emption laws.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. I desire to inquire if it is in order to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments now pending.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to say anything unless I can offer an amendment.

Mr. DWIGHT. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on the Public Lands, of which I have the honor to be a member, are unanimously in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND]. I have heard the statements of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], and I concur in every one of them. The present system is one of the most vicious which can exist, and the statements he has made of fraud, perjury, and plundering the Government are, as I believe, literally true.

We came unanimously to the conclusion in the committee that this legislation should be enacted, and I trust that it will prevail. Now in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Dakota, I desire to say that in my judgment its adoption would be a great mistake. This Government undertakes to deal liberally with those who go out on the public lands to make homes for themselves and their families. It is no hardship for these men to live upon the land on which they settle for a period of five years. To do so I believe would be a benefit to the bona fide settlers and to those who settle upon the lands in good faith. It would be a benefit to them to extend the time, with the exception of so much as is allowed by law to those who have been in the military service. As it is, the time should be left at two and a half years. But, as I have already said, I believe it would be better if the actual settlers should be required absolutely to reside upon their homestead for five years. That would insure permanent settlement and improvements. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Dakota will not prevail. There can be no objection, and it is no hardship for a man who goes upon the land under the homestead laws in good faith, to require him to comply with the spirit as well as the letter of the homestead law. The man who wishes to speculate or who wishes to repeat the frauds now being perpetrated under the pre-emption laws might object to it, but certainly the actual settlers in good faith have no reason to object to it. Therefore I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Dakota will not prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I am in the main in favor of the proposition offered by the Committee on the Public Lands. I believe that the pre-emption laws ought to be repealed. I have no doubt that they have been used to a great extent, if not principally, for the perpetration of fraud. Of course there are persons who do make bona fide entries under it. But this amendment goes further and amends the homestead law. I am very heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Dakota, and think it ought to prevail. I have lived for a large part of my life among these public lands. I have seen thousands of settlers enter upon the lands, and have watched them year after year, and know from actual experience that it would be but justice and humanity to permit the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under certain restrictions, to allow persons who have taken homesteads to commute them after a certain length of time, a time sufficient to convince him of the bona fide intention of the homesteader. And I think twelve or eighteen months' time is ample to convince any one of the bona fide intention of the settler.

I have known instances where a man has come from the far East with his family, a poor man, settled upon a homestead under the law, intending to make a bona fide residence and a home, and perhaps after one year would lose his wife. He could not remain there upon the frontier with a large family of children under the circumstances. He is compelled in order to save himself to commute and pay the Government prices for it. If you deprive him of this right you do him a great injustice. I think now by fixing the time at eighteen months' residence that that would be ample to protect the great majority of settlers and amply protect the Government. Of course the Commissioner when he receives the testimony in such cases under the commutation act must determine whether the party has resided upon the land in accordance with the law and is entitled to the benefits of the law; and when this is done, and when he conforms to the requirements and tenders to the Government the price of that land, he should be permitted to pay for it and get his title. This in many instances would save the little property that a man has, and all that he has invested in his improvements. I think it would be a great injustice to say, as my friend from California says, that you would compel this man to go upon the frontier and brave its hardships and live there the whole five years before he can get his title. Why, in the first year it is often the case, and in fact most generally, that these settlers make large improvements. Often they invest all they have during the first year, showing their intention to become bona fide residents.

Mr. BERRY. Why do you want to remove the restriction and say one year's residence?

Mr. VALENTINE. And I think the amendment is just because it provides a sufficient length of time to determine whether or not they are actual residents.

Mr. BERRY. But if you bring the time down, tell me what is the difference between that and the pre-emption laws?

Mr. VALENTINE. Why, because I was about to say that under that law a man might get a title in forty-eight hours, but I believe that under the regulations of the Department it requires the homesteader to reside six months; and, as I say, I am willing to extend this to eighteen months, because it would be a great injustice to require these men to live the whole five years before getting their title when the fact of their bona fide intention is clearly established.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was passed, perhaps a great benefit would be conferred upon the people of this country. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Dakota should be adopted, you would have all of the bad effects of the homestead law without any corresponding benefit. In the first place, originally you will get the benefit of the advantages which are given under the homestead law; but if the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Dakota be adopted, you will also have in connection with it all of the bad effects of the pre-emption law, and in its worst form. I therefore hope that amendment will not be accepted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, legislation so manifestly wholesome and just as this hardly needs to be re-enforced by further debate. The policy of the Government in extending grants of land to railroad corporations was to open up undeveloped regions of the country and clear the way for bona fide settlement. It enabled combination and capital to do what was impossible to individuals and small bodies of settlers. It planted towns in the wilderness and on the plains and furnished communication with the older States. In short, it made possible that which seemed impossible without it.

In spirit and purpose its object was a right one. How far it may have been abused I do not propose to discuss here. It drew capital to the new Territories; it built States; it created enterprise; it developed wealth and enabled labor to own its home. Inseparable from the system itself was the gathering of landed estates in the hands of the few, almost baronial in their character. What this intermingling of capital, enterprise, and labor will result in, or rather what shall be the final net results of the policy as a whole, is a problem not yet wholly solved. Whether these great estates shall absorb the smaller ones until labor becomes dependent and land monopoly supreme, or whether they in turn shall be broken up and distributed among the actual tillers and owners of the soil, the future must determine. The system of land grants had its advantages and disadvantages; but whatever tracts were gathered together under it they were lawfully obtained. The policy of the Government invited it, and the individual who purchased had the undoubted right to do so. But dealing thus impartially with them there can be no doubt that the spirit of our form of government ought to be and is opposed to the gathering of large landed estates in the hands of the few. If this be so when lawfully acquired, how much more must it be when acquired in evasion of law through fraud? That this has been done and is being done by provision of the pre-emption laws admits of no manner of doubt.

Now, can there be any doubt that this is inimical to the interests of bona fide settlers, the men who break lands and who build estates? Why, sir, it needs no argument from anybody; it needs no investigation to convince anybody that where men only six months before settled on lands and took their solemn oath that they intended and desired to make it a homestead or a dwelling place are by the score in the same neighborhood on the same day and almost at the same hour seized with an epidemic to sell out and abandon their pre-emption claims, by which movement a single individual acquires estates reaching 10,000, 12,000, and 20,000 acres, that the whole proceeding is born in fraud and consummated in perjury, or that it is right in the teeth of the pre-emption laws and a mockery upon their pretended beneficence.

Nor does it require a moment's reflection or investigation to see that your timber-culture act is a mere travesty upon what it pretends to be. While these relinquishments are allowed every three or six months, or in steps and pauses of three years, the General Government does not get a tree; and the whole intendment of the law is thwarted and overthrown. I repeat that while these laws in some cases, in many I think, but subserve an honest and beneficial end, the abuses under them are so great and alarming that no more safe, judicious, or desirable legislation has been proposed in this Congress than that embodied in this amendment, which should be imbedded in the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. It is difficult to conceive more valuable legislation, considering the present condition of the public lands and the importance of the subject to the actual and bona fide settler, than the proposition which is brought before the committee on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] from the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Dakota, reducing the period of occupatian to entitle the settler to a patent, would in a large degree neutralize the advantages of the proposition of the committee.

The three measures—the present homestead law in its formerly injurious feature, authorizing the homestead settler to pay the minimum price and secure the issue of patent at an early moment; the pre-emption law securing patents in the same way at an early period after settlement, and the timber-culture act, with the interpretations placed upon it and the practice under it—have unquestionably impaired all the measures which have been enacted for the benefit of the actual settlers and to secure the public lands exclusively to them, and have been perverted to the benefit of the speculator and threaten to defeat the wise policy of the homestead law and the high purposes of the legislators who enacted it.

I hope the original proposition submitted will be adopted and that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Dakota will be rejected.

The original purpose of the homestead act was to secure homes for actual settlers, and not to facilitate speculation in the public lands. It required residence on the lands for a period of five years. That period of residence was deemed sufficient to indicate the purpose of the settler to make a bona fide honest settlement, and no one in the beginning of this legislation proposed or thought of any other than a period of five years.

But under the commutation clause, to which no importance was originally attached, the party settling under the homestead law, as under the pre-emption law, after a very brief period of residence is permitted to evade the very purpose and spirit of the law by purchasing the land at the minimum price and making the law a means of speculation, and not, as was intended, a beneficent method of securing homes for the landless. The spirit of the homestead law is against the sale of public lands in any form, and rests on the idea of securing the public domain to settlers, not to speculators.

But I am told, and I have no doubt about its being true, because it comes from a reliable source, that men of wealth seeking to secure titles to public lands employ parties who make entries under the homestead as well as the pre-emption laws, and even the timber law, a measure from which we had hoped the best results; and under these laws, by the payment of that mere bagatelle value of land, considered the minimum price fixed for the public lands, they acquire for speculation the most fertile and valuable portions of the public lands which under our policy were designed for the benefit of the bona fide settler only.

The period of two and a half years fixed in the amendment of the committee is short enough to indicate an honest purpose. And any man going westward to avail himself of our land policy to secure for himself a home will not object to a period of two and a half years; he will not object even to five years if he be a bona fide settler. And no gentleman having at heart the interest of the actual settler will propose any shorter period of time. The shorter period means speculation, for in truth the bona fide settler intends to secure his patent under the homestead law, which requires five years of residence; the speculator only proposes to make a purchase and get his patent at the earliest moment. The sale of the public lands was never justifiable. The highest interests of the Republic are against any sale of the public lands and always have been; the actual settler is alone justly entitled to public land.

I trust the committee will not hesitate on this subject, but will deem the limitation provided by the original amendment of two and one-half years exceedingly moderate and just. It is impossible any argument can or will be presented on behalf of the bona fide settler which would abbreviate the period proposed. None but speculators will object. I am confident my friend from Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] makes a mistake which he himself will ultimately regret when, overlooking the interest of the bona fide settler, he favors a measure which will only benefits speculators and would ultimately diminish the number of freeholders in that great State of the future and create that curse to mankind, great landed estates. Any policy which promotes the schemes of the capitalist weakens our institutions and destroys the equal condition and just expectations of our people. The policy and purpose of the homestead law was to give strength and permanence to our republican institutions by increasing the number of actual freeholders in the soil of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Clerk proceeded to read the letter. Before the reading was concluded,

The CHAIRMAN said: The five minutes of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] have expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the rest of the communication be printed in the RECORD after reading.

There was no objection. The letter in full is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1883.

SIR: In compliance with your request I hand you herewith a brief statement of the requirements of the general laws for the disposal of the public lands of the United States. These, not including the mineral laws, are the pre-emption laws, the homestead laws, the timber-culture laws, the desert-land laws, and the timber-land laws.

The homestead laws include the provisions for the commutation of homestead entries, and for the filing of soldiers' homestead declaratory statements.

THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

The requirements of the pre-emption laws are settlement, inhabitancy, and improvement of land by the pre-emptor for his own use and not for speculation nor for the benefit of another.

A pre-emptor has first to establish his residence on the land he wishes to enter. He may then file a pre-emption declaratory statement, which secures to him the preference right to acquire title to that land by inhabitancy and improving it for not less than six months, and by then paying the minimum price for it. If the land has been offered at public sale and is subject to private cash entry, he may purchase it by virtue of his preference right at any time within twelve months.

If it is "unoffered" land, or land not subject to "private entry," he may have thirty-three months within which to pay for it.

If no adverse claim intervenes he may pay for it at any time after the expiration of the twelve or thirty-three months.

Abuses.—The abuses are the evasion of the law for speculative purposes by filing declaratory statements when there is no residence on the land, and the subsequent fraudulent acquirement of title by false affidavit of inhabitancy and improvement.

In these fraudulent proceedings the pre-emptor is generally the tool of others who suborn the perjury and reap the benefits of the unlawful acts they cause to be performed.

The objects sought are, generally—

First. To obtain title to large quantities of land in violation of the restrictions of entry to actual settlers.

Second. To obtain valuable mineral, coal, or iron lands at less than the Government price.

Third. To obtain lands that are valuable chiefly for timber.

Fourth. To control the ranges in grazing districts by obtaining title to valleys or to shores of streams and water courses.

Fifth. To control the land under color of claim of record and hold the same for sale on speculation.

As the actual settler can obtain title under the homestead laws without the payment of price, and as a homestead entry is more secure than a pre-emption claim (for even the United States can not disturb a valid homestead entry), it follows that there is small legitimate occasion for pre-emption entries. Yet the number of pre-emption claims keeps fully abreast with the number of homestead entries.

A pre-emption declaratory statement may be sent to the land office by mail, or in any other way. It is not required to be sworn to nor authenticated in any manner. The opportunity for fraud is therefore practically unlimited.

THE HOMESTEAD LAWS.

The requirements of the homestead laws are settlement, residence, and cultivation for five years.

The party applying for the benefit of the homestead laws must make affidavit that his application is made for his own use and benefit; that he makes the entry for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the use or benefit of any other person.

After making such affidavit he has six months within which to establish his residence on the land.

If he or some member of his family is residing on the land when he makes his application to enter, the affidavit may be made before the clerk of the county court.

Otherwise the affidavit can be made only before the register or receiver.

Abuses.—The abuses are the same in character under the homestead as under the pre-emption laws, and under the commutation provision, through which the land can be purchased in the same way as by pre-emption, the abuses are of the same extent as under the pre-emption laws.

Where a fraudulent entry is made for the purpose of illegally obtaining title to the land, it is usually commuted to cash.

When made for the purpose of controlling the land and speculating in the relinquishment, it is not commuted.

There is no provision for filing declaratory statements under the homestead laws except by or for soldiers and sailors.

This provision is no advantage to the soldier or sailor. It gives him six months within which to establish his residence and make actual entry of the land. But he would have the same time without filing a declaratory statement, by making his application in the regular way. Everybody, including the soldier and sailor, has the same privilege.

The abuses of the soldier's declaratory statement are that soldiers are misled by land agents and attorneys into supposing that they have only to file a declaratory statement in order to obtain land, and that residence is not necessary to enable them to lawfully dispose of what they are told is their soldier's right. The consequence is that a great many soldiers have been and are now being defrauded of their money which they send to such agents, and never afterward hear of either land or money.

In other cases soldiers' discharge papers or other evidence of their military service are purchased from them generally by promises and used for making fraudulent filings for speculative purposes.

In both cases the declaratory statement is sold as a matter of common traffic, and when filed the relinquishment is offered for sale for the benefit of the speculator who controls it. The soldier gets nothing from these proceedings. He is made a party to a fraud without deriving any advantage from it.

Actual settlers avail themselves of the general privileges of the homestead laws without preparatory filings and without commutation. Their difficulty is that the public lands are so largely covered by fraudulent claims that they can usually make a bona fide homestead entry only after buying off these claims.

THE TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS.

The requirements of the timber-culture laws are that entries shall be made for the cultivation of timber, and for the use and benefit of the party making the entry, and not for the benefit of any other person and not for speculation.

Residence on the land is not required, and it is not necessary that the affidavit of entry should be made at the land office.

Applications signed anywhere in the United States are filed by agents or attorneys who cause a jurat to be attached thereto either in their own offices or through some confederate in the land district.

Other abuses are that the land is not as a rule entered for the cultivation of timber, but exclusively for the purpose of speculating in the relinquishment of the entries.

A simple entry holds the land for a year. A few dollars expended in breaking five acres the first year keeps the entry alive for the second year. A like small expenditure keeps it alive the third year. If these small expenditures are made, or are not proven not to have been made, the entry holds good. Meanwhile the relinquishment is offered for sale. The purchaser makes perhaps, or causes to be made, another fraudulent entry, the relinquishment of which he controls until he can find a purchaser at a profit, and the proceeding is kept up until some actual settler buys the land at a high price and enters it under the homestead or other laws.

Timber is not cultivated under speculative timber-culture entries, and there is no way of reaching the fraud except by a personal inspection of the land by officers appointed for that purpose, and not then until some years after entry if a few acres are occasionally plowed as a pretense of compliance with law.

The act of May 14, 1880.—Fraudulent entries of the public lands have always been the drawback of the public-land system, no provision for inspection ever having been made and no guards thrown around the different methods of disposal.

But entries fraudulently made or procured for the purpose of speculating in relinquishments is a feature which has developed into great proportions under the operation of the first section of the act of May 14, 1880.

This section provides that when a relinquishment of a pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry is filed in the local land office the land shall be held as open to entry without further action by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Previous to the passage of this act such relinquishments were forwarded to this office as a basis for the cancellation of the relinquished entry, and the land was not open to another entry until the former one had been canceled.

This proceeding did not prevent the sale of relinquishments of fraudulent entries, but was an impediment to wholesale traffic of that character, both because of the delay involved and because the transferee of the fraudulent entry had no certainty of securing the new entry. The relinquishment gave the purchaser no preference right to enter the land, which was open to entry by the first legal applicant after notice of cancellation was received at the local land office, and it was necessary for the parties to the scheme of transferring the fraudulent entry to keep a close watch for the receipt of the notice of cancellation in order to secure the new entry.

The first section of the act of May 14, 1880, removed all impediments to the easy and successful consummation of this class of frauds. Under the operation of this section the making and procurement of false, fictitious, and fraudulent filings and entries for the sole purpose of speculating in relinquishments of such entries and filings has been organized into an established business of great extent. The necessary papers are prepared and signed and attested in blank in advance of township surveys, and as soon as the plats of survey are filed in the local offices much of the lands in such townships are at once covered with the bogus claims, and then the operators have exclusive control of the land. The newspapers are filled with their advertisements of "relinquishments for sale," and settlers and persons seeking lands are compelled to go to these speculators and buy off the fraudulent claims before they can make legal settlement or entry of land so covered up and controlled.

As an example of this class of fraudulent entry and relinquishment I inclose herewith copies of three duplicate homestead receipts, each bearing a relinquishment dated on the same day on which the entries were made, thus conclusively proving the fraudulent character of the transaction. These relinquishments were sold to other parties on the 3d of the present month.

Relinquishments are always made to the United States.

The last party purchasing a relinquishment presents it at the land office simultaneously with his own application to enter the land. This secures an exclusive right of entry to the holder of the relinquishment, and it is this facility for which he pays, and it is the profit to be derived from selling such facility that inspires and promotes the making of fraudulent entries in the original instance.

THE DESERT-LAND LAWS.

Desert-land entries are restricted to lands which without irrigation will not produce some agricultural crop, and the amount of land permitted to be entered by any one person is limited to six hundred and forty acres.

The party making a desert entry pays 25 cents per acre at the time of application, and the remaining $1 upon making final proof of compliance with law, which proof may be made within the period of three years.

The abuses are that lands not desert in character are frequently entered; that the limitation of quantity is evaded by collusive entries which are afterward assigned to the real party in interest, and that the lands are held for various purposes of speculation rather than for the objects contemplated by the law.

THE TIMBER-LAND LAWS.

The timber-land act of 1878 applies only to the States of California, Oregon, and Nebraska, and to Washington Territory.

In other States and Territories timber lands are largely appropriated through fraudulent pre-emption and commuted homestead entries made in the interest and by the procurement of parties desiring to obtain the use or control of the timber.

There is no special provision for the disposal of timber lands other than the act of 1878.

The conditions of that act are that the land shall be valuable chiefly for timber but unfit for cultivation; that no one person or association shall be permitted to enter more than one hundred and sixty acres; that the entry shall not be made for speculation nor for the benefit of any other person than the party making the entry. The applicant is required to swear, among other things, that he has made no contract or agreement by which the title he may receive from the United States shall inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself.

These provisions are widely evaded. It is understood that large operators cause their employés and other persons to make the necessary affidavit, enter the lands, and then convey to their employers or principals. In this manner large tracts of timber land in California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territory are controlled by single persons and firms, contrary to the intendment of the statute.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

Hon. THOMAS RYAN, House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], which is to reduce the period of residence to one and a half years instead of two and a half years.

The question being taken on Mr. PETTIGREW's amendment, there were—ayes 9, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment to make the time two years instead of two and a half years.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman in charge of the bill agrees to accept that.

Mr. RYAN. What gentleman?

The question being taken on the amendment, there were ayes 2.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentlemen who have charge of the bill offered to accept that amendment, and now they will not accept it when they find they have a majority.

Mr. RYAN. I would as readily accept it as not; but you insisted on the other proposition.

The negative vote was counted, and was announced from the Chair as "noes" 89.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. VALENTINE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 20, noes 128.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment offered by Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, was then agreed to.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend by adding the following:

Provided, That the laws as to commutation of homestead entries, so far as the same apply to the lands in the State of Alabama, are not changed by this act nor any clause thereof.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

For the purpose of paying the expense of survey, appraisement, and sale of Fort Larned military reservation in the State of Kansas, as provided in an act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation," $2,500, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] the right was reserved to offer an amendment to come in just preceding the paragraph now read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. I will say that it is what is known as the "Pound" rule which was passed at the last session, with a single alteration, that it will now take four members to object instead of five as last year.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported from the Committee on Rules will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session of Congress it shall be in order, immediately after the approval of the Journal, to proceed in the House as in Committee of the Whole to the consideration, for the period of one hour, of bills and resolutions which shall have been previously reported by standing committees of the House, and such reports printed, and Senate bills and resolutions on the Speaker's table, which, or substantially similar measures, shall have received favorable action of appropriate House committees, in the following manner, to wit:

The Speaker shall call the standing committees in their order, whereupon, by direction of committees so called, not more than one measure may be called up for final consideration; if not more than four members object such consideration shall proceed, providing that debate on each bill or resolution shall be limited to ten minutes, exclusive of five minutes which may be occupied in reading reports of committees, the latter upon request of a member to be allowed prior to submitting the call for objections; this hour not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That should lie over one day.

Mr. ROBESON. Unless there is some objection to its present adoption, I will now call for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is objection.

Mr. REED. I should like to make an observation about it before it is adopted.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well; let it go over.

The SPEAKER. It will lie over one day under the rules.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation in the State of Nebraska.

FEES OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an abstract of the official emoluments and fees received by customs officers during the year which ended June 30, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID N. HARRISON.

Mr. RAY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7301, a bill (H. R. 7634) for the relief of David N. Harrison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TYLER asked and obtained consent to print in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him on the educational bill. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBESON. I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Joseph Scott and others, citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, relating to the establishment of a colored military school—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of W. T. Batchelor and 12 others, citizens of Wakefield, Kansas, asking that lumber be placed on the free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Papers relating to the claim of W. H. Wheeler—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COVINGTON: The petition of citizens of Deal's Island, praying for an appropriation to continue the improvement of the Lower Thoroughfare, Maryland—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. G. R. DAVIS: The resolutions adopted by the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, condemning the efforts being made to restore to the Army Fitz-John Porter—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. C. B. FARWELL: The petition of James Sturgis and others, officers of banks in Chicago, Illinois, urging the passage of the Monroe resolution providing for the repeal of Article XI of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HASELTINE: The petition of William Smith, relating to the compensation of postmasters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PEELLE: The petition of the Atlas Engine Works and 20 others, manufacturers of Indianapolis, Indiana, protesting against the admission of steam plows and engines free of duty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. B. RICE: The petition of 52 commissioned officers and more than 500 non-commissioned officers and private soldiers who served in the command of Brigadier-General S. D. Sturgis in the expedition into Northern Mississippi in June, 1864, asking that the said Sturgis be removed from his present position, for a full investigation of his conduct in the disastrous Guntown expedition, and for his dismissal from the service—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF: The petition of H. C. Fellows, relating to appropriations for Government surveys—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. VANCE: The petitions of ship-owners and merchants of New York, and of Bath, Maine, protesting against the adoption of section 13 in the bill relating to the American merchant marine—severally to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution asking immediate adjustment of land grants to railroads in this State.

Whereas millions of acres of land in this State have been granted to railroads and have been withdrawn from settlement and are untaxed; and

Whereas many of such grants have not been adjusted, and lands not falling within the grant are thus withheld from market and are untaxed; and

Whereas some of such grants have been forfeited by reason of non-compliance in part by the railroad company to which the grant has been made with intentions of the grant; and

Whereas it requires an act of Congress or the decree of a court to forfeit the land of a defaulting railroad company: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That the interest of the State and of the citizens requires that all land grants to railroads should be adjusted at the earliest possible day, or that in all cases when any railroad company has not complied with the conditions of the grant to it such grant should be at once declared forfeited.

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use all honorable means to secure an immediate adjustment of such grants or an immediate forfeiture of any grant the terms of which have not been complied with.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, requested to forward a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. WINDOM presented resolutions adopted by the Duluth Chamber of Commerce in favor of the location at Duluth of the proposed consolidated customs port; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a memorial of 2,500 persons, printers, binders, publishers, and others, engaged in the manufacture of books in the city of New York, remonstrating against the proposed change in the duties on books imported from foreign countries while the existing duties upon the materials used in the manufacture of books are to be maintained. This memorial did not reach me until after the Senate had acted upon that question in the revenue bill, but it is possible the question may yet come before the Finance Committee. I ask that this memorial, which states the facts very fully, as it is from very responsible persons, shall be sent to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. CALL presented a memorial of delegates from the constitutional convention of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senators and Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully and humbly present this their petition and memorial as follows, to wit:

We are citizens of Utah, authorized and instructed by the people of that Territory to do what is proper and possible for the preservation of their rights and liberties.

In their name we pray you to consider the situation in which your legislation may place them. We feel sure that you will at least hear us, since our worst enemies do not pretend that we have lost the right to petition for the redress of grievances.

For certain reasons, elsewhere given and which need not now be repeated, we are entirely satisfied that the act of March 22, 1882, was an assumption of power not granted to Congress by the Constitution. We admit, however, that we are not the ultimate judges of that question. If you shall be convinced that you, and not the Territorial government, have jurisdiction to legislate upon the subject of marriage, divorce, and other matters of purely private and local concern, and if you think it proper to exercise that power without regard to the nearly unanimous opinions of the people affected by it, then we beseech you to modify your law so that its penalties will be visited upon those only who commit the prohibited offense and are legally found guilty by a jury impartially selected.

We pray you to repeal so much of the act of March 22 as authorizes, or seems to authorize, the disfranchisement of persons who are not convicted, because it is a cruel punishment inflicted upon persons conclusively presumed to be innocent.

It is also hoped that the retroactive feature of your law will be eliminated. No grosser violation of common justice could be committed than a criminal law operating ex post facto.

Respectfully but most earnestly we protest against the commission appointed under the act of March 22. The people of the Territory had a clear and unquestionable right to choose their own local officers according to their own established laws. Congress decreed that this right should not be exercised except under the supervision of five persons to be appointed by the President. The commissioners, being appointed, undertook the duty but did not perform it. In consequence there could be no election without a conflict with Congress, which we were unwilling to bring on, however certain we were of being in the right. There was no election, and, as a legal consequence, the incumbents of the local offices held over agreeably to the statute in such case made and provided.

But an attempt was made to punish the people of the Territory for the default of the commissioners by seizing the local offices and public money into the hands of the governor and his retainers. And this, we are sorry to say, is asserted to be in accordance with what is called the Hoar amendment, hastily and inconsiderately stuck into the appropriation bill at the close of the last session. It is clear to us, and must be to you upon reflection, that this amendment has not and was not intended to have the effect claimed for it; but if the courts of the Territory should give it that construction all control of their own affairs would be taken out of the people's hands and free government in the Territory would be at an end. We submit to your candid judgment whether the repeal of this amendment is not due to the character of Congress as well as to the Territory of Utah. So, and so only, may all pretense be taken away for the perpetration of a huge political robbery.

The people of that Territory would be unfaithful not only to their own rights and the rights of their children but to the cause of liberty and justice everywhere if they did not remonstrate as earnestly as possible against the bill of pains and penalties reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. In open defiance of the Constitution it authorizes the capture and imprisonment of citizens, male and female, known and admitted to be perfectly guiltless of any offense. It violates the sanctities of the family by compelling husband and wife, lawfully married and living together in conjugal harmony, to testify against one another. By a legislative decree purely arbitrary it disfranchises all female citizens, though their right to the ballot is vested as clearly as that of the men, and though it is not pretended that they have done anything to forfeit it; the injustice would be no greater to extend this disfranchisement to the whole population, and that probably is expected to follow, either directly or indirectly.

The pending bill abolishes the election districts for members of the Legislature, and if it passes no election can be held unless a commission of Federal officers, known to be the bitter enemies of popular government, shall redistrict the Territory. This bill, passed in its present shape and added to the hostile measures of the last session, must almost necessarily result in the destruction of the Territorial Legislature, the seizure of the local offices, and the subjugation of the people to a state of ignominious slavery.

Whatever may be the extent of the jurisdiction over our local affairs which you may think it right to claim, we are safe in assuming that no honorable man in or out of Congress will stand up to defend measures forbidden, as these are, by the express words of the Constitution.

Nor can any excuse be found for them in the antipathy which is professed by many, and by some sincerely felt, for the doctrine of plural marriages. These penalties fall upon the whole population without reference to the personal guilt or innocence of individuals. They are stabs which reach the vitals of civil liberty and do not touch polygamy at all.

We bring no railing accusation against our enemies at home who have labored to excite animosity against us to break down our Territorial government and to rob us of the right to manage our own affairs by agents of our own choice. But we can not conceal from you the dread and terror with which we contemplate the bare possibility of being placed under their domination.

Possessed of despotic authority, with law in their voice, with unrestrained power in their hands, and a helpless people under their feet, they would act after their kind and plunder us without remorse. What chance of justice will we have if we submit to their exactions? What safety for our lives if we resist? With what reason can we hope to escape the fate of all other communities placed in that unhappy situation? Our case is even more forlorn in its outlook than any that modern history records. The men who are striving to become our masters claim the offices and funds of the Territory, which are our undoubted property, in defiance of law, justice, and the rights of self-government secured to us by the Constitution. If they succeed it would be mere madness to expect the smallest regard for our rights of private property or personal liberty.

The undersigned were specially intrusted by the convention which framed for the people the constitution under which they hope to be admitted as a State to lay that instrument before Congress and ask that proper action be taken thereon. Inasmuch as our constitution is faultless and our population much larger than that of some States already in the Union, we venture to hope that our admission will not be unreasonably delayed.

We implore you to take our case into your consideration and save us, so far as your sense of justice will permit, from the great calamities with which we are threatened.

And we will ever pray, &c.

JOHN T. CAINE.
F. S. RICHARDS.
D. H. PERRY.
W. D. JOHNSON, JR.

Mr. VEST. I present two petitions from more than a thousand workingmen, one from employés of the Nova Scotia Iron Company, in Dent County, Missouri, and the other from employés of the Saint Louis Stamping Company, praying that the tariff duty upon iron may not be reduced. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented resolutions of Maplewood Grange, No. 654, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pettis County, Missouri, and resolutions of Zion Grange, No. 1087, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lawrence County, Missouri, in favor of the establishment of a department of agriculture; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GROOME presented a petition of the Maryland Academy of Sciences, praying that the Signal Service Bureau be not transferred to the Interior Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SANDUSKY COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2445) to amend section 2603 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing the boundary of the collection district of Sandusky, to report it with a recommendation that the bill pass with a mere formal amendment made by the committee. I am also instructed to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It merely establishes the lines of the district as they have been understood to exist for fifty or seventy-five years, but a decision of the court determined that the district was bounded by other lines and renders this act necessary. The Secretary of the Treasury in a communication to the committee approves the bill reported, and I understand that it is in accordance with the desires and wishes of the people.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It amends section 2603 of the Revised Statutes, so as to read:

The district of Sandusky to comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Erie within the jurisdiction of the United States from the eastern bank of the Vermillion River to and including the western bank of the Portage River, in which Sandusky shall be a port of entry.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in line 9, before the word "port," to strike out "a" and insert "the;" so as to read:

In which Sandusky shall be the port of entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR WILLIAM LUDLOW.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I see it seems to be the general pleasure of the Senate to act upon bills as they are reported, as far as it is in my power I wish to withdraw the objection that I made yesterday to the bill reported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and assent to his taking it up now by unanimous consent. That seems to be the general notion of the Senate and I do not want to give one kind of fish to the Senator from Connecticut and another to the Senator from Minnesota, and so on. I apologize for having objected yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Connecticut when the routine morning business is through.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCDILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6597) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress to report an amendment to be proposed to the bill (S. 842) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, and I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I give notice that whenever I can do so without interfering with the regular appropriation bills, I shall ask a brief time on the part of the Senate to consider that bill.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase from Addison M. Sawyer his patent right for canister-shot, reported it with a favorable recommendation, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the District of Columbia some time since were instructed by a resolution to inquire into the subject of the routes and terminal stations of the railroads in this District. From the committee I report an original bill to define the routes of steam-railroads in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, which I ask may be twice read and placed upon the Calendar; and I give notice that at the earliest possible day I shall ask the Senate to act upon that bill.

The bill (S. 2505) to define the routes of steam-railroads in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen, known as the shipping bill, with certain amendments, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I further wish to state on behalf of certain members, a minority of the committee, that there is a new section incorporated in the bill which does not meet with the entire approval of all the members of the committee. It is a section which authorizes the Postmaster-General of the United States to contract with steamship lines and other vessels for the transportation of the mails of the United States upon ocean routes, the aggregate amount so expended under such contracts not to exceed a million and a half of dollars annually. With the exception of that section the committee are unanimous in reporting the bill. I give notice that after the Senate has completed the consideration of the bill now pending in regard to Utah, I shall ask the Senate to take up the shipping bill.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, praying for increased per diem and mileage of jurors and witnesses, to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee, I understand, has the subject under consideration.

The report was agreed to.

INDIAN CEMETERY AT SALAMANCA.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report favorably and without amendment the bill (H. R. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes; which I ask the indulgence of the Senate to put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It makes it lawful for the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York in the manner provided by their constitution, to quitclaim to the Wildwood Cemetery Association of the village of Salamanca, New York, duly organized under the laws of that State, not to exceed thirty acres of land within the village of Salamanca, as defined in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress, approved February 19, 1875, for cemetery purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Charles Dresser be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there being no adverse report.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to submit the conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report? The Chair hears no objection, and it is before the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 26, 27, 57, 67, 74, 75, and 77.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 31, 63, 64, 68, 69, and 70, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the sum of $89,400; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the word "four," where it occurs, and in lieu thereof insert the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the words "the vicinity of Fort Custer," and insert in lieu thereof the words "some suitable location on their reservation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And no contract by any such Indian, creating any charge or incumbrance thereon, or liability of said land for payment thereof, shall be valid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert the sum of $8,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert the sum of $8,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the sum of $70,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph, insert the following:

"And no portion of this sum, nor of any other sum appropriated by this act, for the support of Indian schools shall be paid for service rendered by any scholar taught in said schools during the period of his tuition, except for excess of value of labor over and above cost of tuition and support or either furnished by the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "repairing," in said amendment, insert the words, "and constructing;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and on page 44 of the bill, in line 8, strike out the words "and education" and in lieu thereof insert the words "education and transportation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out down to and including the word "made" in line 25, page 44 of the bill, and insert after said word the following words:

"Immediately available for the completion and furnishing of the school building and erection of outhouses near Arkansas City."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of $10,000; and at the end of said amendment insert the following:

"And also for the placing of children from all the Indian schools, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such children moral, industrial, and educational training for a term of not less than three years, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor."

And the Senate agree to the same,

H. L. DAWES,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS RYAN,
L. B. CASWELL,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAWES. The result of this conference may be stated in a very few words. As the bill passed the House it appropriated $5,208,955.91. There was added by the Senate $167,300, making a total as passed by the Senate of $5,376,255.91. The net reduction made in the conference from the Senate amendments is $12,600, as follows: Reduction in the appropriation for Sioux of Lake Traverse, $7,000; for Sioux of Devil's Lake, $7,000; for Indian police, $2,600; for transportation of children to and from Forest Grove school, $1,000, making the total reduction $17,600. The increase in the appropriation for removing Indians and property in consolidating agencies, &c., is $5,000, making a net reduction of $12,600. The amount of the bill as agreed to is $5,363,655.91; less than the appropriations for 1883, $111,748; less than the estimate for 1884, $1,362,075.63.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not see my way clear to sign the report, for reasons that I do not care to enlarge upon, but I desire to call the attention of the Senate now to the controversy chiefly in the committee, as it was also between the two Houses; that is, the appropriation for schools. The controversy here assumed the phase of a question as to the amount that should be given for the education of each Indian scholar, the Senate voting by quite a decided vote at one time that the amount at Carlisle should be $235 each.

I have had occasion to pay a little attention to the question of the subsistence and education of the poor people of the District of Columbia, both black and white, who I think so far as the obligation of the Government to them and to their needs is concerned, present and future, are quite as deserving as Indians. I find that in the Industrial Home School at Georgetown an average of more than one hundred children were taken care of by way of clothing, instructing, supporting generally, and educating in an industrial way on an average of about $70 per capita. I find that at the school or institution for the care of colored children the number is about the same and that the per capita is about $65 each. These two institutions are doing a work of great value, and just the kind of work which in my judgment should be done for the Indians; and yet we are doing, as I believe, a less valuable work for the Indians at nearly four times the cost; that is to say, we are educating the Indians at an expense to the Government of about four times what it costs to educate and care for white and black children who have just as much claim upon the Government, and who have been receiving just as much benefit from the diminished sum as the Indian children are receiving from the largely increased sum.

In connection with this statement I ask to have read a letter from a somewhat noted Quaker lady of Philadelphia, which sheds some light upon this question, written to Secretary Teller under date of the 29th day of January.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, First Month, 29*th*, 1883.

ESTEEMED FRIEND: After leaving thee that afternoon, with my papers ready for action, I had a talk with an official, who questioned me closely about the work and workers in certain agencies; also wished to know what the Quakers of Philadelphia thought of the proposed school for Indian girls in our city. I told him I never had heard of an approval. It would be a pet school and the girls would be spoiled and we fear not fit for home duties. We would approve of industrial schools on the reservations and the women taught in their homes to live a civilized life and make home attractive to their husbands. He (the official) wished to call and have a talk with thee about it; but I know thy time, as well as my own, was precious, so ventured to write thee.

I have made it my business to visit the schools and homes of Indians both in Canada and our own country, and find the former far ahead of ours in economy and work. At the Mohawk Institute, Bruntford, Canada, they have one hundred and thirty-six pupils, at the cost to government of $53 each for the last two years, and they do all the work, with the assistance of two workers—knitting, sewing, &c., everything. Do visit it; and for more particulars see ninth and eleventh months' council series, 1882, written by me. There are too many instructors; the children ought to be workers. Not one child at Thomas Asylum, New York, is allowed to remain in the school over 16 years of age, and they do everything like work in that institution. 'Tis employment that civilizes the Indian. 'Tis not all books that is needed.

My heart is in the work, and I do crave that you, who are at the head of this great work, may bow low before the Lord and ask Him to direct you, and do not move till He shall show you the way. We are all working for or against Him. I am willing to add my mite to the work of so great a field, and all I ask is to be aided as the way may open.

Thy interested friend,

HULDAH H. BONWELL,
912 Wallace street, Philadelphia.

Secretary TELLER.

Mr. PLUMB. I simply desire to express the conviction that if Indian education should be placed in the hands of people of a practical character such as those who have charge of the institutions of which I have spoken and such as the writer of the letter evidently is, we could educate four or five times as many children as we now educate for the money we are expending, and to a very great deal better purpose.

Mr. DAWES. Before this matter passes from the consideration of the Senate I desire that a single word more should be said. There are three kinds of schools for the Indians. One is the day schools at the agencies, another is the industrial schools at the agencies, and the third is the three schools at Hampton, Carlisle, and Forest Grove. The average cost of the scholar at the day schools is only $25 a year; at the industrial schools at the agencies it is $50 a year; at Hampton it is $167; at Carlisle and Forest Grove it is $200. There is a very much larger number at the day schools than at any of the others, and if you average the cost it would come somewhere nearer the cost of the schools that have come under the observation of the Senator from Kansas than would appear by his simple statement; I do not know how near it would come.

The Senate can see at once that there are many reasons why you can reduce to a minimum the cost of educating the scholar at the schools in this District much smaller than the minimum at present of educating the Indians, who are at arm's-length, a different character of person, requiring a different kind of teacher and a different kind of expenditure. If the country can be satisfied that the effort is an honest and earnest and economical effort in the expenditure of money, the country has made up its mind that the result also will be not only in the interest of economy of expenditure, but in the interest of a wise and humane solution of the Indian question by bringing sooner than by any other effort the Indian to a self-sustaining condition of life. He is to be in the very near future a citizen of the United State, absorbed in the body-politic; and every dollar expended in preparing him or the coming generation of Indians for that duty which they can not nor we escape, the better.

I think the Senator from Kansas will agree with me that the effort is an earnest and honest one, and in the main an economical one, and that with a sincere desire to make every dollar of the money go as far as possible we can see very many reasons why it can not come down to the minimum of the expenditure in this District, which is wise as well as economical and beneficent. I think there can be no occasion for any adverse criticism. I agree with the Senator that practical notions such as are expressed in the letter he has read commend themselves to those in the management of Indian affairs, the Indian schools especially, and think those at the head of the Interior Department are exceedingly practical and sensible.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I should be glad to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what became in the conference of the provision the Senate inserted in the bill for the relief of the Seminole Indians in Florida?

Mr. DAWES. I regret to say that the committee of conference on the part of the Senate were compelled to give up that appropriation in order to come to an agreement upon other points. I regret it because I wished that that sum of money might have been expended. Last year it was proposed by the Senate to expend out of the Treasury that sum of money to relieve us of all trouble about the treaties. This year it was proposed to take that sum out of the treaty appropriation. The conference committee on the part of the House were very firm in the conviction that that violated the provisions of the treaty, and it was necessary in order to agree in the conference to give up the appropriation.

Mr. CALL. I shall not delay the Senate or occupy its time by reiterating what has been stated before any further than to express my protest on behalf of the people of Florida and these Indians against the refusal on the part of Congress to do for them what is plain, sheer, undeniable justice. I merely wish to say that in violation of a positive treaty obligation on the part of the Government of the United States, for which no kind of pretense or excuse has ever been given, year after year this appropriation bill is passed asserting a positive falsehood which has no kind of support in either the history of the country or in any fact stated by any individual anywhere, and that is that the Indians in Florida, for whose benefit that provision of the treaty was made, have ever removed from that State. There is no kind of reason for that assertion; they have never removed; they are there; and year after year, contrary to the evidence in the case, this appropriation is made under that treaty for the benefit of the Seminole Indians in the West, upon the allegation as contained in the bill that they—that is, the part of the tribe "remaining in Florida" at the time of the treaty—have removed to the West, for which, I wish to state here, there is not the slightest degree of evidence and which is absolutely false.

I wish further to say that these Indians in Florida alone of all the Indians in the United States are not only left without provision for their support or their education, but that they had a treaty with the Government of the United States long before the treaty was made by which provision was made for those who should remove westward, giving to them per capita so much money, which has been denied to them without any kind of reason or excuse, without any provision in the treaty abrogating it, and without any consideration whatever on the part of Congress or the Government; yet they have surrendered their lands, they have deprived themselves of their homes, they have given the consideration required by the treaty, and year after year, of all the Indians in the United States in like case, they alone are left without the least recognition or without the least care or attention by Congress. Such violation of the solemn treaty obligations of the United States, such indifference both to the claims of humanity and of justice is a reproach to ourselves and the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM H. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. J. H. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. THOMAS RYAN of Kansas the conferees on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CAPITOL, NORTH O STREET AND SOUTH WASHINGTON RAILWAY.

Mr. ROLLINS. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this conference report? The Chair hears no objection, and it is before the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from the amendment numbered 3.

E. H. ROLLINS,
JAMES W. McDILL,
Z. B. VANCE,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

R. B. F. PEIRCE,
ROBERT KLOTZ,
SAM. F. BARR,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to have the bill read as it will stand if we agree to the conference report.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company is hereby authorized to extend its line, by laying a single or double track, and running its cars thereon, on the following streets in the city of Washington, namely: Commencing with the intersection of its present line at Eleventh and E streets, northwest, and running east along E to Ninth street; thence south along Ninth street to Louisiana avenue; thence southwest along said avenue to Ohio avenue; thence west along Ohio avenue to its intersection with its present line at the junction of Ohio avenue and Twelfth street, northwest.

SEC. 2. That unless said extension is constructed and the cars run thereon within six months from the passage and approval of the act, all rights granted hereunder shall be void: Provided, That no new track or tracks shall be laid along Ninth street from D to Louisiana avenue, but said company may use the tracks of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company between said points, upon such terms and conditions as may be provided in the original act of incorporation of said Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company.

Mr. INGALLS. Now read the first amendment that was agreed to by the conferees.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, "Tenth," where it first occurs in line 8, was stricken out, and "Ninth" inserted; so as to read:

And running east along E to Ninth street.

And all after "street," in line 8, was stricken out down to and including "street," where it occurs the second time, in line 9, section 1; so as to read:

Thence south along Tenth to D street; thence east along D to Ninth street.

Mr. MORRILL. In other words, I understand the Senate gives up its amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS. No; the Senate does not.

Mr. INGALLS. Now read any amendments that are not agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. The House agrees to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. INGALLS. Now let us hear the amendments which were disagreed to.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Provided, The said company shall reimburse the United States and the District of Columbia for the cost of paving that part of said streets which it shall occupy by virtue of this act according to the requirements of their charter in respect of other streets occupied by said company.

Provided further, That said railway company and all street or tramway companies in the District of Columbia shall pay the full amount of the original cost, and of maintaining the same in good order, of grading and laying the number of feet required by their respective charters over the streets and avenues occupied by them, namely: the tracks, between the tracks, and two feet on the outer edge of the same; and a refusal to pay such tax when notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia of the amount due for said original improvements the same shall work a forfeiture of the charter of the company so refusing.

And subject always to the right of Congress at any time to repeal or amend the said charter or any amendments thereto, and to establish such regulations in the use of the franchises thereby conferred as may by it be deemed reasonable and proper.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I understand that if this conference report is agreed to this street railroad has the right to occupy this newly paved street for the purposes of its track without any compensation to the Government or to the District of Columbia for the amount that has been expended for the grading and repavement in the past few months? I should like the Senator to state.

Mr. ROLLINS. If this conference report is agreed to this railroad will have the same privileges that other street railroads have had in the past. The other street railroads have been required to do only this, to maintain the road between the tracks and for two feet each side. That this street railroad will be compelled to do in all time to come. That is just what all other street railroads have been required to do. This requires the same thing of this company, no more and no less. It puts them on an equality with all other street railroads in the city. It was thought that that was just and proper.

Mr. INGALLS. When this matter was under debate in the Senate it was, I believe, agreed that the provision with regard to paving and repairing only applied to the specific road defined in the original act of incorporation authorizing this road to be constructed. Now, unless some provisions are incorporated in this bill requiring them to keep the pavement in repair between their tracks and for two feet on each side they are not subject to the same conditions that were imposed upon other roads in this city.

I regret very much that the Senator from New Hampshire has deliberately abandoned the amendments that he himself offered in the Senate and admitted the necessity of. It will be remembered that the Senator from New Hampshire himself proposed these amendments, admitted their necessity, and proposed that in addition to the requirements to be imposed on this railroad similar provisions should attach to the other horse-railroads occupying streets in the city.

After the Senator had himself admitted that this was essential, after it is agreed that unless these amendments be adhered to this street railway will have the use of that street without keeping the track in repair or the pavement upon the two sides of their rails, why is it, and what influences have been brought to bear by which the author and promoter of these amendments has seen fit to abandon them? It looks to me a little singular, Mr. President.

Mr. ROLLINS. It may seem a little singular to the Senator from Kansas, but I take square issue with him in reference to his statement of facts. I say that this corporation will be required to keep its track in order, the space between the two tracks and two feet on each side, under the charter as it now stands upon the statute-books of the land. I say further that I have not abandoned anything that I advocated here in the Senate. I stated to the Senate that I thought this amendment which was ingrafted on the bill by a vote of the Senate ought to be voted down.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator offered it as an amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS. I did offer the last amendment for the sole purpose of showing the impropriety of the original motion. That was the object which I had in view when I offered it. When it was offered I advised the Senate to vote it down, because it was an amendment which was undertaking to forfeit the charter of the present street railroads, going further than I thought Congress had a right to go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 19.

GALLUS KIRCHNER.

Mr. FRYE. I present the conference report on House bill No. 2013.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine presents a conference report. Will the Senate proceed to its consideration? The Chair hears no objection, and the report is before the Senate.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 2013, entitled "An act referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the House bill with the following amendment:

Add, after the word "any," in the last line, the words:

"Provided, That no judgment shall be rendered for any such stone used in the construction of the main arsenal building."

And that the House agree to the same.

WM. P. FRYE,
D. W. VOORHEES,
JOHN SHERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
STANTON J. PEELLE,
S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and said motion shall be decided without debate.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that will go over.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to save a question of order on that resolution, which I will make to-morrow when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

DUPLICATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yesterday I offered a resolution directing the Public Printer to bind duplicate sets of bills and resolutions of the Senate and House, which was laid over on the suggestion of several Senators that the number ought to be increased. The number is the same as already bound and will make two hundred and fifty volumes—one hundred and twenty-five of bills and one hundred and twenty-five of resolutions. The document-room has no space for more. Therefore I think the resolution had better pass as it was reported.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to bind duplicate sets of bills and resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, said bills and resolutions to be furnished him from the files of the Senate document-room, and the volumes when bound to be kept there for reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island calls up for consideration this resolution. It is before the Senate, no objection being made. The question is on its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

[A pause.] The Chair hearing no response declares the morning business closed.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone the Calendar, my object being to take up the naval appropriation bill, which I am entirely confident can be disposed of in a few minutes, as we have reached now merely formal amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to postponing the Calendar?

Mr. BROWN. After that bill is disposed of I shall move to take up the Calendar, giving preference to House bills favorably reported.

Mr. HALE. I move to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Calendar is postponed——

Mr. HALE. Let it be postponed until the naval bill is finished. The motion of the Senator from Georgia will be as much in order afterward.

Mr. BROWN. I do not want to antagonize the appropriation bill, but only give notice that after it is disposed of I shall move to take up the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business at 1 o'clock is the Utah bill. Is there objection to postponing the Calendar? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. Now I move to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. The Senate have finished the consideration of the bill itself and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as incorporated in the bill when reported. There are one or two matters which I wish to present now. On page 5——

Mr. ROLLINS. I should like to inquire what is the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS].

Mr. HOAR. What is that amendment?

Mr. HALE. I have not had an opportunity of presenting the amendments of the committee yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS].

Mr. HARRIS. A question of order was raised and not disposed of last night.

Mr. HALE. I beg pardon. I thought it was disposed of. Then of course that is the first in order.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is to add at the end of the bill:

SEC. 4. That the President shall appoint a board of nine officers of high rank on the active or retired list, who shall, before the 1st day of October, 1883, thoroughly scrutinize the active-list of the Navy, and shall select therefrom six rear-admirals, ten commodores, forty captains, eight commanders, seventy lieutenant-commanders, two hundred and forty lieutenants, seventy masters, seventy ensigns, one hundred midshipmen, ten medical directors, ten medical inspectors, forty-five surgeons, eighty-five assistant and passed assistant surgeons, eight pay directors, eight pay inspectors, thirty-five paymasters, fifteen passed assistant paymasters, ten assistant paymasters, five chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, ten chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, forty chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant, fifty-five passed assistant engineers, thirty-five assistant engineers with the relative rank for each as now fixed by law, twelve chaplains, six professors of mathematics, eight naval constructors, four assistant naval constructors, three civil engineers, thirty boatswains, thirty gunners, thirty carpenters, and twenty sailmakers, to be retained on the active-list of the Navy, to discharge the current duties of the service under the law and regulations governing it; and all others now on said list shall be considered supernumerary, and shall be placed on a separate list, not entitled to promotion, and with leave-of-absence pay, but subject to be ordered to service with the proper pay of their grade only in time of war; and they shall retire on reaching the age as fixed by law, or at any time before reaching that age, on their own application; and the officers so retained as above provided shall be entitled to their promotion, after proper service and examination, as vacancies may occur, without regard to the officers remaining on the supernumerary list: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to remove from the active-list the Admiral and Vice-Admiral of the Navy, nor in any manner to affect the status of any officer who has received a personal vote of thanks of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order, I suppose, is that this is general legislation. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ROLLINS. I merely wish to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable.

Mr. ROLLINS. Debate upon the bill is in order, I think.

Mr. HALE. The point of order has been stated, and I have no objection if the Senator desires to say something upon the matter.

Mr. ROLLINS. I merely wish to say that when the amendment which I propose was prepared I supposed there would be some general legislation in the bill. The Committee on Appropriations subsequently reported to strike out all or substantially all the general legislation until it reaches the very close of the bill; then an amendment was made by the committee which was admitted to be general legislation, but because it provided for carrying out the law of last year, the law of August, 1882, it was admitted. With that precedent established in the Senate I ventured to move the amendment which I proposed last evening, the object of which is simply to carry out the provisions of the act of last August. We are told in different directions that the Navy is top-heavy; that it should be reduced. In the appropriation bill of last August a proviso was inserted that provided for an ultimate reduction of the personnel of the Navy. This amendment which I have offered proposes to reach that object at an early day and to save thereby between $100,000 and $200,000 per annum.

Mr. LAPHAM. Let me inquire where the Senator proposes to introduce his amendment?

Mr. ROLLINS. As an additional section to the bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to him that I had prepared one on the same subject, to come in as a proviso after line 124.

Mr. ROLLINS. My amendment is ruled out of order, and I do not propose to occupy the attention of the Senate more than a moment. This amendment aimed to accomplish that result of which I spoke, at an early day, by putting upon a separate list with less pay a large number of officers who are not required for the service and who can be well spared; the efficiency of the naval service would not be at all impaired by their being relieved from duty. To-day there is very little for a large number of naval officers to do; they are assigned to our navy-yards, two or three times as many officers as are required. Why? Simply because there is nothing else for them to do. All the pay-roll of these officers is charged up against the navy-yards and goes to show the extravagance of the work performed by the Government at the various navy-yards of the country.

This is substantially all I desire to say in explanation of the reason why I introduced the amendment. I am sorry that it is ruled out of order, for I believe it would accomplish a much-needed reform in the Navy, that it would improve the personnel of the Navy and give those who are really deserving on the active-list a chance for promotion which they do not now have.

Mr. HALE. On page 5, line 109, I move to add, after the word "orders," the words:

And for actual and necessary traveling expenses of naval cadets while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment of cadets.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 19, line 443, after the words "all which," I move to insert:

Vessels, except their armament.

So as to read:

And for the construction of all which vessels, except their armament, the Secretary of the Navy shall invite proposals, &c.

Mr. ROLLINS. Is that an amendment of the committee?

Mr. HALE. It comes from the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 10, line 215, after "steam-hammer," I move to add "or apparatus;" so as to read:

Including the cost of a steam-hammer or apparatus of sufficient size for the manufacture of the heaviest guns.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 20, after the word "Government," in line 476, I move to add:

The services and expenses of the two civilian expert members of the naval advisory board may be paid from the appropriations for the increase of the navy, not exceeding $11,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. Eleven thousand dollars for how long a period of time?

Mr. HALE. That covers the work they have done and is for the year to come.

Mr. ROLLINS. Including the next fiscal year?

Mr. HALE. For the next fiscal year.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I inquire of the Senator from Maine the character of the duty performed by these gentlemen who are termed "experts?" Is it necessary to go outside of the Navy Department to employ experts at a salary of $5,500 a year to do that thing which we supposed the officers of the Navy were qualified of themselves to do?

Mr. HALE. That is not a question for us to settle. The bill of last year provided how the board should be made up, and that it should comprehend these experts and that no officers of the Government should receive additional pay. There has been no provision made for them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know it provided for experts, but the question is whether it meant an expert outside of the Navy Department.

Mr. HALE. It provided that there should be outside experts.

Mr. McPHERSON. Why experts outside of the Navy Department? Is it an admission that we have no experts in the Navy Department?

Mr. HALE. I for one am very thoroughly of opinion that on any of these great subjects-matter touching the building up of a great new American navy we ought to have, and we need, in addition to any talent I have been able to find in the Department, the services of experts, skilled scientific men, outside of the Department. That is my belief.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know but that it is a very wise provision, and I shall offer no objection to it, but at the same time it is a very humiliating confession.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 25, line 601, I move to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to read:

Twenty-two second lieutenants.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 14, line 310, after the word "hundred," I move to insert "and sixty-four;" so as to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of yards and docks from $200,000 to $264,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the committee recommend that?

Mr. HALE. The amendments that I have been offering have been such as were suggested by the Department and mainly in the way of curing defects in the bill. This amendment, I am bound to say in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut, the committee has not agreed to. It is an amount that is requested in the original papers sent to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary in order to keep up certain yards until the 1st day of July. If this is not appropriated these yards will be closed. If the additional $64,000 I have moved is granted the yards now in maintenance will be kept up until the 1st of July. That is all there is of it.

I do not offer it from the committee, because the committee did not agree to it; but I have been requested to offer it, and I know that if the yards are to be kept up it is necessary. I shall be glad to see it adopted, but I do not in that speak as the organ of the committee; and if the Senate believes that it is not needed, of course it will vote it down.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is then practically a deficiency of $64,000.

Mr. HALE. There will be no deficiency, because if the amount is not granted the Secretary will close certain yards. The Secretary will follow the law; he will follow the limitations fixed in it; but if this money is not given the yards will be closed; there will be no deficiency. It is for the Senate to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. There is one more amendment, a change of phraseology. and 178, I move to strike out:

In the appropriations for the Bureau of Navigation, on page 8, lines 177

For special equipment of ocean-surveying vessels, $10,000.

And insert:

For special ocean surveys and the publication thereof, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have no more amendments to offer.

Mr. LAPHAM. In line 2, section 2, on page 29, after the word "duty," I propose to insert "except in cases specially provided by law;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That hereafter no officer of the Navy shall be employed on any shore-duty, except in cases specially provided by law, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue.

I am sure there will be no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. What is sought to be reached by that?

Mr. LAPHAM. It covers certain temporary employments of naval officers provided for by special act.

Mr. HALE. What kind of employments are they?

Mr. LAPHAM. I cannot specify.

Mr. ROLLINS. What is the proposition?

Mr. LAPHAM. To except in section 2, line 2, the class of cases where the law now provides for the employment of naval officers on shore duty.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think the whole second section ought to be stricken out. I do not see anything accomplished by it except to make more difficulty in the settlement of accounts in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HALE. It is the law now.

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly the Secretary of the Navy ought not to have an absolute discretion in this respect. There are certain classes of cases where naval officers are employed by virtue of special provisions of law.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read again. If I understand it correctly I shall not raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of Mr. LAPHAM.

Mr. HALE. That does not seem to change existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does change existing law. I make the point of order. If it merely enacts existing law it is wholly unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is "except in cases specially provided by law."

Mr. LAPHAM. It does not repeal any existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is not an existing law they can not be employed. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. LAPHAM. There are only a very few cases to which it will apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the consent of the Senator from New York I offer an amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs to insert as a new section the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to build one gunboat of an experimental type, not to draw more than twelve feet of water, $200,000: Provided, That said vessel can carry one high-powered, breech-loading rifled cannon, of not less than ten inches caliber, and said vessel to have full maneuvering power, such as to be able to use the whole power of the main engines for maneuvering purposes, so as to be able to turn around on her center without either advancing or receding, and so that the gun may be aimed by the movements of the vessel itself, and not require other means of training in order to fire with accuracy; and said vessel to have a speed of fifteen miles per hour.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I wish to interpose the point of order. Mr. President——

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator from Rhode Island in this amendment, because it seems to me to be the only feasible way of creating a new navy. It is for an experimental ship which is only to cost $200,000; it is to be built by contract; and failing to perform all that is required of it, the contractor is not to be paid. This ship, costing $200,000 only, will, in my opinion, do more efficient service than the experimental ships for which we yesterday agreed to appropriate a million dollars; but I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Rhode Island who offers this amendment if he will have the kindness to inform me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is raised to this amendment. If the point is sustained debate is not in order.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I took the floor before the point of order was raised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A Senator can rise to a point of order at any time.

Mr. HALE. The point of order was raised.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Rhode Island who has offered the amendment, and I hope he will have the kindness to inform me, if this amendment has been submitted to the Secretary of the Navy? It seems an audacious proceeding for a Senator, even so respected and experienced in naval matters as that honorable Senator is known to be, to offer so important an amendment to the Secretary's budget—I will not say budget of plunder—without first having his permission. Perhaps, however, the Senator has that permission, for I noticed in the public press that a few days ago the honorable Secretary was in his neighborhood and an outraged and indignant Senator drove him from the floor for too much noisy zeal in furthering his scheme to the Senate lobbies—to say that he was not at home there would be to sacrifice truth and challenge history.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not in the habit of asking the permission of the head of a Department when I offer an amendment, and as for the occasion to which my friend from New Jersey alludes, I think that his remarks are exceeding inopportune. The Secretary of the Navy was upon the floor of this Chamber, as he has a right to be according to our rules, and he did not approach me, but I approached him, and several Senators were there, near the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who was speaking, and he made some suggestion about the noise, which is frequently done by Senators who are speaking; but there was nothing on the part of the Secretary of the Navy that was obtrusive or unseemly in any way. I addressed him; he did not address me.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island and the honorable Senator from Illinois appear to differ in regard to what was going on. I deal only with the fact which has become history.

Mr. ANTHONY. His rebuke was as much to me as it was to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have the floor. I do not yield. I have a great respect for the President of the United States; he is entitled to my respect, and he is entitled to the respect of every fair-minded man for giving to this country thus far an administration not less worthy of approval than any which has ever preceded it; but when this bill we are now enacting becomes a law, as it certainly will, for the Secretary of the Navy has so ordained and determined, I fear even the President will become convinced that mistakes are possible. Starting and leading in assigned rank in his list of advisers we find character and qualifications the purest and best, but before reaching the end of the list unfortunately we have descended by one gigantic stride to the lobby, with all that that name implies. When this bill becomes a law and the full measure of power contained therein is exercised and its results are seen the American people will then learn that extraordinary power has again been lightly yielded by their representatives here.

Mr. ANTHONY. This amendment comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am instructed by that committee, or rather the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] was instructed by that committee, to offer this amendment, and the Senator from Florida asked me to do it, and I have done it.

The presence of the Secretary of the Navy on this floor was in pursuance of our rules. He was sitting and talking with the Senator from New Hampshire and my colleague and myself, and others went up and spoke to him. He did not commence any conversation with us, and nothing on this subject was said in my hearing.

Mr. ROLLINS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Jersey had yielded the floor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know but that the persistency of the Senator from New Hampshire will compel me to yield the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Jersey had yielded the floor, and taken his seat, having concluded his remarks.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will close them now.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well. Mr. President, am I entitled to the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROLLINS. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey with a great deal of surprise. His criticisms upon the action of the Secretary of the Navy were ungenerous, unjust, indecent. The Secretary of the Navy came into the Senate Chamber and was sitting at my side, not talking about naval bills or naval appropriations. Several Senators came to have a little conversation with him, among them the honorable Senator from Rhode Island. Two or three Senators were engaged in that conversation, and the voices that disturbed the Senate and interrupted the Senator from Illinois were not the voice of the Secretary of the Navy, but the voices of the several Senators engaged in conversation with the Secretary of the Navy. Therefore I say that the attack of the Senator from New Jersey upon the Secretary of the Navy is ungenerous and unjust in the extreme, and I trust it will not be repeated.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let us have the point of order settled. The Secretary of the Navy will take care of himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is raised on this amendment, and in the opinion of the Chair it is well taken. This is a proposition to build a gunboat; and if there is anything that is general legislation, that is it. It requires both Houses of Congress to order it before it can be done. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ANTHONY. I apprehended that point of order, but I thought it would come from my friend on my left [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I did not notice that he was here when I offered the amendment. I did not apprehend the Senator in charge of the bill would make this point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not make the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir; you did not.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that I should have made the point of order if I had observed that the Senator from Vermont was in his seat.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to offer a small amendment to this bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. I thought I had the floor to offer an amendment when I yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senator from New York yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island he yielded permanently; but the Senator from New York will have an opportunity presently.

Mr. BUTLER. This will only take a moment, I will say to the Senator from New York. On line 139, page 7, there is an item in these words:

For putting in order and preserving the grave of Paul Hamilton, a former Secretary of the Navy, the expenditure therefor not to exceed $50.

I move to strike out "50," in line 141, and insert "100."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order, but I do not object.

Mr. BUTLER. I move the amendment on the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy. He has written me a note on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, according to the Senator from New Jersey, is a breach of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. I will leave my friend and the Senator from New Jersey to settle that when I get my amendment in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer an amendment which I will send to the Secretary's desk in a moment, to come in at the end of line 124. I do this, I may be permitted to state, upon the application of a large number of those who had entered the service of the Government as cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis prior to the passage of the act of August, 1882, which destroys the contracts they had entered into with the Government as to all of them except ten each year. At the end of line 124 I move to insert what I send to the desk.

It seems to me, with great deference, that this ought not to be done. These young gentlemen, one of whom was placed there upon my own nomination, who was the son of Admiral Craven, of Geneva, in my old Congressional district, are, if he is a sample of them, the brightest young men in the service of the Government to-day, and entitled to consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Provided also, That no cadet appointed to the Naval Academy prior to the passage of the act of August 5, 1882, shall in any manner be affected by said act, but shall be retained in the service in all respects as if said law had not been passed.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I insist that this is not open to the point of order, for the reason that I offer it as an amendment to a section expressly providing by way of legislation for an increase of the terms of commissions of officers in the Navy. It seems to me, therefore, it is entirely germane and a proper subject to be offered by way of amendment.

Mr. HALE. It is germane enough, but it is new legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is unquestionably germane to the general subject; no point of order can be raised on it on that ground; but the point is that it is altering the law on this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is altering a law which was put in an appropriation bill at the last session, which ought to be corrected in the appropriation bill at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not decide upon the propriety of the action.

Mr. VANCE. It seems to me that the section under consideration changes the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That does not make a whit of difference in relation to an amendment which is subject to a point of order.

Mr. VANCE. We are brought by this decision precisely to the same point as at the last session of Congress; that is to say, where there was a change in the law in the bill, which itself was out of order upon an appropriation bill, the Chair held, as I remember, that an amendment to it was out of order, although the section to which it was offered changed existing law, and it was out of order by reason of the existing law. Now, if that point of order is sustained I give notice that inasmuch as these young men were dismissed from the service summarily, contrary to what was done when the West Point Academy was reformed, for there was an express exception and reservation of the rights of those who were then in the Academy, I shall to-morrow during the morning hour ask unanimous consent to take up the bill which I reported this morning by the instruction of the Naval Committee to change the law, and I hope there will be unanimous consent to it if the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LAPHAM. I trust that I may be permitted to say that these young gentlemen, though graduating with the highest honors of their class, will next August have to go down to the position of common seamen, or else quit the service. Their contract with the Government is broken and destroyed. I hope no such thing will be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not consider hard cases in deciding points of order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am aware of that; I am not complaining of the President. I am giving notice to the Senate of the equities that justify something being done.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to offer an amendment in line 370, page 16, after the word "million" to insert "one hundred thousand."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that for?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will explain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 370, after the word "million," it is proposed to insert "one hundred thousand;" so as to read:

One million one hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the connection? What is that for?

The ACTING SECRETARY. So that the paragraph will read:

For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; preservation of materials; purchase of tools; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair, and incidental expenses, namely, advertising and foreign postage, $1,100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That increases an item of appropriation. Is that in order?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think it is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How?

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been reported from a committee, and has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not know that it has.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule is that no amendment to increase an item of appropriation shall be in order unless moved by direction of a standing or select committee and referred a day beforehand to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I trust the Senator will not make the point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, let me hear a statement of the case.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will explain the purpose of the amendment. It will be observed that the estimate for construction and repair of vessels made by the Navy Department was $1,750,000. That has been cut down to one million in the bill. I am informed by the Department that if this appropriation is not raised it will be impossible to continue the work upon the Mohican, which is on the stocks at Mare Island. The Mohican has been on the stocks now for a little over nine years, and it is in that condition that it is necessary to continue the work in order to save what has already been expended upon it. The chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair in his report says:

The work on the Mohican, now on the stocks in the Mare Island yard, should be pushed to completion this year, as the vessel has already suffered somewhat from being out in the open air exposed to the weather. Her frame is of live oak, and if she is completed will give us another vessel of the Marion and Swatara class, a very successful and satisfactory class of vessels. She is 216 feet between perpendiculars, 38 feet breadth of beam, ship-rigged, having a sail surface of 14,150 square feet in her ten principal sails. Like the other vessels, she can carry an armament of one 8-inch, six 9-inch, one 60-pounder, or its equivalent in weight of more modern guns. Her draught of water, when ready for sea, is intended to be 14 feet 6 inches forward and 17 feet 6 inches aft, and at this draught her displacement will be 1,800 tons.

This is a steamer of the Marion and Swatara class, and she is nearly ready for the engines.

Mr. HALE. It is simply continuing the work?

Mr. MILLER, of California. Simply continuing the work. It is a new vessel and is of the same kind recommended by the advisory board for wooden vessels to be hereafter built. Her berth-deck is in, and the frames for the spar-deck are ready to put in. It is partly planked. If the work is now stopped before the through-fastenings are put in, and they can not be put in until it is planked, the vessel will suffer great injury and loss. The question presented here is whether we shall go on and finish this vessel or give it up entirely. I ask for only $100,000; and there has been $119,000 spent upon the vessel besides what has been spent upon the engines. The engines will be ready by next July to put in the vessel and she can be launched by next November.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not make the point of order on this particular case.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is this a wooden vessel?

Mr. MILLER, of California. A wooden vessel, a new vessel, a wooden cruiser.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] wish to move any amendment?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know but that it would be just as well for me to move the amendment I shall propose in the Senate. I will wait until the bill is reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any amendment which a Senator wishes to reserve for a separate vote?

Mr. INGALLS. I fear very much that the committee will find themselves in a predicament when the bill goes to a conference. The Senator from Maine has resisted all portions of the bill that came from the House proposing general legislation. They have been ruled out upon points of order. The committee reported as an additional section to the bill section 3 as it now stands, which is confessedly general legislation. When the bill goes into conference, if the Senator from Maine insists upon the action of the Senate in striking out general legislation, our conferees will be confronted by the awkward and ugly fact that they have themselves inserted a proposition proposing general legislation. The result will be then that they will be brought face to face with these very important amendments of the Senate proposing to strike out matters that came from the House which were general legislation, upon which there has been no discussion whatever in the Senate, and they will be obliged to decide and we shall be obliged to concur or non-concur with the report of the conference committee upon very important matters which have never been discussed at all.

I should think, in order to make the bill symmetrical and harmonious and in a position to be sustained, the Senator from Maine had better abandon that amendment unless he proposes to discuss the propositions that have been made upon the bill as it came from the House. Is seems to me that we shall be confronted by a very disagreeable emergency unless he does.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator from Kansas has called attention to this matter. It was brought up last night, but the Senate was very thin, and it is well that it should be again touched upon by a full Senate.

Section 3, I think, is subject to the point of order that it is technically new legislation, and therefore avoids our rule and what we are trying to set on foot as the practice of the Senate now, but in spirit and in purpose it is not a violation of the rule, because it is not new legislation changing any law.

I will state what the third section covers simply. Last year Congress by law provided that the Secretary of the Navy should sell no ships or material; that he should pass upon any vessels that he found of not much or any use in the Navy; and if he struck them from the list he should report them to Congress for the action of Congress in reference to their sale. That made it incumbent upon him to do one thing, to report the salable property and useless property to Congress. That made it also incumbent upon Congress to do another thing, and that was to provide the safeguards for the sale.

The committee has reported this amendment carrying out the law of last year, declaring how such ships shall be sold, under what safeguards, and has made it, as I think, a good, sound, water-proof section under which the provision of law of last year can be carried out. I do not deny that in arranging this method, in providing this way for doing it, we have had to put in provisions that create law, without which the act of Congress could not be carried out; and it is subject undoubtedly to a point of order, if it had been made while we were in Committee of the Whole.

I do not think it will embarrass us in the committee of conference, for the reason that I for one shall put it on the ground that in spirit it does not change legislation. I am bound to say that in this earnest effort which the Committee on Appropriations is making upon this bill, I being their organ, I do not intend to give up the greater principle for which we are contending for the sake of this section. If this section must go out, and the House insists that it shall go out, and this valuable work of clearing up the old property of the Navy must stand suspended for another year, I would much prefer that that should be done rather than that we should yield to new legislation upon appropriation bills.

I want this attempt that the Senate is making almost for the first time to be adhered to now as persistently and pertinaciously as it is proper for the conferees of one branch of Congress to insist upon when in conflict with another branch; and so I do not fear the practical difficulty arising in the mind of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this very discussion, the subject of it, illustrates the evil of legislation on appropriation bills. If we had not legislated to amend this subject on former appropriation bills there would have been no temptation now to go on with the system of legislation on appropriation bills. If we leave this section in and so make legislation on this bill, when it becomes a law, at the next session this same bill will be again brought up as a good ground for further legislation on the appropriation bills of the next year, and so on. In other words, if we are going to stop we must stop.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator that if there was any supplemental legislation on this same subject set afoot at the last session, if we keep this section in now, we may be called upon then to continue that legislation. I do not think that would be embraced under the term "general legislation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree entirely with the Senator from Kansas that it puts this bill in a very extraordinary attitude to go back to the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives (and I violate no rule between the two Houses and no parliamentary law in referring to it on this floor) will understand and will have a right to understand and ought to understand that we have rejected all their legislation on this bill, not on a discussion of its merits but upon the ground that we will not agree to passing affirmative laws in appropriation bills changing the laws of the United States in general or making new laws. That is the point upon which we stand. To put in a section which does exactly the reverse and does make a new law, while we have stricken out all their new laws, would be an entirely indefensible position. The argument of my friend from Maine would be persuasive to convince the House of Representatives and its conferees that we yielded to a strong temptation in a matter that interested us very much to violate the very principle upon which we stand. There is where we should be.

Now, when we come to the other point, of how far the conferees of the Senate may insist, expressing the views of the Senate, in saying "no" to the passage of some section or provision that the other branch says "yes" to, I do not see that there is any difficulty. The very Constitution itself, in creating the two Houses, intended that each should be a negative check upon the other, and that each should have an undisputed right always to say "no" to any proposition that the other made. It would stand, therefore, in our striking out these clauses exactly as it the House had had no clauses in at all of legislation, and we had put them on, and we insisted. The House of Representatives says "no, we are willing to appropriate money to carry on this Government as the bill does, but we are unwilling to make these changes of the law in this way, without any reference to whether we think they are good changes or not, and we can not agree to that." It is perfectly clear that the Senate must recede. Otherwise the Senate would take the attitude of dictating to the House of Representatives and saying, "unless you will consent to make a law that you do not wish to make on this bill the Government shall not go on." That has been brought out once or twice, and whenever it was brought out, whichever House it was that affirmed something, had to recede and let the bill go without the provision.

I make the point of order on this section reported from the Committee of the Whole, that it is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that as the point of order was not made in Committee of the Whole it was waived and can not be made when the bill reaches the Senate. The time to raise the point of order was when the amendment was reached in Committee of the Whole, and as it was not raised then it was waived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course I must bow with great respect to the decision of the Chair, but I was under the impression that whenever a committee reported to this body a provision which was against the rules of the body it would be sufficient time to raise that question; but I will not enter into any discussion about it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I will move to strike out section 3.

Mr. INGALLS. May I say one word on the question of order that has just been raised, with the permission of the Senator from New Jersey? I should be disposed to think that the decision of the Chair upon reflection probably would not be sustained by the Chair himself, because the language of Rule 29 is an absolute inhibition. It declares that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received," and that being the case my impression would be that at any time when it was shown, or when the attention of the Chair was called to the fact, that any provision by way of amendment was general legislation, it would be amenable to the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This section is not yet in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. As the Senator from Vermont suggests, this is still an amendment. It has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole, but when the bill is reported to the Senate it is still a pending amendment, not having received the final judgment of the Senate. In the spirit of the rule which declares that no amendment shall be received not in Committee of the Whole, but that no amendment shall be received in the Senate which proposes general legislation, I should think that the true spirit of the rule would be carried out, and that the object which we desire to obtain would be best achieved by ruling that the point of order could be taken at any time before final adoption by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Is there not an express rule that a point of order may be taken at any stage of the business?

Mr. INGALLS. That I do not remember.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then the Chair having ruled on the point of order——

Mr. INGALLS. May I submit one thing further? Rule 29 goes on further and says:

And all questions * * * shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is as to its being germane. Yesterday——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair on reflection is satisfied that the point of order can be taken at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sure the Chair is right.

Mr. HOAR. There is a rule that it can be taken at any stage of the business, but I have not had time to find it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order on the amendment, as it has not been put in the bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Chair rules out section 3, as I understand, on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not rule it in or out, because the Chair does not know what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that section 3, as it is in the amendments on page 30, is new legislation.

Mr. HALE. If I may be allowed a word, I regret very much that the point of order has been made. As I have said, in spirit this section is in no degree such legislation as we are seeking to keep from appropriation bills. I do not expect that with all the conflict that the Senate shall make it will be able absolutely always, invariably, to keep every particle of technical legislation off appropriation bills if the House of Representatives insists upon it. I do expect out of the effort that is being made that a great evil now existing will be remedied, and that appropriation bills will not be made hereafter as heretofore, sluice-ways for general legislation.

But my ways are different, unfortunately for me, from the ways of the Senator from Vermont. His methods are rigid, unvarying, immutable, procrustean. I do not believe that we can do that. I do not believe that we shall ever succeed in establishing a rule here that will dominate and control the other House, so that never anywhere shall a shred of legislation be put upon an appropriation bill. If we take that ground and insist upon it that nothing whatever of legislation shall be placed upon appropriation bills, we shall be obliged in the end, no matter how strong we take it, in some cases to yield. But we can take a ground, and can maintain it, that shall prevent, as I have said, the appropriation bills from being made the vehicle for all kinds of legislation that do not properly belong in the purview of an appropriation bill. I should be glad to see that done, and I should feel that anybody who had helped to accomplish that had deserved well of his country. I am ready to go as far as it is practicable and possible in doing this, and I do not think that this clause, which undoubtedly will be ruled off, would embarrass the conference committee, but on the other hand would help it. But it is gone; there is no use to talk any more about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. Is there any reservation desired upon any amendment? The Chair hearing none, the question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole, except the third section?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me understand the question distinctly. What action has been taken under the point of order raised by the Senator from Vermont?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been sustained.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Section 3 is out of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is out of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It never was in there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any particular amendment upon which a separate vote is desired?

Mr. EDMUNDS (at 1 o'clock p. m.). I rise to call for the regular order, in order to keep it in its proper place before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order will be laid before the Senate, which is the Utah bill.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to the bill being laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore It will be so ordered. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole to the naval appropriation bill. Usually, unless some Senator desires a separate vote on a particular amendment, they are concurred in in gross. There being no separate vote desired, the question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now open to amendments in the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to strike out the provisos from lines 370 to 378, and I shall follow that by an amendment, as it is a part of the same plan, to strike out the proviso from line 390 to line 395.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Beginning with the word "provided," in line 370, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph in the following words:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The second proviso as will be seen is entirely a regulation of the first proviso, and therefore both should go out together, if any.

I will state the reason why I offer this amendment. The Secretary of the Navy, who to-day has discretionary power with respect to the repair of vessels in the Navy, is limited in this bill to a very severe restriction. He has no authority, and can not have any under this provision of law to repair a ship, whatever may be the exigency or the needs of the Government, if in the opinion of himself or a board of competent naval officers it is determined and estimated that it will cost more than 20 per cent. of the value of a new ship.

Therefore I say it is a dangerous thing for the interests of the Government for the Senate to impose any such restriction. We do not know what may happen in the immediate future. We do not know that it may not be required to repair many of the vessels to-day in the American Navy, and at a cost far in excess of the 20 per cent. limit fixed in the bill. I say it is unwise to destroy the existing naval establishment until something better is found to take its place.

No Senator will assert that it will be possible to create a new naval establishment for some years to come. We make a start, it is true, under the appropriations contained in this bill; yet it is only a start, and for years to come we shall necessarily be without any other naval vessels than those now in the service of the Government. This proviso would be a very proper one after we had made some progress in the creation of a new Navy; but certainly it ought not to be incorporated in the bill at this time.

Mr. HALE. The Senate passed upon this question yesterday by a very decisive vote, and I do not propose to take up any time, simply saying, as I have said, that 20 per cent. upon the cost of a new ship entire will cover every possible repair that is needed on any part of a ship, and if it does not then it ought not to be repaired. The unit is made, as the language shows, at 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and of like material. It is not the relation that 20 per cent. bears to the ship as she is then; it is not the relation that 20 per cent. bears to the part being repaired and its full value, but what the 20 per cent. bears to the estimated cost of an entire new ship. The Senate settled it yesterday, and I ask pardon for even occupying thirty seconds of time on this matter so well settled yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have nothing to add to what has been already said, except to simply remark that I can not see why the Government could not afford to follow the rule which prevails among our mercantile marine. So long as the damage to a ship does not exceed 33⅓ per cent. it has always been considered worth repairing. By the experience of every commercial nation, where the damage has not exceeded 33⅓ per cent. she has always been held worthy of repair; and here it is brought down to 20 per cent.

Mr. HALE. That is 33⅓ per cent. of her then value.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is not of her then value. "One-third new for old" is the rule, I think, in mercantile law.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But the old must be sound.

Mr. HALE. Of course.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That does not follow. In a loss at sea, as we know, the owner can not abandon absolutely to the underwriter if the loss does not exceed 33⅓ per cent., but the underwriter has the privilege to repair, and he always does repair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is unnecessary, I find, to offer the second amendment which I had proposed. In line 372, after the word "repairs," I move to insert "to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers," and in line 373, after the word "cost," I move to insert "appraised in like manner;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from New Jersey further amendments to offer?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I had some amendments to be offered to section 3, but that having been ruled out on a point of order, I do not know that I have anything further to say.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, Mr. J. C. BURROWS of Michigan, and Mr. E. JOHN ELLIS of Louisiana the conferees on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution concerning disposition of the volumes of the Congressional Globe purchased from Messrs. Rives.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 22d instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 532) for the relief of William S. Hansell & Sons;

An act (S. 1041) for the relief of E. P. Smith; and

An act (S. 2264) to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to establish them as post-roads.

ROGER N. STEMBEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the Utah bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before that is taken up, I have the consent of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] to dispose of a little matter.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desires to call up the District appropriation bill. I have sent for him, and he will be here.

Mr. VOORHEES. This matter will not take two minutes.

Mr. HALE. It will cause no debate?

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, no; it will not interfere with anything. At the last session the Senate passed a bill (H. R. 5387) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel. After it was passed the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], not now in his seat, made a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. I have conferred with him, and I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. He does not desire to press it. He does not care anything about it now. Of course I would not make the motion in his absence if I did not have an understanding with him on the subject.

Mr. GROOME. I wish to ask what would be the effect of laying the motion on the table?

Mr. VOORHEES. The effect would be to pass the bill.

Mr. GROOME. That is what I wished to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who made the motion, is absent.

Mr. VOORHEES. What I am doing will not meet with his disapprobation, or of course I would not do it.

Mr. ROLLINS. What is the bill?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a House bill which passed the Senate in relation to the service of Admiral Stembel. It is quite a long matter. The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs and passed this body, and after it was passed the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] made a motion to reconsider the vote. Upon conference with him yesterday I am at liberty to move that the motion be laid on the table, which will make the bill a law.

Mr. ROLLINS. Had not the Senator better wait until the Senator from Illinois is in his seat?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the Utah bill, as it is called.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay it aside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from Kansas wishes to take up another appropriation bill, and I will consent that the Utah bill may be laid aside informally, in order that he may do that.

Mr. HOAR. I shall object to the Utah bill having to give place to the appropriation bill informally.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I assent to the Utah bill being laid aside informally in order that the Senator from Kansas may call up the appropriation bill.

Mr. PLUMB. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] objects, and it can not be done.

Mr. HOAR. The reason of my objecting is that I do not desire that the Utah bill shall be the bill next in order. I am in favor of that bill with the exception of one section, but it is absolutely hopeless to pass it. It is a Senate bill, and to consider it now is a mere waste of time. It contains one very vicious principle, and I do not wish to give a consent which gives it the right of way when the appropriation bill is over.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall then have to move that the pending and all prior orders be laid aside in order that I may move to take up the District appropriation bill. I desire to accommodate myself to the desire of the Senator from Vermont if I can do so without embarrassment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose the Senator from Kansas should allow the Senator from Massachusetts to take the yeas and nays on his amendment striking out the very vicious principle which is to end polygamy in Utah, and go on with the appropriation bill then. I have nothing more to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield until the Utah bill is disposed of?

Mr. PLUMB. If the vote could be taken at once upon it and thus close the apparent difference between the two Senators, I would have no objection; but if it is to lead to debate, as I have understood it would, I can not yield.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to make some observations on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the seventh section.

Mr. MILLER, of California. So do I.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Utah bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I move to lay aside all pending and prior orders in order to take up the District appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to postpone the regular order of business until to-morrow at 1 o'clock, with a view of taking up the appropriation bill he has indicated.

Mr. PLUMB. I will move to postpone the regular order until 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Why not take up the appropriation bill without postponing the regular order formally?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order has to be postponed to a time certain, as objection is made to laying it aside informally. The question is on the motion to postpone the Utah bill until 4 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice that as soon as this appropriation bill is over I shall seek the floor to take up the Utah bill. I intend, if I can, to get the Senate to decide whether it is going to do anything about that business or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Utah bill has been postponed until 4 o'clock. It will be the unfinished business then. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves to take up the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. COCKRELL.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read item by item, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be passed upon first, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that the usual course had better not be taken on this bill, because there are quite a number of legislative provisions that ought to be disposed of as we go along. I have no objection to dispensing with the first formal reading of the bill, but the text should be acted upon at the same time with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations. I think that course would expedite action on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can go back after disposing of the committee amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that would be difficult. I think it would be more rapid to dispose of the text as the amendments are proceeded with. I see here a proviso in the text of the bill changing the law which I desire to have stricken out before the amendment of the committee following it is acted upon. I only wish to expedite the matter. I propose to move to strike out certain paragraphs because they are legislative.

Mr. PLUMB. I am willing to pursue whatever course may be most agreeable to Senators and most expeditious in the disposition of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his first request?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has no objection to the reservation I make.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the reading of the bill is proceeded with I wish to submit the following itemized statement in regard to the bill:

Amount of estimates for 1884, exclusive of water department	$3,443,847 08

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for "executive office," in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and sixty;" so as to read:

One secretary, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, after the word "clerk," to strike out "one thousand two" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

One clerk, $900.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out, in line 17, "one clerk, $1,400" and inserting "two clerks, $1,200 each," leaving out entirely "one clerk, $1,200," or "$900," as proposed by the committee. That increases the sum for the two clerks $100 each, in lieu of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 21, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and miscellaneous items," from $2,600 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23, in the clause making appropriation for salaries and contingent expenses, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for executive office from $21,142 to $21,041.

Mr. PLUMB. The total will have to be changed to correspond to the item agreed to providing for two clerks at $1,200 each. That can be arranged afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was, in line 25, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to include, if deemed necessary, without expense to the District, the keeping of one horse and wagon;" so as to read:

For assessor's office: For one assessor, $3,000; two assistant assessors, at $1,600 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 32, after the word "stationery," to strike out "car-fare;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, detection of frauds on the revenue, and miscellaneous items, $1,000; in all, $12,600.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to suggest to the Senator who has the bill in charge that that seems to be an excessive amount for the assessment of property in a district ten miles square. The aggregate expense paid for the assessment of property in this District is I see $12,600. That is a much heavier percentage, I know, than we pay in my State for making assessments.

Mr. PLUMB. The assessment of personal property in a growing city like Washington, including also the assessment of licenses, itself is a very large work and the committee could find nothing to indicate that any portion of this money was misspent. On the contrary, there was quite an urgent demand for an increase of force beyond that provided for in the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It may be all right, but it occurred to me that it was a very large amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 42, after the word "stationery," to strike out "car-fare;" in the same line, after the word "items," to strike out "1,000" and insert

"800;" and in line 43, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For collector's office: For one collector, $4,000; one cashier, $1,800; one bookkeeper, $1,600; four clerks at $1,400 each; one clerk, $1,200; temporary clerks, $1,700; one messenger, $600; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, $800; in all, $17,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary read the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of June 11, 1878, relating to the District of Columbia, allowing a deduction of 5 per cent. upon taxes paid within thirty days after notice of assessment, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out that proviso. It is legislation purely and changes the law, and, I think, unwisely. I do not propose to debate it. I put it upon the ground simply that it is a provision repealing the existing law in regard to the mode of collecting taxes, and that it has no relevancy here. I hope the Senator will allow that to be stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. That was inserted at the request of the commissioners. It will be observed that it is in the text of the bill as it came from the House. The commissioners complain that the law works a diminution of taxes to the amount of about $45,000 a year.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I were at liberty to discuss it I think I could show that they would make a great deal more by striking it out. At any rate this is part of the existing law in regard to the collection of taxes, and it ought not to be changed except upon a report of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is not in harmony with the rule we have been going upon in regard to the naval bill, and I trust on all appropriation bills not to change existing law nor to allow the House to change an existing law in an appropriation bill. I think that it is an unwise provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio make a point of order that the proviso is new legislation?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, I do not make the point of order, because the House can undoubtedly do as they please about it; but I move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the ground that it is legislation, as it certainly is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care to go into the merits of the proposition, because that might lead to a great deal of discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] striking out the proviso beginning in line 44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "repealed," in line 48, to insert:

And hereafter the lien upon any real estate in the District of Columbia for any general or special tax shall not be impaired by reason of any certificate or statement, erroneous or otherwise, which the collector may make concerning the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken and is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. Before we pass from that I desire to state, by unanimous consent, exactly what is the purpose to be gained by the provision. The law now provides that the collector shall make upon application a certificate of tax-lien on real estate in the District of Columbia, and when he has made such a certificate that discharges the lien upon the real estate for all taxes except such taxes as are embraced in the certificate. In other words, if he makes an error it inures to the benefit of the purchaser and to the disadvantage of the District, a condition of things which, as I believe, does not exist elsewhere; at least I have no knowledge of it. The committee were advised that the District of Columbia had recently lost in a single case $2,000 of taxes by reason of the operation of that provision. For that reason this was inserted in order to guard against possible collusion or neglect on the part of the collector.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 61, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" and in line 62, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For auditor and comptroller's office: For one auditor and comptroller, $3,000; one bookkeeper, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; three clerks at $1,400 each; one clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $600; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, $300; in all, $12,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 62, to insert:

For temporary clerk-hire, to enable the auditor and comptroller to effect a settlement of the accounts of the collector and to bring up the books of his office, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer what I send to the Secretary's desk to take the place of the amendment of the committee. It is simply a verbal change designed to accomplish the same purpose.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

For temporary clerk-hire to enable the auditor to bring up the books and arrange the records of his office and to audit the accounts of the collector, $2,500; or so much thereof as may be necessary, which shall be available immediately.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 71, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for rent of office, $300;" and in line 74, after the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For attorney's office: For one attorney, $4,000; one assistant attorney, $1,900; one special assistant attorney, $960; one clerk, $960; one messenger, $192; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items, $500; in all, $8,512.

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment should not prevail. That was made with the intention of combining this office with the other District office in one building; that plan was finally abandoned, but in making up the bill the clerk inadvertently left in that amendment. I therefore ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the office? Is it a hired office outside?

Mr. PLUMB. It is a hired office outside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now that we have got a new large city hall, there ought to be room for the attorney's office, I think, somewhere in the public building.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee had no advice on that subject. I therefore ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill, as I see three attorneys are provided for, whether there is a proper necessity for that number of attorneys in the District. I do not know anything about it. There may be a necessity for it.

Mr. PLUMB. The assistant attorneys, as I understand, are occupied almost entirely in the police court. The attorney himself is employed largely in litigation before the supreme court of the District. The District is in litigation constantly in regard to transactions past and present, damages of different kinds, and so on, and it becomes necessary to have this force. The only question, I think, in the case at all would be whether the salaries are too much. I think they are not too high.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 85, in the appropriation "for engineer's office," to reduce the appropriation for the salary of "one chief clerk" from $2,000 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 92, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to include, if deemed necessary, the keeping of one horse and wagon, and all expenses on account of same;" so as to make the item read:

One inspector of buildings, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97, after the word "dollars," to insert "who shall be subject to the control of the commissioners of the District, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him;" so as to read:

One inspector of gas and meters, $2,000, who shall be subject to the control of the commissioners of the District, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation, as it clearly is.

Mr. PLUMB. Will not the Senator divide the question between that part of the amendment which provides for subjecting these officers to the control of the commissioners of the District and that part which provides for the payment into the Treasury of the fees?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order upon it, and then when it is out the Senator can move that the inspector shall pay in the money to the Treasury.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 97, the words:

Who shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him.

I will state for the information of the Senate that the law now provides that the fees shall be applied for the purpose of keeping up the laboratory and the other expenses of his office and so on, and makes no responsibility to anybody for the money received.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator having charge of the bill that the amendment ought to come in after the word "meters" to make the sentence sensible. Let the salary come in after the definition of the office.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept the suggestion and move, after the word "meters," to insert "who shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him;" so as to read:

One inspector of gas and meters, who shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him, $2,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. The other part is stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other part is stricken out on a point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 103, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of "one inspector of plumbing," from $1,600 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. While I notice it I want to call attention to line 104. The word "of" before "superintendent" should be "one;" so as to read:

One superintendent of parking, $1,200.

I move to strike out "of" and substitute "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 106, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of "one assistant superintendent of parking" from $800 to $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 108, before the word "engineers," to strike out "sub-assistant" and to insert "assistant;" in the same line, after the word "engineer," to insert "one at $1,500, and one;" and after the word "dollars," in line 109, to strike out "each;" so as to read:

One assistant engineer, $1,600; two assistant engineers, one at $1,500 and one at $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 112, to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three inspectors of streets, sewers, and buildings, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 116, after the word "dollars," to insert "one sealer of weights and measures, $80."

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that that is a provision of the law of last year which was left out in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 126, after the word "forage," to strike out "livery;" in line 128, after the word "for," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

Contingent expenses, including rent of property-yards, books, stationery, binding, and preservation of records in the engineer's and surveyor's offices; printing, transportation (vehicles, animals, saddlery, forage, and repairs), and miscellaneous items not otherwise provided for, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 129, to reduce the total amount of appropriation for "engineer's office" from $63,950 to $60,830.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 132, after the word "work," to insert "or the construction or repair of buildings;" so as to read:

Provided, That overseers or inspectors temporarily required in connection with sewer, street, or road work, or the construction or repair of buildings, done under contracts authorized by appropriations, shall be paid out of the sums appropriated for the work, and for the time actually engaged thereon; and the commissioners of the District, in their annual reports to Congress, shall report the number of such overseers and inspectors, and their work, and the sums paid to each, and out of what appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that proviso is subject to the same objection; it is legislation, and I submit to the Senator from Kansas whether it is not very dangerous legislation. Suppose we should appropriate, as we do here, for certain purposes, this would authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia, without respect to amounts, compensation, or the nature or character of the employment, to employ any number of persons they choose, to be paid out of that appropriation. It seems to me it had better be left under the existing law, whatever that is, until it is changed.

Mr. PLUMB. This is the law as it has been for two years last past with the exception of the words in italics. It had been the practice of the commissioners to pay out of the appropriations for streets and buildings for the superintendence. The account was disallowed by the Comptroller, and thereupon two years ago we provided by special law, in the language now in this bill, that temporary force might be employed out of the contract price for the purpose of overseeing the work as it was done, and it would seem to be a very necessary provision. We provide a limited number of inspectors of streets; they can not all be on hand at the time every block is put down and every bit of asphalt laid. So in the erection of public buildings. This is simply the temporary superintendence under inspectors, and so far as we are able to learn it has worked well and is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know but that as this money is to be paid out of appropriations made by the act and in that way it is limited, perhaps it is necessary. I withdraw the point.

Mr. INGALLS. Besides that, they are required to report to Congress what inspectors are employed and how much they are paid and out of what fund.

Mr. PLUMB. A very limited number of persons is employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 142, to reduce the appropriation "for fuel, ice, gas, repairs, insurance, and general miscellaneous expenses of District offices and markets" from $5,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "for improvements and repairs and for care and repair of bridges," in line 146, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for repairs to macadam roadways, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator whether there is any provision anywhere else in the bill to provide for the current repairs of these roads?

Mr. PLUMB. There is, on page 13, line 289:

For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, $25,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. PLUMB. The design was not to have two items of appropriation for substantially the same thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right. I did not see it anywhere else.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 156, to reduce the total amount of appropriation "for work on sundry avenues and streets" from $350,000 to $250,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know why that is done. The estimates, I see, are much larger, and it seems to me it is a matter of economy to the people of this city, as well as to the Government at large, to have these imperfect streets repaired as soon as possible, and as in the estimates submitted to us by the commissioners, and also by the Secretary of the Treasury, a much larger sum is provided for, it seems to me unless some good reason can be given that these estimates should be sustained, especially as the whole appropriation falls within the revenues of the District. My impression is that no money could be more economically expended than the money that is provided for the replacement of the wooden pavements in different parts of the city by the substitution of others. I should like to know on what ground it is proposed to reduce the amount.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a matter about which the Senator from Ohio is more competent to speak than I am. I will, however, state to the Senator the view the committee took of this question.

In the first place, the estimates embrace the replacing in Class A, as found in the Book of Estimates, page 265, of wood pavements at an estimated total cost of $249,000. Then on the same page the replacement of stone pavements at a cost of about $35,000; the laying of new pavements specified to the amount of $59,000, and of regulating and grading of certain streets to the amount of $40,000, making a total of $374,000 as embraced in the Book of Estimates as submitted by the District commissioners. The estimate of the Treasury Department was $315,000 for these various purposes, being a diminution in the estimates of the commissioners of about $60,000.

There has always been a great deal of controversy in this city as to the place where these funds for the replacement of pavements should be expended. The sub-committee having the bill in charge here gave a somewhat extended consideration to the subject last year, and were satisfied that some partiality was being exhibited, that pavements were being replaced in quarters of the city beyond the actual need of improvements, and to some extent for the purpose of inducing improvements in some way that it is not proper to characterize in any harsh way; but everything being comparative we concluded that on the whole more money should be expended upon the eastern side and upon the streets upon the east side of the Capitol. Some conversation ensuing about the matter and these complaints being brought to the attention of the commissioners through the intervention of the sub-committee the commissioners stated that another year, being this present year, more money actually and in proportion would be by them expended in the replacement of pavements on the east side of the Capitol. Of course that promise was not at all binding; but it was the expression of what seemed to us to be the existence of ground for complaint in regard to the action of the commissioners. As all the pavements can not be replaced, of course there must be discretion somewhere as to where the money shall be expended; and that is properly exercised by the commissioners. It was not designed to revise their schedule and set up a new classification of streets to be attended to, but to emphasize the expression that some of this money shall go east of the Capitol, as I have stated.

There is only a very small portion of this money provided to be expended east of the Capitol, I think less than $25,000—I am not sure what precise amount—while the sum of nearly $40,000 is provided to be expended to replace a stone pavement, good but rough, on H street, for the purpose of connecting the northwestern portion of the city with the country in the direction of the race-course, carrying all the trade and travel away from and by and around what might be called the East Capitol side of the city. In making this change the committee designed to practically compel the commissioners to an expenditure which they regard more suitable than that provided for in the estimates.

Mr. SHERMAN. I sympathize entirely with the complaints that have been made by people of this District, by large petitions sent here from time to time from those living in the eastern part of the city. They have been compelled to pay their share of the taxes on a very large valuation of their property, while all the improvements have been in the part of the city where most of us live, the western and northwestern portion of the city, and it is a just complaint that can not be answered. I myself have inquired of the commissioners why it is that this discrimination has been made against the eastern part of the city, and they say it is all because in the early improvement of this city, under the old board of public works, expensive wooden pavements were laid down in the western part of the city, and they are now so poor as to be much worse than any kind of an ordinary country road, and therefore the money must be first expended to replace those pavements.

I do not believe this is a sufficient answer to the complaint that has been made on the part of these people, most of them poor. They have been compelled to pay taxes and not enjoy any of the benefits of the improvements for which their taxes go; but the amendment now proposed is not in that direction. The amendment now proposed, it is true, will leave one or two little appropriations, comparatively small appropriations, to be expended on the eastern part of the city; but it will cut down the appropriations generally so as to disable the commissioners from tearing up the old wooden pavements and replacing them with new.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much wood pavement, I should like to know, still remains? Can the Senator from Ohio tell?

Mr. SHERMAN. I asked that of the commissioners, and they told me they thought if Congress would give the appropriations asked for this year they would be able to replace it all, and meet this complaint of injustice in the east.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is it now?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know; but there is enough of it, as you will see by going around the city. It seems to me as this money is paid out of the money of the District as well as the money of the Government it is better to let them go on and carry out their plans. I agree that the proviso is right. Indeed if the committee could see their way clear to require a proportionate expenditure in the eastern part of the city I think it would be more just. I should vote for a proposition that would require fully one-fourth of the expenditure under this appropriation to be made in the eastern part of the city, or one-third, in order to repair this injustice; but I suppose that would be rather striking blindly at the matter, and therefore I think it is better to give the commissioners the money they ask for to complete the improvements proposed in the bill, the schedule of which we have, and which I believe covers the replacement of all the wooden pavements now necessary to be replaced, and then with the hope that in the next year's appropriation some kind of justice will be done to the people living in the eastern part of the city.

There is a bill which was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia yesterday that is more vitally important to the people of this District than even this appropriation of $300,000. It is a bill that will make some regulation as to the railroads that are coming into this city. It is a remarkable thing that the people of this city have submitted for many years to what in any other city of the United States would be regarded and indicted as a common nuisance; that is, one railroad entering in two directions from the northeastern part of the city, cutting through twenty-five squares, disregarding all the grades of the streets; and it has been authorized by Congress, so that there is no way to correct it except by the bill which I am glad to say the Committee on the District of Columbia has now reported.

Then the Pennsylvania Railroad, as it is called, comes through the southeastern part of the city, doing great injustice to all the people who live there not protected by fences, so that children, cows, and wagons are liable to be run over by steam-railway trains, a condition of affairs that has been abolished or prohibited in almost every city of 20,000 inhabitants. In the State in which I live our laws are very stringent, requiring the railroads to keep flag stations and to inclose their tracks, &c., to guard life and property; but it is not so here The result has been that the eastern part of this city has been gradually going to decay, while the western part of the city has become magnificent in its improvements and magnificent in its proportions. All that part of the city lying between this Capitol and Georgetown has increased nearly threefold. Indeed, within fifteen years property worth 20 or 30 cents a foot has come to be worth two or three dollars a foot; and all that because the Government has seen fit to concentrate its improvements in the western part of the city, while the price of property in the eastern part of the city has gradually gone down and down. The reason is merely because the government of the District under acts of Congress has constantly discriminated against this part of the city.

I think it will be better to follow out the plan of the commissioners, to give them enough money to replace the wooden pavements, and make this proviso, that a reasonable distribution shall be made of the money provided by Congress, with the hope that in the next year the complaints of those citizens that have been laid on our table year after year will be fairly met by a proportionate appropriation of money for the improvement of streets in the eastern part of the city.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I hope my colleague will see his way clear to withdraw the amendment that has been proposed by the committee. A very casual inspection of the superficies of this city will convince everybody that great partiality has been done and great injustice done. There used to be a story current about General Grant in his humbler days to the effect that he once declared that he wished he could be mayor of the city of Galena; and when asked the reason of that ambition he said it was because he wanted to have a sidewalk laid from the depot to his residence. That illustrates the general vice that follows the location of the municipal authorities in any one quarter of the city. It is a fact that the District commissioners as a rule have been selected from the northwestern portion of Washington, and without any impropriety or without any abuse of their functions the result has inevitably been that all the expenditures and all the improvements and all the advantages from the expenditure of money have been in that direction, so that we now have the spectacle of a city entirely improved so far as pavements are concerned up to the western boundary.

I believe that the streets have all been laid with concrete, that the wooden pavements have been torn up and replaced either with stone or with bitumen, so that nothing there remains to be done except to keep them in repair. But with regard to this portion of the city it is apparent to any one that great wrong exists. Take North Capitol street, one of the main approaches to the Capitol itself; from the entrance to the public grounds to C street is to-day merely a mud-hole, it is a morass almost, in which wagons of ordinary weight would become mired. Not only is there no wooden pavement, but there is no pavement at all. There is no reason why that avenue, which is one of the great radiating avenues from the Capitol, should not have been paved. It has been favoritism, it has been injustice, it has been a partial appropriation of the public funds; and inasmuch as the sum that is asked by the commissioners is entirely within the revenues of the District, and inasmuch as, if properly expended, as we now have every reason to believe it will be, these partialities can be cured and the difficulties can be corrected, I suggest that it would be a wise thing for the Senate to agree to the amount that has been appropriated by the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator how we are going to correct the abuses of which he speaks when the commissioners year after year persistently refuse to make any estimate for the eastern part of the city?

Mr. INGALLS. Inasmuch as they have all the western portion now improved, if they get the money they will have to put it in the eastern part of the city, because there is nowhere else to place it.

Mr. COCKRELL. They do not put it in their estimates, and hence we must take the responsibility of directing them.

Mr. INGALLS. I was not complaining about that. I concur fully with the committee as to the propriety of that direction; but the bill that came from the House appropriates $350,000, which the Senate committee have reduced $100,000. I can see no reason why that amendment should be agreed to. I wish that the committee would withdraw it, and in case they do not I should like very much to have the Senate agree to the bill as it came from the House, because I think it will be an economical and wise expenditure of the public money.

Mr. PLUMB. With the consent of the Senate I will ask that this be passed over for the present with a view to some readjustment of language which shall accommodate the various views.

Mr. ROLLINS. Before it is passed over I desire to say a word upon the subject, because my attention has been called to it as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia very often during the last four or five years.

I had some experience myself while residing on Capitol Hill. I saw year after year the great body of the money appropriated applied for the improvement of the streets in the west and northwest portions of the city to the almost utter neglect of the streets and avenues of the east side of the city, east of the Capitol. I think if any Senator will take the map which lies upon the desk of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] and look at it, he will see at a glance what great injustice has been done to the people residing in the eastern portion of this city. There the streets and avenues are colored in such a way as to indicate just what streets have been improved, and how they have been improved, and what streets have been utterly neglected in this expenditure of money for the District of Columbia. It is a most wonderful exhibit and shows the great injustice that has been done by the utter neglect of a proper distribution of the funds of the District of Columbia.

I concur in this matter most heartily with the Senator from Ohio and both Senators from Kansas in the remarks they have made. Take the avenues: Maryland avenue, a magnificent avenue extending from a point east of the Capitol grounds; while the authorities are improving avenues and streets miles distant in the west and northwestern portions of the city they are doing comparatively nothing for this avenue and others in the portion of the city east of this building.

Now, under the proviso which has been recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, what will be the result? If the commissioners spend all the money that has been estimated for the eastern portion of the city, it will be only 10 per cent. of the whole amount. Even that would be unjust. I should be glad to have the committee go still further and make a further amendment to provide that a larger proportion of this sum shall be spent in that direction.

I speak now, I think, impartially, because I live in the northwestern portion of the city, and the expenditure of money there is a source of convenience and comfort to me. I have left Capitol Hill, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to this great injustice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] asks unanimous consent to pass over this amendment for the time being. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 169, after the word "the," to strike out "Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company" and insert "lessees of the Alexandria Canal;" so as to read:

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

For engineering, maintenance, and general repairs, $20,000; and the lessees of the Alexandria Canal shall keep in good repair at least two spans of the Aqueduct Bridge, so that no leakage or wastage of water shall occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out "20" and insert "15," in line 169; so as to make the appropriation $15,000. That was the amount we fixed last year for this item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for Washington Asylum," in line 181, to reduce the item "for salary of one clerk" from $600 to $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 186, after the word "dollars," to insert "one ambulance driver, $120."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 189, after the word "each," to strike out "and;" in line 190, after the word "improvements," to strike out "repairs to wards and closets;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses, including improvements, provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, shoes, clothing, hardware, dry goods, medicines, and miscellaneous items, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 192, after the word "items," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$34,500;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses, including improvements, provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, shoes, clothing, hardware, dry goods, medicines, and miscellaneous items, $34,500.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment striking out and inserting should be non-concurred in, so as to leave the amount stand $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out $35,000 and inserting $34,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after "dollars," in line 193, to insert "and for repairs to wards and closets, $500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 195, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the Washington Asylum from $45,940 to $45,820.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend that by inserting "6" in place of "5," and "3" in place of "8;" so as to read "$46,320." That will make the total correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the committee will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 247, before the word "colored," to insert "destitute;" and in line 248, to strike out "6,500," and insert "7,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 249, to insert:

For the erection of a building for said National Association, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the cost of said building shall not exceed the sum herein named.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "15," in line 252, and inserting "20," that being in accordance with the estimate and the recommendation of the District Committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I see here "National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children." Is this provision for erecting a house for them? I have no doubt it is a very worthy charity, but such associations are not supervised by the District; they are charities depending on private contributions, and I do not see why they should be provided with buildings out of the National Treasury. Almost every city of this size has various associations for charity which are supported by the private contributions of the inhabitants. Here we are providing appropriations for charities, all of which are worthy objects no doubt, but why should we become almoners of bounties to charitable institutions? I suppose it has been customary, and I shall not interpose any objection except to state my idea that it is improper.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say in regard to the item which may be regarded as under consideration, that this is the only eleemosynary institution designed especially for colored people in this District. It is performing a work which is not only well done but very economically done. It is now housed in a building put up out of some lumber which the Government had used for barracks during the war, and which, while answering fairly the purpose as far as space with ordinary comfort is concerned, is very much exposed to fire and is rapidly decaying, a very considerable sum of money being necessary to be expended each year to keep it in anything like order.

As long as this is on our hands in any way looking to us for its support by appropriations it was thought the dictates of an ordinary humanity would prompt us to relieve it from that great liability to fire and the necessary loss of life consequent upon the burning of the house, by supplying it with a building which would be ample for the accommodation of those seeking its shelter and also relieving it from that great danger which applies to the present building. I may say also that I think this is one of the most worthy charities in the District.

Without contesting to any considerable degree the principle which the Senator from Delaware announces, we are going on with this just as we found it. The committee has not arrogated to itself a new office of charity. It has provided, as I think somewhat scantily, for the old one. One-half of this money is to be paid by the tax-payers of the District directly, and the other half by the Government, under the arrangement by which the Government became a tax-payer of the District to the extent of one-half the revenues necessary to carry on the District government. Consequently it is in no sense a general but it represents a local appropriation.

Whatever the Senator from Delaware and myself might think about the propriety of the arrangement, it is now in existence, and it is the duty as we think of the Appropriations Committee and of Congress to carry it into effect, and in doing so we regard the Government simply as a local tax-payer to the extent of one-half the taxation to be paid in the District for the purpose of carrying on its government.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 257, to reduce the appropriation "for the Industrial Home School" from $7,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 259 to 264 in the following words:

And the commissioners of the District of Columbia are required to visit and investigate the management of all the institutions of charity herein appropriated for, and shall require an itemized report of receipts and expenditures to be made to them, to be transmitted with their annual report to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 264, to insert:

That the appropriation of $5,000 made by the act "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1882, "for the erection of a building on the grounds recently purchased by the German Protestant Orphan Asylum Association of the District of Columbia, now the German Orphan Asylum Association of the District of Columbia, provided that the asylum shall contribute an equal sum for this purpose," be, and the same is hereby, continued and made available for the same purpose and subject to the like condition for the fiscal year 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 277, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to demand and receive from the assignee of the estate of H. D. Cooke & Co. the sum proved against said estate by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, and to cover the same into the Treasury of the United States; and in case of refusal to pay over the money aforesaid, the Attorney-General is required to take steps to enforce the claim of the United States thereto.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, in line 280, to strike out the initials "H. D." before "Cooke," and insert "Jay." I desire to say that the amendment as printed was practically a declaration of bankruptcy against a very responsible banking firm of this city, and I regret very much that the error occurred, as it has led to some misunderstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the correction being made? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. It is a double reduction. The amount estimated for is $25,000; the House reduced it to $20,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not contest with the Senator from Ohio on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, striking out "twenty" and inserting "fifteen."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 293, to insert:

Cleaning tidal sewers, $3,000; repairs to pumps, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 295, to increase the total amount of appropriation "for sweeping, cleaning, and sprinkling streets and avenues," &c., from $112,500 to $113,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to change the figures there in consequence of the amendments adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. The total should be $118,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 304, before the word "to" to insert "and;" so as to read:

And for purchasing and erecting new lamp-posts, and to replace such as are old, damaged, and unfit for use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "therefore," in line 313, to strike out—

Repairs to public pumps, $3,000; cleaning tidal sewers, $3,000; in all, $101,380: Provided, That no more than at the rate of $22 per annum for each street lamp with a six-foot burner shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning under any expenditure provided for in this act; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to substitute, in whole or in part, other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That no more than $22 per annum for each street lamp shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning under any expenditure provided for in this act; and in case a contract can not be made at that rate the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Metropolitan police," in line 343, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Four surgeons for the police and fire departments, at $350 each.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a mistake there. The word "three," in line 342, should be "four" and "four" should be "three;" so as to read:

Three surgeons for the police and fire departments, at $450 each.

Instead of four surgeons at $350 each, the figures ought to be transposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is, in line 342, to strike out "four" and insert "three" before "surgeons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 343, after "at," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three surgeons for the police and fire departments, at $350.

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment should not be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 344, after the word "each," to strike out "six detectives at $1,320 each," and insert:

For additional compensation to privates detailed from time to time for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $1,440, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "each," in line 352, to strike out "seven acting sergeants at $1,080 each, seventy-three" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

Ninety privates, class 1, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 354, before the word "privates," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

One hundred and thirty-five privates, class 2, at $1,080 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 361, after "dollars," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Twenty lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "driver," in line 362, to trike out "of police van, four hundred and eighty" and insert "three hundred;" so as to read:

One driver, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 364, after the word "driver," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "four hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

One ambulance driver, $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 377, to reduce from $10,000 to $9,500 the amount of the appropriation for "miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing, photographs, printing and binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs to same, police equipments and repairs to same, beds and bed-clothing, insignia of office, horses, harness, and forage, repairs to van and ambulance, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 377, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the "Metropolitan police" from $293,140 to $310,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "fire department," in line 391, to reduce the item for "repairs to engine-houses" from $1,000 to $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 392, to insert:

For remodeling and furnishing the old town hall, in Georgetown, District of Columbia, for the use of engine company No. 5, $3,000; and in addition to this sum the proceeds of sale of the lots in Georgetown authorized to be sold by the act approved April 1, 1882, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be applied to this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 406, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the "fire department" from $98,560 to $101,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 408, to insert:

And the commissioners of the District are authorized, in their discretion, to pay the claim of George Schlosser, for care of James Fleming, injured by being run over in 1880 by William O. Drew, assistant engineer of the fire department of the District, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the fire department: Provided, That after said payment no liability shall remain against the District on account of the damage to said Fleming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for the "telegraph and telephone service," in line 426, after the word "blacksmithing," to strike out "forage;" so as to read:

Telegraph and telephone service: For one general superintendent, $1,600; one electrician at $1,200; two telegraph operators at $1,000 each; three telephone operators at $600 each; two repair-men at $720 each; one laborer, $400. General supplies, repairs, and battery, including battery supplies, telephone rental, wire and insulators, brackets and pins, gas and fuel, record-books and stationery, washing, blacksmithing, extra labor, and the purchase of new implements and tools, $4,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I move in that clause, in line 421, to insert after "hundred" the words "and fifty;" so as to read:

Three telephone operators, at $650 each.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now the amount in line 428 should be made $12,590.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for the "courts," in line 435, to increase the item for "United States marshal's fees" from $1,400 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 438, after the word "judge," to insert "not exceeding $300;" so as to read:

Contingent expenses, including compensation of a justice of the peace acting as judge of the police court during the absence of said judge, not exceeding $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 438, to strike out "judicial expenses;" and after the word "dollars," in line 440, to insert "for judicial expenses, $2,500;" so as to read:

Books, stationery, fuel, ice, gas, witness fees, and miscellaneous items, $2,200; for judicial expenses, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 442, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the "courts" from $15,418 to $16,018.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "public schools, District of Columbia," after the word "teachers," in line 447, to strike out "and increase of teachers' pay by continuous service;" and in line 450, after the word "and," to strike out "21,425" and insert "26,850;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of superintendents, teachers, and janitors, secretary of the board, and clerks, including additional teachers, rents, repairs, fuel, furniture, books, stationery, new school buildings, furniture for new school buildings, and miscellaneous items, $526,850.

The next amendment was, in line 455, to strike out:

One secretary, at $150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 457, to increase the appropriation for salary of "one clerk to superintendent" from $800 to $950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "teachers," in line 461, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" and in line 464, after the word "and," to strike out "49,125" and insert "52,450;" so as to make the clause read:

For teachers: For five hundred and thirty teachers, to be employed at a rate of compensation not to exceed the rate provided by the present schedule of salaries, and at an average salary not to exceed $665, $352,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 467, before "janitors," to strike out "foreman;" in line 468, after the word "for," to strike out "one foreman and his assistant, $1,300; for;" in line 470, before "hundred," to insert "four;" so as to read:

For janitors and care of the several school buildings: For care of the high-school building, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 472, to increase the appropriation for care "of the Franklin Building" from $1,000 to $1,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 475, after "Lincoln," to strike out "Abbott;" so as to read:

Of the Lincoln, Miner, and Stevens buildings, at $800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 477, after the word "the," to insert "Riggs, Abbott;" so as to read:

Of the Riggs, Abbott, John F. Cook, and Randall buildings, at $700 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "the," in line 479, to strike out "Riggs and;" in line 479, after "Curtis," to strike out "buildings" and insert "building;" and in the same line, after "dollars," to strike out "each;" so as to read:

Of the Curtis Building, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 482, after "superintendent," to strike out "three" and insert "of the first six divisions, two;" so as to read:

For one janitor and messenger to the board and superintendent of the first six divisions, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 483, to insert:

For one janitor and messenger to the superintendent of the seventh and eighth divisions, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 487, to increase the appropriation "for care of smaller buildings and rented rooms, at a rate not to exceed $48 per annum for the care of each school-room," from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 488, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for janitors and care of the several school buildings" from $23,300 to $23,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 495, in the clause providing "for rent of school buildings."

Mr. PLUMB. On line 495 I move to strike out "15" and insert "18;" so as to make the appropriation for fuel $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 499, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Repairs and improvements to school buildings, including grading, graveling, inclosing, and putting in order grounds about the High, Henry, Force, Webster, Gales, Garnett, and the county school buildings, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 501, to reduce the appropriation "for contingent expenses, including furniture, books, stationery, printing, insurance, and miscellaneous items, from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 502, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations "for rent of school buildings," &c., from $58,000 to $48,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that that be changed to $51,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was ageeed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations "for buildings and schools," in line 508, after "division," to strike out "seventy-eight" and insert:

And for the purchase of a site and the erection and completion of a school building on the old Bladensburgh road, near Brooks's Station; for addition to school building on the new Bladensburgh pike; and for the erection of a school building at Benning's Station, ninety.

So as to read:

For buildings for schools: For the purchase of sites when necessary and the erection and completion of three buildings for primary and grammar schools, two of said buildings to be erected in the second school division and one in the third school division; and for the purchase of a site and the erection and completion of a school building on the old Bladensburgh road, near Brooks's Station; for addition to school building on the new Bladensburgh pike; and for the erection of a school building at Benning's Station, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 520, before the word "next," to strike out "May" and insert "June;" and in line 523, before the word "thousand," to strike out "55" and insert "57;" so as to read:

Provided, That the plans and specifications for each of said buildings shall be prepared by the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, and shall be approved by the Architect of the Capitol and the commissioners of the District, and said buildings shall be constructed by the commissioners in conformity therewith, and shall be contracted for before the 1st day of June next, and finished by the 1st day of January, 1884, the money herein appropriated to be apportioned as follows, namely: For the second school division, $57,000; and for the third school division, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollar," in line 525, to insert:

And for the site and school building near Brooks's Station, $3,000; for addition to school building on the new Bladensburgh pike, $2,000; and for the school building at Benning's Station, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 532, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for buildings for schools" from $78,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Kansas to this, apparently without explanation, duplication of appropriations for some of these school buildings. At the top of page 22 there is a provision for the purchase of a site and the erection and the completion of a school building on the old Bladensburgh road, near Brooks's Station; for addition to school building on the new Bladensburgh pike, and for the erection of a school building at Benning's Station, $90,000.

Then from line 525 to line 529 again:

And for the site and school building near Brooks's Station, $3,000; for addition to school building on the new Bladensburgh pike, $2,000; and for the school building at Benning's Station, $5,000.

Those are exactly the words in lines 510, 511, 512, and 513; so that there appears to be a duplication of the appropriation, and this would make double the amount apparently that was intended.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think it does so. The upper part is the generalization—a statement of the purposes to be appropriated for, and below it specifies how the money shall be expended, and then the $90,000 occurring in line 532 is simply a restraint on the expenditure, saying that it shall all not exceed the gross amount above appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that is the true construction of it; but I thought it right to call attention to it. I am a little afraid that it may amount to a double appropriation.

Mr. PLUMB. I think there is no danger of that.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "miscellaneous expenses," in line 540, to strike out "five" before "thousand" and insert "four;" in line 542, after "items," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" and in line 543, after "all," to strike out "twelve thousand one" and insert "ten thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and replacement of public hay-scales, $500; for rent of District offices, $3,600; for general advertising, $4,000; for books for register of wills, printing, checks, damages, and miscellaneous items, $2,500; in all, $10,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "health department," in line 549, to increase the appropriation for salary of "one inspector of marine products" from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 555, after "fuel," to strike out "rent."

Mr. PLUMB. That should not be stricken out. I ask that it be non-concurred in.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 557, to reduce the appropriation from $3,800 to $3,000 "for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, repairs to pound, and wagon and horse for poundmaster, forage, meat for dogs, disinfectants, horseshoeing, and miscellaneous items."

Mr. PLUMB. That also should be restored or not stricken out.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 559, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the "health department" from $42,580 to $41,980.

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment should also be non-concurred in.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "interest and sinking fund," after the word "cents," in line 565, to strike out:

And hereafter the surplus revenues of the District of Columbia, except those arising from the water department, shall be paid into the sinking fund and applied by the commissioner thereof to the payment of the principal of the bonds of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "water department," in line 608, after "reimbursed," to strike out "after" and insert "from the;" so as to read:

And provided further, That hereafter, whenever any horses, carriages, or wagons, or property of any description may become unfit for service, in the judgment of the commissioners, the same shall be sold at auction to the highest bidder, after due advertisement, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid into Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation out of which the purchase was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "tax," in line 608, to strike out:

For completing the laying of 12-inch water-mains, with proper fire-plugs and connections for the proper protection of the Government Printing Office, $3,500, of which the United States shall pay one-half, and $1,750 is hereby appropriated for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the "water department" from $5,853.50 to $4,103.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to have an amendment made, in line 588, to strike out "voted" and insert "provided."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary read section 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to be informed by the Senator from Kansas in charge of this bill what all this section means and how it changes the present law.

Mr. PLUMB. It does not change the present law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then what is the use of having it in?

Mr. PLUMB. It came to us from the House, and by way of precaution we let it stay. I am not quite sure that it is precisely as it was in the last year's law. The word "hereafter" was in then, I believe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us look at that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think "hereafter" was not in last year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the footing on page 24, line 559.

Mr. PLUMB. That should be increased $200, to $42,700.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That seems to be right, and that change of footing will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that the second section is precisely the same as the law of last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why is it put in again?

Mr. PLUMB. That is a question which might properly be addressed to the House. The House sent the bill to us in that way, and it was left in without any special consideration by the committee, it being observed after examination that it was precisely the same as last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, with great respect, the question ought to be addressed to the committee to whom we referred this bill for criticism and examination.

Mr. PLUMB. That was why we left it in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did you leave it in?

Mr. PLUMB. Simply because we found it here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That certainly is a very potent argument. Go ahead; I will see if it is the same thing.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Vermont moves to strike that section out, he can do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator is sure that it is the same thing—I see that the third section of last year's bill is permanent, using the word "hereafter"—it ought to be stricken out, for it is really legislation. It seems to be, as the Senator says, an evident re-enactment of an existing and permanent law.

Mr. PLUMB. It is. Last year the word "hereafter" was inserted in the bill, intending by that insertion to make it unnecessary to re-enact it; but the House sent it over and it escaped consideration, being in the same language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill may go on. A motion to strike it out can be made afterward.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem certificate numbered 9376, for $200, dated August 1, 1874, and issued by the late board of audit of the District of Columbia, in favor of David Messer, which certificate, it is alleged, was duly transferred to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for value, and subsequently lost or destroyed, by the issue, to the commissioner of the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, of 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, in the manner provided for the redemption of board of audit certificates by act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, upon proof of such transfer and loss, and the execution by said commissioner of a bond of indemnity, with approved security in double the amount of said certificate, to save the District of Columbia harmless against the presentation and payment of said lost certificate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order that this is a private claim attached to an appropriation bill. I think it had better not be put here, although I have no doubt it is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a private claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. I will just state that we were in possession of a letter very strongly urging this action from the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, Mr. Knox. The matter seemed to be proper, and we put it in. If the point of order is sustained it cuts it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That the time allowed for filing claims in the Court of Claims under an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, extended thirty days from and after the approval of this act; and all claims not so presented shall be forever barred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation. I do not object to it because it is not right, but I object because it is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is legislation. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator from Vermont will make an exception in regard to this amendment. The committee were in possession of a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, the sinking-fund commissioner, reviewing the whole of these claims, and stating that there were probably about $10,000 of them outstanding which had been caught unawares in the hands of small holders, re-enforced by a statement from one of the commissioners of the District to the same effect, and on that statement the section was put in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; and so the Committee on Appropriations might take the whole Calendar of bills reported from committees that are supposed to be good bills, useful legislation, and put them on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is ruled out of order.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 5. That the District commissioners shall inquire as to a suitable location, the cost of the same, and also as to proper plans and the estimated cost of a plain, fire-proof brick building, suitable for the accommodation of the District offices, and shall make report of the same to Congress on the first day of its next session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not do that; that is a particulary meritorious section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether it is meritorious or not, but it is pure legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. If the bill that the Committee on the District of Columbia have reported relative to the routes of steam-railroads is adopted, we hope to be able to provide a building for the District commissioners in the premises now occupied by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company for a depot.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one clause in the bill that was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained on the last section. Line 156 was reserved. The amendment will be stated.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 156 the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "3" and insert "2;" so as to read "$250,000;" and after the word "dollars," in line 157, to insert:

Provided, That out of this sum all the work on avenues and streets and replacement of pavements on streets named in the aforesaid classes situated east of the Capitol shall be completed in full.

And in line 160 to strike out "535" and insert "430;" so as to read: "in all, $430,000."

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that the amendment of the committee in line 156 may be disagreed to, so as to leave the amount for the improvement and repairs of streets and avenues as it came from the House, $350,000; and then, in view of the partiality in the previous distribution of the expenditures, I would suggest this in lieu of the proviso:

Provided, That one-third of said sum shall be expended on the avenues and streets east of First street west.

Mr. PLUMB. I doubt if that amendment will accomplish the purpose my colleague has in view.

Mr. INGALLS. A very large proportion of the appropriations heretofore made has been expended in the northwestern portion of the city, leaving the eastern portion very largely unpaved, and the intention of the proviso is to require this proportion of the amount appropriated to be expended east of the street that runs directly west of the Capitol grounds north and south.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The expenditure hitherto has been in that part of the city which the Supreme Court of the United States held could not be investigated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where nearly all of us live.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been appropriated where nearly all the property-holders in the Senate live and where the commissioners hitherto resided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I remember that very well, as I was one of the small property-holders who was taxed three or four thousand dollars—I have forgotten how much—for a perfectly useless slaughter of a street in front of the houses along the row where I reside by cutting it down to the extent of about twenty feet. That was the kind of improvement. When you went a little further northwest and the House of Representatives undertook to have an inquiry about the conduct of the expenditure of these moneys, the Supreme Court pulled up and said they could not get at the evidence that was suitable to inform Congress on that subject.

Mr. INGALLS. When the House imprisoned a party for the refusal to produce his books and papers, the court gave him a very large sum as damages for his illegal imprisonment and detention.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, too, ought to be put into this bill probably.

Mr. BUTLER. That was not done by a court; by a jury.

Mr. ROLLINS. On the 2d of February I submitted an amendment to this bill which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, proposing to concrete O street between Twentieth and Twenty-second streets northwest. I did this under the supposition that the policy heretofore pursued would be continued; that is, of appropriating a very large proportion of money in that section of the city. But I notice that the Committee on Appropriations have rejected the amendment, or have not offered it to the bill at any rate. I should like to inquire if that was the reason that governed them in their action, that the policy was to be changed hereafter?

Mr. PLUMB. The committee did not purpose to perpetuate it at all events, but proposed to prevent, if we could, the expenditure of so large a portion of money in the northwestern part of the city. The District board of commissioners have been treated by Congress as persons not entitled to be trusted with any considerable discretion as to the expenditure of money. Instead of giving them sums in gross to be expended, we give them items the same as we do employés in the Treasury Department and other officers directly under our charge.

We ask them to make report of the streets on which they will make improvements, and then appropriate for those particular streets, understanding that their judgment may be changed half a dozen times before the expenditure can be made. We give them clerks by name, and so on all the way through this bill. They, in turn, I take it, somewhat accepting the view that Congress takes of their functions, divide up their own responsbility, and the care of the streets falls to one person, of the police to another, and so all the way around; and the board is three distinct atoms in place of being one unit. In that way perhaps to some extent the designation of streets has fallen into the hands of a particular person. The board has been recently somewhat reorganized; it is expected that it will be still further reorganized by the appointment of a new commissioner or a continuation of the old one for a definite term. Out of either or both of these contingencies will arise perhaps a better condition of things than we have had heretofore.

I do not know that any language can be devised (unless the Senate were prepared to take up the schedules and go through them for the purpose of picking out particular streets to be improved other than those named) under which anything effective can be done. The action of the committee was a protest against what is proposed for the coming year, and a protest based upon the action of the commissioners for the preceding year, and upon the understanding had last year that the system of improvements should not hereafter be carried on so extensively for the benefit of the northwestern part of the city.

The Senator from Ohio, who has this matter at heart and who is much more interested perhaps than any person on the floor of the Senate, thinks the sum named by the House is not too large. The commissioners themselves named $374,000 to be used in work on the streets. It has been the plan, as I think it still is, to carry on the work of placing sidewalks and curbing and guttering in front of unimproved property far beyond, or at least some considerable distance beyond, the residence portion of the city. At all events, the effect of that is, whatever the design may be, to increase largely the value of such property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you could curb the expenditures instead of the sidewalk it would be better.

Mr. PLUMB. That we should be very glad to do in place of curbing the sidewalks in front of the lots. My own belief is that the law of Congress which requires the assessment of one-third of the cost of all improvements upon the abutting property ought to be enforced. In my own State it is the rule to assess all the expense of sidewalks, curbing, guttering, and paving to the abutting property, the general public paying nothing whatever except for drainage and intersections. That I believe to be the rule everywhere except in the city of Washington. A large sum of the money that we appropriate is devoted to the work of laying sidewalks and curbing and guttering beyond the actual necessities of the city and at places where the abutting property ought to pay at least a portion of the expense. The time will come when this will be changed, as I think it certainly ought to be changed now, and not subject the tax-payers of the United States and the general tax-payers of the District to the payment of money for the improvement of property which ought to come out of the property itself. It is as I believe a vicious and unwarranted practice; but the Committee on Appropriations, ambitious as they are, according to the theory of the Senator from Vermont, never yet have developed any ambition to take especially in charge the management of the affairs of this District in detail, and so we have had to take from the commissioners what they have given us.

I would be willing to go part of the figure and say we would take not only that but all and give them the money substantially in a lump sum and let them expend it under a proper responsibility which ought to attach to their office. So far as this amendment is concerned, I care nothing about it except as the organ of the committee. If the Senate shall think that the amount ought to be what is named in the bill as it came from the House, well and good; and if they shall think it should be materially expended on the streets, avenues, and alleys named in the schedule referred to in the text of the bill, I am willing to agree to that also, so far as I am individually concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. I sympathize entirely with the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], but I am afraid that on account of the words of limitation in the previous part of the clause it will not accomplish its purpose. The section now is confined to work on sundry avenues and streets and the replacements of pavements on streets named in classes A, B, C, and D of Appendix B, b, referred to. Looking at Appendix B, I find that the streets are all named. Two of them seem to be east of the Capitol, one East Capitol street and the other H street. There is about $50,000, as near as I can see, appropriated in this schedule for east of the Capitol.

Mr. PLUMB. That is if you include H street.

Mr. SHERMAN. H street really ought not to be charged to the eastern part of the city, because the improvement of H street is really for the benefit of the western part of the city.

Mr. INGALLS. An outlet for the northwest.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to leave the amendment as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations as it is, requiring that the sums provided for for replacement of streets east of the Capitol shall remain, and insert as follows:

And in addition thereto there shall be expended out of said sum upon improvement of streets and avenues east of First street west, $50,000.

That $50,000 with the $50,000 already contained in the bill will make about $100,000 for streets east of First street west.

Mr. PLUMB. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee is to strike out "3" and insert "2."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is to be disagreed to, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been voted on yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment comes in in line 160.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, while this topic is under consideration, in reply to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], that I understand that the sidewalks and the curbing are not paid for out of the public funds but are paid for by the abutting proprietors. As to the other part of his observations about assessing the adjoining proprietors for what are called improvements of streets and which our experience has shown to be quite the reverse of the improvements of streets, I think that Congress did well in abolishing that thing. A street is a thing for general public benefit, nothing else, and therefore to compel the people, poor or rich, whatever they may be but generally poor in the outskirts where streets are extended, to pay for building a street for the lords of creation who reside around the Capitol or near the various places where bronze men on horseback sit in all weathers, in order that they can drive out into the country, I think is an outrage. Congress thought so and abolished it.

Wherever it is necessary to have a public highway, and it is for the public interest, the public should pay for it. Congress has thought so and has so determined, and I think my friend is mistaken in saying that this is the only instance where adjoining proprietors have not been assessed for that. I say this with the more freedom from suspicion that might be raised in respect to my attitude as the proprietor of a 20-foot lot and a little house in this town, from the fact that I have gone through my period of suffering and assessment and I am only speaking for the other poor of this District.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that I ought to criticise the Senator from Vermont because he owns so much or so little of the property of which he speaks——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take your choice.

Mr. PLUMB. But I submit to him that the rule which he announces as having been adopted by Congress is not the general rule; it is not the rule that is adopted elsewhere, as I believe; but whether it has been or not, I have been advised, and we were told last year by the engineer having this matter in charge, that the city and Government did pay out of the public funds for curbing and guttering and placing sidewalks, and that the only limitation upon that was that in some cases, and in some cases only, under the appropriation for permit work, the Government furnished the material and required the owner of the property to lay it down himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, in line 156, striking out "three" and inserting "two;" so as to read "$250,000." [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. INGALLS. I think it is because it is not understood.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Ohio had been accepted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He could not accept it; it is an amendment of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. The question is on reducing the appropriation as it came from the House to $250,000 for the improvement and repair of streets and avenues, and inasmuch as the amount proposed by the House is entirely within the revenues of the District, and as the need is very great and there is no protest from any quarter outside, I see no reason why the amendment should be agreed to. I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the bill as it came from the House the appropriation stands at $350,000. The Committee on Appropriations propose to make it $250,000. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it read "$300,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will recall the condition of many of the streets of the city he will see that already a very large reduction is made. The estimate submitted by the District commissioners is $374,000. The Secretary of the Treasury submitted an estimate to the amount of $315,000. The House then placed it at $350,000, about halfway between the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury and that of the District commissioners.

This is a matter which vitally affects the people of this District. We know that there are miles and miles of the old wooden streets that ought to be replaced. It is only a question of time when it must be done. Before every house where those streets are so laid it is sickly and unwholesome, and has been condemned by the physicians of the city. Those pavements ought certainly to be torn up and replaced in some way. This is the money of the people of the District largely; that is, one-half of it; the other half is paid by the Government of the United States like any other expenditure for the District. It seems to me as we have the money and the estimates are based upon the idea of keeping within the amount collected, it would be better to take the estimate of the commissioners unless there is some other object of expenditure that might be necessary.

This is a matter of public necessity, and to limit the power of the commissioners to make these improvements would be an unwise saving of these people's own money. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will be as liberal in providing the amount for this purpose as the House has been, and leave it at $350,000 and make the provision that has been agreed upon in regard to the distribution of the fund, so that the people in the eastern part of the city may have the benefit of some of this expenditure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has not yet been agreed upon, but I hope it will be, because I think it fair, if you have got the appropriation up to a sufficient amount. The state of the city is that it is a city much larger than its population will justify in an economic point of view. It is a capital city, as every Senator I suppose is very glad to believe and to know; but running out from this Capitol as the center of everything (one of the centers, if there can be more than one center) are avenues going east, and north, and west, and south, and southwest. So, from the President's House, which I believe is another center, or somewhere near there, are others running in every direction. Then there are all the rectangular streets, and after you get out of an area whose radius will not be more than a mile from the Capitol, probably less, or a mile from the Executive Mansion, probably less, you are merely in the outskirts of the town, with no inhabitants except here and there scattered houses, but with city lots that people who are filled with the laudable ambition of improving their condition buy and pay their taxes on and wait for a rise. The public money ought to be devoted first to the poor, and next to water and the health office, and so on, to preserve the lives and add to the security and comfort of the people, and then you come to the street money. By just so much as you take the money of the whole stock for streets, by just so much you diminish the money appropriated to these other objects, and, which is a great point about it, the means of paying off the debt of this District, which is perfectly enormous.

I wish for one, for the good of the very people who live on those outgoing streets all around, to be a little economical and careful in the total amount that we appropriate year by year for making asphalt pavements, &c., on streets where there is neither inhabitants nor traffic. That is my reasen for making this middle proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, making the appropriation $300,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to—ayes 20, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. That leaves the appropriation at $300,000 as we understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question is now between $300,000 and $350,000. I hope the Senate will allow it to be $350,000, which is $20,000 less than the commissioners have recommended and about half way between the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and the recommendation of the commissioners.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Vermont has been adopted fixing the amount at $300,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question now is between $300,000 and $350,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we disagree to the amendment it leaves the bill to stand as it came from the House at $350,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended, fixing the appropriation at $300,000 instead of $350,200.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves another amendment to the clause, which will now be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the proviso it is proposed to add:

And in addition thereto there shall be expended out of the said sum for the improvement of streets and avenues east of First street west, $50,000.

Mr. INGALLS. That is in lieu of the one I offered, to which I consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. The total must now be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be changed to conform to the amendment just adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. It should be $480,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will foot it up and insert the correct amount.

Mr. BUTLER. At the end of line 258 I move to add:

For maintenance of the Church Orphanage of the District of Columbia, the sum of $1,500.

The Senator in charge of the bill does not object to this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the Church Orphanage?

Mr. BUTLER. It is on Twentieth street. It is a charitable institution just as much entitled to the aid of the Government as any other in the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be true, but I should like to have the amendment explained.

Mr. BUTLER. It is recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia unanimously.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much was appropriated last year?

Mr. BUTLER. Not a dollar was appropriated. This is the first appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many different orphanages are we now supporting?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from South Carolina ought to give us a little information about this, where it is located, &c.

Mr. BUTLER. The best explanation I can give is contained in a letter from Captain Fox, who is the chairman of the committee on ways and means of the trustees. If the Senators desire it I will have the letter read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Senator ALLISON told me this morning that the Committee on Appropriations had struck out the sum that the Committee on the District of Columbia had recommended toward the support of the Orphanage of St. John's Parish.

For seven or eight years this home for little children has been sustained by private charity. Last year the number of inmates had increased beyond the means of its contributors. Upon an appeal to Congress, $6,000 was granted and a charter. With this sum the present building was purchased and repaired, and it is now free from debt, with the exception of about $600 of old taxes. It has fifty-one children of both sexes that have been gathered from the waifs and strays of the city. The immediate management is by a woman whose self-sacrificing life began and perfected this work. She has five women assistants, and all give their whole time to the care and training of the children without wages. There is also a board of women managers and the trustees are men. It is estimated that $60 will take care of a child for one year. From this fact any one can judge whether thrift is practiced, since with fifty-one children the yearly expenses for their care, education, clothing, food, &c., does not exceed $3,060.

The Church Orphanage is on Twentieth street, near F northwest, and any Senator or Representative is cordially invited to go and see whether the work there is faithfully done.

None of those who contribute labor or money wish to shun either. They pray for help because want and sorrow are increasing and the burden of relief is too great for private charity alone.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. V. FOX.
Chairman of the Committee of the Ways and Means and one of the Trustees.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
United States Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say this is a very worthy charity, supported by some one of the numerous churches in this town; but in this connection I should like to have my friend in charge of the bill turn to page 11 and tell us about each one of the various other institutions for which provision is made. I understand the one on lines 242 to 244, but coming to line 245 is the Women's Christian Association of the District of Columbia. What does it do?

Mr. PLUMB. It takes care of some destitute women. Before I became a member of this body, certainly five or six years ago, Congress appropriated $25,000 to put up a building for that association. That constituted a pretty stable basis for subsequent donations from the Treasury, which have been given with a regularity which is equal to the regularity of the appropriation acts which have been passed. It came to the present committee, or the sub-committee having charge of this bill, by an inheritance which it did not feel disposed to dispute. It has received the sum of $5,000 every year for four or five years as I know.

The other objects named on page 11 are in the same category. I think some of them have been on the bills for less than five years. Those not on former District of Columbia bills have been provided for by appropriations either in the sundry civil bill or in some other way. The National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children, in lines 247 to 254, is the only one which cares specially and only for the colored people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Kansas tell me whether the Women's Christian Association has a house where people who are in need and distress or sickness are taken in and provided for?

Mr. PLUMB. It has just such a house. I happen to know some of the lady managers of that association, and I know in a more or less formal way that they are doing just that work and doing it well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This money then is devoted to the care and support of those who are in need, and not to propagandism?

Mr. PLUMB. It is devoted entirely to those who are supposed to be in need.

Mr. BUTLER. I can say to the Senator that they are doing a most commendable work, for I have inspected the building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When you speak of the work being commendable you mean the physical care and protection of people who are in distress, as distinguished from circulating tracts, &c.?

Mr. BUTLER. Entirely. I have been there as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the building?

Mr. BUTLER. They have a building in the northwestern part of the city, at Thirteenth and R, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the location of the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children?

Mr. PLUMB. Near Howard University, just on the boundary, at the termination of Ninth street.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that also a kind of hospital?

Mr. PLUMB. That is the only one of all of them which I have visited. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and myself spent an hour or two investigating the building from turret to cellar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in the nature of a hospital?

Mr. PLUMB. It is not. It takes in destitute colored women, and colored children who have lost one or both parents, and cares for them until they are 10 or 12 years of age, or until such time as they can be apprenticed to suitable people, who will take care of them until they arrive at their majority. The Industrial Home School performs a like office for white people. That is over in Georgetown.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I understand. I understand the Saint Ann's Asylum, the Children's Hospital, and so on. I make these inquiries, because I had known something of the beneficent work of the person who inaugurated the Saint John's Guild, in order to call the attention of the Senate to the general question, not that I propose to do anything about it now, but to suggest whether it would not be better for the general good of this District to provide at some time (at some future session of course, always) for having money paid by taxation appropriated under one general law and in one general way, instead of giving out these little driblets to keep up so many different establishments and organizations and managements. If we could only forget our sectarianism and all pull together for one general purpose and under one organization and one management, I believe that the money we spend would go a great deal further than it does now, and it would be much more freely and to larger amounts given. I have only called attention to it now in order to say what I have said in the hope that some time all the forces of these good people may be co-ordinated to this one general object.

Mr. PLUMB. What the Senator from Vermont has said has been often expressed by those who, like him, take an interest in charities in the District. I make that statement for the purpose of what follows it. There is just getting into operation here an organization known as the Associated Charities of the District, which it is hoped will some day perform that office in regard to the co-ordination of the varied charities which the Senator from Vermont has spoken of. I will say to him, however, that the institution which the Senator from Missouri and myself visited, according to my limited knowledge upon this subject, would be very hard to improve upon. I am glad to certify that it is doing an exceedingly good work.

I had occasion to say this morning that if we could get somebody to bring up our Indians, who are our wards, no better and no worse, and certainly no more entitled to our care than the people here, as cheaply as is done here, those persons would be entitled to a great deal of the gratitude which they do not get now, because their work is not for the benefit of those who have that patent of nobility which the educators of the Indian youth are supposed to wear. They are there taking care in a proper way of the colored children on an annual appropriation of about $65 per capita, and I believe are doing as good a work as is being done for the Indians at $200 per capita. That may not be saying for them as much as I should like to say, but at all events I can say that much.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator did not understand me as expressing any doubt as to the zeal or fidelity of the people who are carrying on this work in the institutions he names, nor have I any doubt of their zeal and fidelity, nor of these others, every one of them. The point that I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate is that a vast deal more good, as I believe, could be done if this work could be co-ordinated and the expenses of the houses diminished under some one general associated management. That is the point. I am sure that no State that is well governed would keep up such a variety of different charities, but would endeavor in some way to bring them together for one purpose. Perhaps it can not be done, but certainly every one of these people is doing all that can be done, I dare say.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not understand the Senator from Vermont as criticising anything except what he expressed in language as to the general policy of scattering the resources of the District in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer an amendment from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to come in at the close of section 1.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of line 629 it is proposed to add:

In all cases where special assessments have been revised as provided for by law, or where they have been remitted by act of Congress, the commissioners of the District are hereby directed to issue drawback certificates to the holder of any such assessments for the amount said assessments have been reduced, and the interest accrued thereon: Provided, That application is made therefor within sixty days from the passage of this act; which drawback certificate shall be receivable for all arrears of general and special taxes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. It is very appropriate and necessary legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not so sure about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to insert in line 513, after the word "station," the words "in all;" so as to read:

And for the erection of a school building at Benning's Station; in all, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order on the clause on page 14, lines 324 to 332, which I understand was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, that that is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso referred to will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That no more than $22 per annum for each street lamp shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and in case a contract can not be made at that rate, the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material, for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That embraces legislation, of course.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that will not apply to the first four lines of the amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator is right. I am willing those lines should stand. From line 328 to 332 was the point I had in my mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From line 328 to 332, beginning with the words "and in case a contract can not be made at that rate," is all that the Chair understands the point of order to have been made on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The proviso as to an upward limit of expenditure I do not object to. I think that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not subject to the point of order. The point of order is sustained from line 328 to line 332, inclusive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To the word "purpose," leaving in the word "provided," at the end of line 332.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except that portion of the proviso which has just been ruled out on the point of order?

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

VOLUMES OF GLOBE AND RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before laying the unfinished business before the Senate the Chair will submit some formal business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver in bound form to the Secretary of the Interior the volumes of the Congressional Globe purchased from Messrs. Rives.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, from the volumes thus delivered to him, supply to the library of each of the Executive Departments, to the State library of each State, to the Territorial library of each Territory, and to the library of each depository of public documents in the several States designated, or to be designated in accordance with provisions of law, such volumes as are required to complete the sets of Congressional Globes in said libraries.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the volumes of the Globe remaining after the distribution hereinbefore directed has been made, to such libraries in the several States as in his discretion he may select to receive them.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress the name and location of the libraries supplied with documents under the provisions of this resolution, and the number of volumes supplied to each.

Be it further resolved, That hereafter the Public Printer shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a sufficient number of bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to enable that officer to supply one copy to each library named in section 2 of this resolution; but this shall not authorize the reprinting of any back numbers of the Globe or RECORD.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$110,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16, in line 3 of the bill, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "The same to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 5 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, &C., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I desire to give notice that I shall call up the bill in the morning immediately after the morning business, and I hope the Senate will continue its consideration until it is finished to-morrow.

SUPPRESSION OF BIGAMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the Utah bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary report a substitute for the bill, the seventh section of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has moved to strike out. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] moved an amendment which perfects the part to be stricken out, and will be first in order. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the word "person" instead of "female" wherever it occurs in section 7; after the word "whatever," in the fourth line of section 7, to insert:

Provided, That such person shall have been tried and convicted of the crime of bigamy or of polygamy according to law.

And to insert the word "such" between the words "by" and "females" in the seventh line of section 7; so as to read:

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for any person to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever: Provided, That such person shall have been tried and convicted of the crime of bigamy or of polygamy according to law. And any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by such persons is hereby annulled.

Mr. ROLLINS. My colleague [Mr. BLAIR] is sick and is necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That amendment would really, in the interest of the Mormon and polygamist church, carry it back to the old law substantially before we passed the act of last year; that is, that no person shall be deprived of the right to vote on the ground of practicing polygamy until he has been tried and convicted. The Mormons would give a large premium on the passage of a law of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to section 7 as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment repeals the existing law, as I understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; it goes back to the Mormon régime, before the law was enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARROW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ROLLINS. My colleague [Mr. BLAIR] is necessarily absent on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW]. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. SLATER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG], and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. BUTLER. I am assured that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] would vote "nay," and as that is my vote I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Brown,	Coke,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Call,	Morgan,

NAYS—37.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jackson,	Rollins,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to strike out section 7 of the substitute reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Secretary to read section 8 of the existing law, which I hold in my hand.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Mr. HOAR. It appears, therefore, that the reason given by the Senator from Vermont in favor of the existing section, that the women in that Territory would vote, as he described it, as their lords and masters wished, fails us if that phrase is to be understood as describing Mormon women, because by the present law those who are married according to the Mormon practices are excluded, and all persons who come within the description of polygamists or bigamists. So the present section becomes not a criminal law leveled at certain gross and most disreputable criminal practices, providing for the means of proof and punishment, but the Senator brings forward a bill prohibiting the people of Utah from exercising the prerogative exercised in every other Territory, to wit, that of prescribing qualifications for their voters within innocent and proper limits, and provides that the women now enjoying the privilege of voting there shall not vote, on no other ground except the belief that they will vote in a particular way, in the belief that they will vote under a particular duress or restraint. That might be a proper reason for the interference of Congress, but those who are exposed to that duress are prohibited now, and it proposes to make that general and extend it to all women, of course only including in the effect of the enactment those who are not under Mormon duress on the avowed and undisguised ground that they will not vote in the mode which is desired in this particular by the authors of the bill.

It seems to me that this is a violation of sound constitutional principles, and that it is equally unjustifiable whether we approve of suffrage being extended to women or not.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I propose to give very briefly my reasons for voting for the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, with the seventh section in that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to strike out. I voted for the law that was read at the Clerk's desk, depriving persons who practice polygamy, either men or women, in the Territory of Utah of the right to vote or hold office. I did that as a step in the direction at least of trying to reform if possible or change in some way the influence of the priesthood upon the people of Utah. It does not seem to have had the desired effect.

I believe that polygamy, as practiced in Utah, or as practiced anywhere (but we are dealing with Utah, and as applicable to the people of this country), is, if I may use such an expression, a cancer upon the body-politic. There is but one way to deal with it, and that is to put the knife to the roots of it and cut it out and destroy it. There is no character of legislation within the purview and meaning of the Constitution of the United States that would be calculated to suppress polygamy in that or any other Territory that I would not vote for.

This is not a strike, as has been said, at the right to vote. It is not a question whether female suffrage is right or whether female suffrage is wrong. It is not a question in this bill as to whether the principle of female suffrage might be applied in Massachusetts or in New Hampshire, or in my own State, and whether it is correct or incorrect. It is bringing the question before Congress as to what we may or can do to influence and affect the practice of polygamy.

I do not understand why it is that Democratic Senators are so sensitive on this subject; neither can I understand why it is that persons in favor of female suffrage will come to the Capitol and defend the right of suffrage being given to the Mormon women when it is not given to others. I do not mean that they advocate that Congress should do it, but advocate that we should not undo it, inasmuch as they have that right there. There is no one, either man or woman, in the Territory of Utah or elsewhere who belongs to what is commonly known as the Church of the Latter-Day Saints, or, as we commonly understand it, the Mormon Church, high or low, rich or poor, young or old, who is not directed and who is not made obedient to the dictates and mandates of the head of the church. No person has ever been allowed to hold an elective office in the Territory of Utah where they had the power who did not hold it from the Mormon Church, and no one else can hold office there because of the power of that church. There never has been for centuries the exercise of the power of any church, in this or any other country, that has been so potent where it exists according to its numbers as has been the influence and power of the Mormon theocracy.

Because of the power that is exercised and the influence brought to bear on those people, I shall vote to strike suffrage down in Utah so far as it applies to females; but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] ask why not strike suffrage down altogether and let no one vote in Utah if we desire to apply this principle? There is nothing in that proposition in this connection. We are striking at the power of that church over the people in sustaining crime, at the power of that church as its influence is brought to bear against the laws of this country, against the institutions of this country, against the enforcement of the laws of this country. Inasmuch as the act that we have passed heretofore does not go far enough, I am, as I said, willing to go to any length within the Constitution of the United States for the suppression of this crime and abomination in the eyes and face of civilization.

Senators may quibble as much as they have a mind to do, when they admit the constitutionality of this proposition and oppose it they can not escape the logic of their position, which is to indirectly defend Mormonism. If this objection should fail some other objection would be found. The proposition introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire (who is absent now from his seat) to repeal the law that was passed at the last session of Congress and to make it apply only to those who are convicted is in the direction of supporting Mormonism, with all its enormities, as it exists in Utah.

The proposition that has been voted down and the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts are in the direction of protecting these people in their unlawful and irreligious and immoral practices, as they are only sustained by their power with the ballot. I do not mean that this is the intention of the Senator, but this is the effect. Their practices are crimes against the laws of the United States. They are crimes against the moral sense of every civilized people on the face of this globe, and these crimes are perpetrated under the claim of religion. I do not propose by consent or act in any way to assist in covering the worst of crimes by allowing them to be done under the pretense of misnamed religion. I would rather tear off the mask from these lawbreakers, that they might be exposed and punished.

No man can be justified in this country in not supporting propositions that tend to extirpate and cut out by the roots this evil. I supported the bill of last session with great earnestness, and I support this one with the same desire for its success that I did the last. I believe it is a step in addition to others taken in the right direction in grappling with this infamy, this crime, this scandal, this disgrace upon our country. And can it be said that Congress and all the power of the Government is not sufficient to suppress and destroy this infamy? Sir, if I had the power I would make universal destruction of it at one blow.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, if this bill were an enactment in plain and direct terms that the Constitution of the United States was false; that the system of popular government was a failure and a delusion; that there were no restraints of power contained in it, no protection to individual rights, it would be no more clear and palpable a subversion not only of the principles of the Constitution and of its plain and direct affirmation but also of the personal rights of every man, woman, and child in this country.

But that is not all, sir; it is a plain and flagrant insult to Christianity, to the ministers of the Christian religion, to the spirit of the Christian faith, and to the example of the great founder of the Christian religion. What of argument, what of reason, can there be for the proposition that whatever each coming Congress shall see fit to declare as to what religion is, as to what men shall believe, shall constitute the law of the time and for the people? What is there in the Constitution of the United States in regard to marriage, polygamy, or monogamy to authorize Congress to declare what shall be the domestic relations of the people of the several Territories? I recognize as firmly as any one the principles of our civilization and our social order which establishes monogamy or marriage to one woman and protects it with the force of law and with its prohibitory sanctions.

I desire to surround this relation with all the restraints and protection of just and humane laws, and to encourage its proper observance and the growth of the higher and better character in both men and women which grows out of it, but that is not the question presented by this bill of pains and penalties.

No reason can be given even by the distinguished author of this bill for a proposition that the Congress of the United States has authority exclusive and absolute without limitation in regard to the subject of marriage or in regard to the personal liberty of citizens of the United States in the Territories. Is it simply because the language of the Constitution affirms that the Congress of the United States shall have exclusive power to legislate in the District of Columbia and in the places ceded by the several States? What connection is there between that proposition and the exercise of unlimited authority? Can this kind of power coexist with the prohibition of any power on the part of Congress to interfere with the personal liberty, the personal rights of a citizen except by judicial trial? Is it not plain and apparent that this is a government founded upon the principle of the capacity of a majority of the people in the different political communities that constitute it to control and govern themselves, to make their own laws? Who can deny that this is the foundation and the very essence of the Constitution of the United States, of our State governments, and the principle of all our political institutions—the capacity of a majority of the people not disfranchised by that majority for crime or inability to exercise the suffrage? Who can deny that the very principle and life of our Constitution, our national and our State governments, is the capacity of a majority of the people in the different localities to prescribe laws for themselves on the subject of their domestic relations—laws upon the subject of the free exercise of their opinions? Here is a proposition to deny to the people the right of self-government, plain and unquestionable, and to assert that the majority of the people of a particular Territory or locality shall be governed by a minority. Why? Because the opinions of the majority are said to be contrary to our views of religion and our views of right.

Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations upon this subject. The Senator from Vermont affirmed the other day that the Utah women are in a condition of servitude. That was the remark of the honorable Senator. Therefore the Senator from Vermont asks—what? That they be deprived of the power to make themselves free. The majority, a large majority of a particular community, the women of that community, it is said, are in a state of servitude, and therefore, in order to make them free, he deprives them of the power to make themselves free; he takes away from them the power to emancipate themselves by the control of the laws of that Territory from that condition of servitude. Sir, what kind of reason is there in a proposition of that kind? The women of Utah are in a state of servitude, and therefore you shall take away from them the right to say whether or not they shall leave that condition of servitude and deprive them of all political power. The majority of the people of Utah entertain religious opinions condemned by us and our Christian civilization and our social system, and therefore they are excepted from the principle of local self-government and must be deprived of personal liberty, of judicial trial, and of political power and all rights and immunities.

The Senator from Vermont makes a new definition of servitude and freedom, and says the women of Utah are in a condition of voluntary servitude (note the words "voluntary servitude"), and therefore he proposes by law to put them into a condition of—what? Of involuntary freedom from their own will by subjugating them to his and our opinions, and to new and strange and prohibited instrumentalities and agencies of government. Sir, it is obvious that there is no reason in this, that this is a contradiction not only in terms but of reason itself. The Senator from Vermont proposes to make a matter of opinion on the subject of the right or wrong of having one wife or more than one a condition for the exercise of the suffrage. The argument of the Senator from Vermont clearly affirms that if Congress chooses they have the power to require a man to have a dozen wives and to make this a condition of exercising the suffrage, or they may prescribe by law absolute celibacy to both men and women in a Territory and make this a condition of exercising the suffrage.

Why not, Mr. President? Neither the Senator from Vermont nor any other Senator can deny with reason that if Congress has the power in its will and discretion to say that opinions on the subject of having two or three or more wives as a condition of suffrage is practicable and within its power, that it has also of necessity by the same omnipotent discretion the right to say that a man shall not vote unless he has a dozen wives, and the unlimited and unrestrained discretion of Congress is the sole law and guide of its power. There is a method for the exercise of reason and certain processes of thought which reach conclusions.

Mr. President, principles have some relation to facts and we are not left to mere arbitrary assertion for the government of our opinions. The law which the Senator from Vermont proposes to make rests on the proposition that Congress has the right to give the people of the Territories the right to vote or to withhold it—to prescribe conditions and qualifications for the exercise of the right of suffrage in their discretion. If this is true then it results that they may impose any conditions they please. Let us see if it is true.

Can Congress say by law that no man or woman shall have the right to vote unless they are living in a state of polygamy with a dozen wives or husbands? If not, why? The right to impose conditions on the suffrage in the Territories is unlimited and subject only to the discretion of Congress. If there is no constitutional limitation on the power of Congress, then they may do this or anything else they please. But is there any foundation in principle for this idea that Congress may exercise power in the Territories for purposes or by methods not authorized by the Constitution? Can Congress provide that men or women may be deprived of their lives, liberty, or property without a hearing and trial before a judicial tribunal?

Can Congress provide by law that men and women may be convicted on false and suborned testimony, and without a trial by jury, and if not, why?

The reason is because of the very manifest proposition that all the powers granted in the Constitution, wherever exercised and however exercised, must be exercised subject to the limitations and for the purposes prescribed and in the spirit of the purposes of the Constitution. Now, what provision of the Constitution is it that gives Congress the power to require the men and women of a Territory to live in a polygamous condition, if they do not choose to do so? The proposition of the Senator from Vermont and of this bill is that whenever a majority of Congress see fit to do so they may pass a law requiring the people of this country, against their consciences, to live in a state of polygamy in the different Territories. That is the test of the proposition. Who would dare to propose such a law? What provision in the Constitution or what part of its letter or its spirit is it which asserts that the collective will and intelligence of the people of any State or locality, as expressed by a majority not disqualified from ignorance or non-residence or legal incapacity or crime, is incapable of directing or controlling its affairs?

What part of the Constitution of the United States is it that affirms the incapacity of a majority of the people of any locality, whether State or Territory, to direct and control their own affairs? There is no such power and no such principle. The Government of the United States by the Constitution is a government of States, with sole and exclusive power over the domestic relations of their people, and a national government, with power over their foreign affairs and the relations of the States with each other and their foreign and interstate commerce.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him right there?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I will, with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like merely to make a suggestion in the line of the Senator's argument. He says that if Congress has power to declare that persons shall not vote in Utah because of bigamy, Congress has also the power to declare that those only shall have a right to vote who have ten wives. Suppose Congress disfranchises a man for murder and says he shall not vote because he has committed murder, will the reverse of that be true, and does the Senator hold that Congress could pass a law providing that no man should vote unless he committed ten murders?

Mr. CALL. Let the Senator answer my argument; that is no answer. If the Congress of the United States has the absolute power to say that a man shall not vote unless he commits murder it has the power to say that he shall not vote unless he commits ten murders. If the power is absolute it is not governed by moral or political considerations, nor by right nor wrong. The suggestion of the Senator from Illinois does not deny or qualify the principles which I have stated. This is a matter of political principle under our civil polity, and of argument and reason based thereon, and not of prejudice or opinion, or the moral or religous propriety of monogamy or marriage under our social system.

So I say, Mr. President, it is a manifest proposition that if the Congress of the United States has unrestrained power to prescribe that polygamous relations, or having two or more wives, and opinions upon that subject, shall deprive a man of the right to vote, it has the right to prescribe that he shall have polygamous relations as a condition of political enfranchisement if it chooses.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. He made some reference to ignorance. I do not claim any greatness myself.

Mr. CALL. It does not matter what we claim.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall not question the ability of the Senator, but I should like to put this proposition to him——

Mr. CALL. Neither of us are very great; but we are talking now about propositions——

Mr. LOGAN. It is a proposition that I want to talk about. The Senator says we have got the same right to pass a law requiring persons to commit a crime, as we have to pass a law requiring them not to commit a crime. I should like him to show me what principle there is in the science of government, in law, or the principles upon which constitutions are based, or any rule of civil conduct, which will justify him in saying that any legislative department has a right to pass a law requiring people to commit crime. I should like him to show me upon what principle or theory any government or legislative body has that power given to it.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Illinois is a very distinguished man, very able and forcible on many subjects; but I knew when he spoke that he had not understood and did not perceive the true relations of this question; and now I will endeavor to show him why we all ought to learn sometimes, and even the most ignorant of us can teach the most learned something. The reason why is this: It is because this is not a question of moral, not a question of the Decalogue which says "thou shalt not murder." It is a question of constitutional power. It is a question of whether the Congress of the United States has the right to say you shall have two wives or three wives or only one wife, because the Constitution does not give the power, and because your system of government is that the States shall have the right to say whether a man shall have the right to have one or two or three wives, and shall have the right to say whether he shall or shall not commit murder, as the condition or qualification for exercising the suffrage; but the States and the Federal Government alike are prohibited from attaching the consequences of crime to a man either by punishment or indirectly by depriving him of an immunity or privilege, without a conviction. Therefore it is that the difference between the moral and the political law constitutes the reason. The moral law deals with the right and wrong in human conduct; it prohibits one and commands the other. The political law deals with powers of Government, and makes these powers either absolute or limited, and does not restrain them by the moral law but by limitations of the powers themselves.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question.

Mr. CALL. I yield, certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. Does the Senator say that the Congress of the United States, which has exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, has not a right to pass laws against burglary, fornication, bigamy, or any other crime recognized as a crime against public decency?

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. MAXEY. If it has that right in the District of Columbia where is the dividing line between the power of Congress over this District and over any Territory that belongs to the United States?

Mr. CALL. This is not a question of the punishment of crime. If this bill proposed to declare that polygamy in the Territory of Utah should be crime, and, upon indictment and trial and conviction, that there should be a punishment attached, I should have nothing to say; but this bill proposes to disfranchise a whole people. Why? Because it says they entertain opinions different from those which the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Texas entertain upon the subject of polygamy, without trial, without conviction, without hearing, and without evidence?

This bill proposes to disfranchise a whole people and deny them the right of self-government on the ground that they are guilty of criminal practices, and have laws on the subject of their domestic relations which we do not approve.

If Congress were to declare by law that the people of the District of Columbia should be denied self-government because Congress did not approve of their religious opinions and practices and regarded them as immoral and irreligious and detrimental, it would be a case somewhat in point but still distinguished from this by the fact that Congress by the Constitution is made the exclusive legislative power of this District.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator if the Congress of the United States has not a perfect right to pass a law prescribing the qualifications of voters in any Territory under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United States?

Mr. CALL. Provided they do not prescribe such qualifications as are disqualifications, because of opinions or immoral acts of which they have not been convicted, and for temporary government in the Territories—and not in denial of their right of self-government or of the principles of government established by the Constitution.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator does not comprehend what I ask. If Congress can pass a law declaring that all persons over 21 years of age are qualified voters, have they not that right, to the exclusion of all other persons?

Mr. CALL. They have.

Mr. MAXEY. Suppose the law should declare that?

Mr. CALL. It is perfectly competent for Congress to say that none but persons over 80 years should vote, but that would be impossible in practice. It would not be legitimate for the Congress of the United States to say that boys of 21 years of age who believed that the Catholic Church was right should vote, or that the Protestant Church was right, or who believed that polygamy was right or that polygamy was wrong. Why? Because those are subjects which are committed by our form of government in the religious part to nobody but the domestic relations to the local government; and there is an absence of power in the Constitution of the United States and in the Government of the United States to prescribe what shall be the domestic relations of the people; and therefore as that power is absent you can not supply it for the Territories.

By analogy it belongs to the people, upon the principle that this Government is founded on the capacity of the majority of the people of every locality, as the competent and controlling power, to govern their domestic relations and their property and rights relative to each other. That is the principle of our Government. If it be true that the capacity of a majority of the people in the different localities is the life and principle of our Constitution, then Congress has no right to say that the majority of these people shall be disfranchised because of their opinions of this or that or the other kind. The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Texas might say to me, "But how of a state of war?" That upsets all theories. The strong hand of power knows no constitutional restraint; but that is not a case in point. The question here is whether because Congress in establishing a Territorial government may say that none but persons of 21 years of age shall vote, therefore they may say that commissioners shall deny to a majority of the people the right to vote—because in their opinion the majority are guilty of criminal practices—and to place the Government in the hands of a minority. Who will deny that the principle of this Government is the capacity of the majority of the people in every locality to determine their own domestic relations toward each other, such as marriage, such as the criminality of this, that, or the other act, or the propriety of this, that, or the other act? Will my friend from Texas show me the part of the Constitution which gives a right to discredit the capacity of a majority of the people to govern themselves in their own affairs?

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Florida that every State prescribes the qualifications of its voters. It has a right to say that a woman may or may not vote; it has a right to say that a man convicted of murder shall not vote; it has a right to say that one who does not pay taxes shall not vote; it has a right to say that certain property qualifications shall exist, and some States do so. I am not speaking of the question of what they ought to do, but of the question of power. To-day there are States in this Union in which those who are 21 years of age, naturalized citizens of the United States, are not permitted to vote, and there are in other States men who because they can not read the Constitution are not permitted to vote. If the Government of the United States sees proper to say as a question of public policy that certain parties shall not vote in a Territory, have we not the power to do it?

Mr. CALL. Undoubtedly so. But that is not the question; that does not reach the case. Beyond a doubt every State can, and by a majority of the people in conformity with its State laws has a right to say who shall vote and who shall not vote, and at what age they shall vote, what qualifications there shall be on the suffrage; but it has not the power to say that men shall not vote if they are Catholics or if they are Protestants or if they entertain this, that, or the other religious belief.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill does not contain any such proposition.

Mr. CALL. I beg my friend's pardon; that is all there is in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Point out the clause.

Mr. CALL. I will endeavor to do so before I get through. That is the reason it is a flagrant attack upon our religion and our Christianity, and the influence of the Christian minister and the efficiency of the Christian Gospel—a flagrant assault. If it be true that the hand of legislation and power is needed to supplement the majesty of argument, of truth, of religion, and to crush out error, then our Christianity is a failure.

Mr. LOGAN. It depends on what we call Christianity; whether we call having ten wives Christianity!

Mr. CALL. The worship of Almighty God, according to the dictates of every man's conscience, is religion. Christianity follows divine example, which refused to accept the aid of legions of angels with the sword, but confronted error with the persuasive arguments of truth and the sublime example of the Saviour upon the cross. That is Christianity and the Christian religion, and our form of government prohibits the exercise of any power by Congress respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. What does the Senator from Illinois understand to be the meaning of religion?

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to this: The bill does not propose to inquire into anybody's religion; it proposes to affect persons who are guilty of crime. It is against what is considered a crime. It does not prohibit anybody from enjoying his religion. If he believes that Joe Smith was a prophet he has a right to believe it. It does not prohibit anybody from believing that, but we consider polygamy not religion, and not Christianity, but a crime.

Mr. CALL. Suppose they do not, who is to judge?

Mr. LOGAN. We are to judge; we are the lawmakers, and we are the judges to-day as to whether polygamy is a crime or not when we undertake to legislate.

Mr. CALL. If you will find anything in the Constitution of the United States directly or indirectly that sustains that statement, I will be glad to acknowledge my error.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that if the Catholic religion or any other religion taught murder, polygamy, arson, bribery, perjury, or any of the crimes that are known as felonies, we certainly should have power to legislate against the crime and against that which tended to the crime, without affecting what persons might believe as to a God or a Christ. That does not affect their belief; it only affects their acts; it affects their conduct; it strikes at the effect of their belief, not the belief itself.

Mr. CALL. Now let us see if the Senator from Illinois is right. If he is right I am wrong. What is that provision which was read to-day which says that a man shall not exercise the right of suffrage if he is guilty of—what? Of polygamy. Or that a woman shall be deprived of it, a whole people, because of their supposed polygamous opinions. Is that legislating for the punishment of a crime without trial, without hearing, without conviction, without evidence, upon the opinion of the Senator from Illinois stated here as a member of Congress?

Mr. LOGAN. Has the Senator heard any statute read that went as far as he says?

Mr. CALL. Yes, the statute of last year, and this bill of to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator is very much mistaken. Let him read it.

Mr. CALL. There is no use for me to read it. If this bill does not deprive the men and women of the Territory of Utah of the right to vote because of their polygamous opinions, what is it——

Mr. LOGAN. That is a very different thing.

Mr. CALL. Without conviction, but on the determination of certain commissioners, without any judicial power, then I am wrong.

If the former act and this bill do not declare with the force of law the rightful power of Congress to deprive a majority of three-fourths or four-fifths of a great number of people—numerous enough to be a Territory or State—of political rights because of opinions and practices disapproved by Congress, and place the entire government of that people in a small minority of other opinions and practices, then I am mistaken.

Mr. LOGAN. That is a very different proposition. The Senator said the statute read at the desk deprived them of the right to vote on account of their belief. I say there is no such law. It deprives them of the right to vote because they practice polygamy and bigamy, and they are deprived of it on that account, but not on account of their belief.

Mr. CALL. It deprives them of that without any kind of evidence that they have done it, without any trial, without any hearing, without any conviction, and leaves them, without the constitutional processes which guard and protect them from arbitrary deprival of political or other rights to the opinions of the Senator from Illinois and the commissioners, to have or not to have political rights as they may choose. That is the reason why it does it, for the mere matter of belief; because it is without evidence and conviction, and in some of its provisions makes opinion or belief evidence of the alleged criminal practices; because it makes the political power of the state attack what is termed the Mormon Church, and constructs a government, a political power on the basis of one religious belief, and in opposition to another because the other is injurious and violative of our social and religious ideas.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator, so as to settle the question between him and me, that if a Senator lived in the city of Washington with five wives, openly and notoriously, I would vote to expel him from the Senate without any trial or conviction, on the ground that he was immoral and criminal before the civilized world. I would not want any judgment of a court.

Mr. CALL. I do not propose to join issue with my friend from Illinois in regard to his morality or his sanctity or his better morals than others. I am free to say too that, without undertaking to burn every one who does not agree with me in my opinions, I am opposed to immorality everywhere; but I love the patient, the genuine disciple of Christ who, with the law of love, with intelligence, with calm gentleness, attacks and extirpates error everywhere. I venerate and respect the priesthood and ministry of the Christian Church and good men everywhere; but I do not need to vaunt my morality. I can see the sinner or the Mormon live in this world, if the Almighty permits him, without wanting to put him to death, and I should never vote to put him out of the Senate of the United States because he was guilty of either a fault or a crime, without a calm judicial investigation in this tribunal, by a judgment made with all the forms and processes of law and in the orderly manner of judicial decision, and that is the difference between those who oppose this bill and those who favor it.

Mr. LOGAN. The difference is just this, if the Senator will allow me: I would vote to put him out of the Senate because of the fact that he committed a crime and it was a known fact and had been proven before a committee of the Senate, without any judgment of a court, without any conviction that would imprison him, without any conviction that would fine him; but on the fact being made evident to the Senate of the United States, I would vote to expel him. That is the difference between the Senator and myself. The Senator would want him to go before a court to be convicted, tried by a jury, and sentenced to the penitentiary before he would put him out; I would put him out before that. The difference between the Senator and me is that he would not punish the man or deprive him of his rights from the known commission of a felony, but he would deprive him of his rights after he had gone to the penitentiary. After a man goes to the penitentiary it does not require any law to deprive him of his rights.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to put a question to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CALL. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. In the case the Senator from Illinois supposes of a Senator, it would be the judgment of a court. In that case the Senator is a judge for the purpose of rendering the judgment of expulsion from the Senate for good cause. On what ground does he base the exclusion in this bill of the women who are not found to be bigamists or polygamists or to have contracted this criminal tie?

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer it, or I will try to. In the first place, the Senator from Florida and I were discussing the proposition as to whether these people had been convicted of crime, and I made the statement that I would, without a conviction of crime before a court——

Mr. HOAR. I call the Senator's attention to this——

Mr. LOGAN. Let me go on. The Senator asked me first whether it would not be the judgment of a court of the character that he was speaking of in reference to punishing these people, where we acted to expel a man without conviction before a jury. It would be a different proposition. We expel him upon mere evidence that comes before a committee, or before the Senate, the same as the law of prohibition applicable to persons practicing polygamy in the Territories, where they are deprived of their rights on the same kind of evidence before the commission.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. That was the proposition between the Senator from Florida and myself. I say that under the power of Congress we have the right to do that, and the fact being demonstrated that men are guilty of crime, it does not require the judgment of a court. Then we agree on that.

Then the Senator from Massachusetts asks me why this proposition to exclude women from voting. In the first place, Congress has the right to do it. The Senator will agree to that, I think. It has the power at least. Having the power to do it and believing it is in the interest of good government, and in that direction in opposition to polygamy and the practice of polygamy, I vote for it for the reason as I said that I would vote for anything that was going in the direction of extirpating or destroying this infamy and slander against the people of this country.

Mr. HOAR. Of course I understand, and perfectly well, the opinions of those persons who think that women ought not to vote anywhere.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not said that.

Mr. HOAR. So I understand; but that is the opinion of probably a majority of this body and of the American people to-day, at any rate of a large portion; but I do not understand that this is put on that ground.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody proposes in this way and at this time to exercise our constitutional privilege of determining that it is not expedient that any Territory should permit women to vote, because if we did we should extend it to Wyoming and the other Territories. Gentlemen therefore put it on the ground that the voting by women who not only have not been adjudged guilty of any criminal practice, but are not even supposed to entertain opinions which would lead them to exercise their votes in favor of any criminal practice, but by all women alike, is improper. The Senator from Vermont, like the rain of heaven, falls on the just and the unjust alike with his penal statute.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me I will give my reason why I vote for this, although it excludes Gentile women.

Mr. HOAR. I want to know if that is not violating the principle the Senator avowed in his colloquy with the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. I vote for this although it does apply to Gentile women, because there is no one in the Territory of Utah to-day, in my judgment, that has been opposed to polygamy and works against it but what would give up the right of suffrage to see that power destroyed, and the only way you can destroy it is to destroy the political power they exercise, either the men or the women.

Mr. HOAR. Then it seems to me that the Senator from Illinois does avow the principle which is my objection to the bill, that we have the right, not speaking now of the legal power, but speaking of the only principles on which we are bound to exercise that power, to deprive persons by reason of the opinion which it is supposed will govern their vote of a public right without those persons having committed any act whatever which is a violation of law.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; no such thing is announced in this bill or in this section that is proposed to be made into a law. It declares that the women shall not have the right of suffrage in the Territory. I may have one reason for voting for that and the Senator may have another. When you come to destroy a principle you can not destroy it by what you or I might say, but it must be in the act itself. We do not destroy or attack any principle. So far as that is concerned we follow the right that belongs to Congress, and you may exercise it for one reason and I for another. It is purely a question of motive.

Mr. CALL. I must resume the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). The Senator from Florida is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALL. When I left the discussion I was endeavoring to point out to the Senator from Illinois that the great objection to this bill was that it declared that our form of government was an absolute failure, not only in saying that men should be proscribed politically for opinions respecting matters of religion, however wrong; that they should be deprived of political power, incapacitated from any part in the Government, and that it should be done without trial, without conviction; that the right of being eligible to the exercise of the suffrage should be taken away from them upon the opinion of certain ministerial officers; that they were living in a certain condition; that certain legal consequences which the Constitution requires to be the result of criminal acts should attach to them, and that before trial and before conviction they should be thus disfranchised and deprived of any part in the power of the Government; that a whole community should by this arbitrary power be turned over to the government of a minority.

The Senator from Illinois cited the instance of a Senator who might be expelled; but it is not necessary that I should stop to answer that, for that is a special power under the Constitution and for a special purpose, and in its nature a judicial power and to be exercised by those charged with it in judicial forms and in the manner of judicial procedure and under the checks and limitations of judicial procedure. But let us go on. I say the Government of the United States by the Constitution is a Government of States with sole and exclusive power over the domestic relations of their people. Who denies that? The principle of this Government is sole and exclusive power in the local governments known as States over this question with power in the National Government over foreign affairs and the relations of the States with each other and their foreign and interstate commerce.

Admit that fact to be so; admit that the whole superstructure and power of these great institutions of ours are contained within these definitions, national power for national objects, State or local power for local objects, where, then, in the Constitution of the United States will be found even the semblance of plausibility for an assertion that this National Government because it has exclusive power in the Territories has power to prescribe those relations and exercise that authority over vast tracts of country with hundreds of thousands of people in denial of the wishes of a majority of that people and the laws made by them for the government of their own institutions? Is it because of the technical idea that they have not been declared complete political communities in the sense of the law? Does that affect the spirit and the purpose of the division of power contained in the Constitution? Let us see if we are left to mere arbitrary assertion on this subject. There are modes of reasoning, and even the honorable and eminent Senator from Vermont, whose reputation extends throughout this country, is not emancipated from the laws of reason and the propositions of religion and truth. No man is.

Mr. MAXEY. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment? That is the exact point before the Senate, a motion to strike out the section which says:

That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

That is all there is of it. Now, I state to the Senator from Florida that I would vote for that section with my views of public policy without the slightest regard to the special surroundings of Utah or any Territorial bill whatever.

Mr. CALL. My friend from Texas has no argument with me, then, on the subject of suffrage, for I am only considering how far it is proper for this Congress to say, not that polygamy is not an outrage, not that it is not a foul blot upon the civilization of any country, not that it is not in antagonism to those domestic relations which constitute in their full felicity and fruition the glory and the power of the state, not that it is not inimical to our religion and Christianity as now developed, but whether or not this Congress, under our limitations of power, has the right to say that the women of Utah or the men of Utah shall not exercise their religion as they may think is right and proper, and that they shall be deprived of all political power in this country because of their entertainment of opinions upon this subject different from our own. That is the question; a proposition which I say is fatal to the preservation of the liberties of this country, and the principles which are the very foundation of them, made so by those eminent New England statesmen who with the fathers of our country of old Virginia and the original thirteen Colonies created our form of government and the Constitution and the principles on which it is based.

I say, then, Mr. President, that no one will deny this principle of local authority, of State authority, of the capacity of the majority of the people within any designated political locality or State according to State boundaries or a Territory when sufficient population has gone there, the abstract principle of the capacity of the majority of the people in any given locality of sufficient extent to control and direct their domestic affairs, and that they alone are capable of regulating them, and that to the National Government power is given for different purposes and different objects. But the argument is that because it is so given, and because it is exclusive, it is therefore absolute, and may be exercised in conflict and denial of what? Of the essential principle that a majority of the people in any locality shall govern there as to objects of government not included in the national powers. That is the proposition, that because it is exclusive it may take away the very life-blood and the essential principle of your form of government, the capacity of the people, a majority of the people, in any locality to control and govern that class of political subjects, those domestic relations which by the Constitution are denied to the National Government to control and govern, not a case of necessity, but a case of full and implied political power.

It results from this proposition that certain subjects are the subjects of national power and State authority; certain others the subjects of local authority; that the classification of powers as to subjects or objects for its exercise is its essential feature, the withholding from the National Government power over the local affairs, the domestic relations, the religious belief of the people, or of power to punish them for crime as to these subjects.

The fact that the political divisions under this form of government were and are States and the National Government and Territories to become States, and that in the latter the temporary power of government must of necessity be in the national power, can not destroy or limit the principles on which this distribution of power has been made. Does it not result that there is no power in the National Government as power to prescribe laws over subjects of control which is not given to them over the domestic relations of a people except in the District of Columbia and the places ceded in the Territories where it is expressly given, and even there it must be exercised sub modo? Who will say that even in the District of Columbia this Congress can say that no Catholic shall be allowed to exercise political power? And yet the argument of the Senator from Vermont imperatively demands that this Congress to-day, because the authority is absolute and exclusive in the District of Columbia, may violate the constitutional inhibition in regard to an establishment of religion and the free exercise thereof, and make it a disqualification for political power and franchises here in this District. That is the argument, the proposition affirmed here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is totally mistaken, he will pardon me for saying. I would no more vote for anything that would disqualify a Catholic than I would an Episcopalian, which I happen to be myself, or a red-haired man or a black-haired man. The simple proposition is that for the general good order of the United States and of that Territory it is better that for a little while the ladies should get out of the slavery of voting and be left alone. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CALL. I agree entirely with the Senator from Vermont in that proposition, but I beg his pardon when he says that is all. In order to maintain the proposition of this bill that the ladies of Utah, as he terms them, shall get out of the right to vote at the present time, he proposes to attack all the essential principles of government and constitutional right. While he, I have no doubt, would not say that a Catholic or a Protestant should or should not because of his opinion exercise political power in this District, his argument does affirm it, because the connection between conclusion and cause can not be separated by mortal man.

Unquestionably if there is power here to say that a man who believes the Morman Church is right, because of that wrong belief is guilty of such a state of political wrong that he may not exercise political power when you come to judge of some man who entertains the opinion that the Catholic religion is right or the Protestant religion is right, so far as power is concerned you stand upon precisely the same ground.

If you can construct a state and mold and direct its political powers on the basis and for the object of excluding any religious or irreligious belief or practice, the government becomes one for the maintenance of certain forms of opinion or the proscription of others. It becomes one for an "establishment respecting religion" or for prohibiting the "free exercise thereof." Certainly no one will contend that "the Government of the United States is for the maintenance or prohibition of any form of opinion or action respecting religious or irreligious belief, or that the Government may prescribe certain modes of life for each person and impute crime and disability to them without hearing, trial, or conviction."

The government in the Territories must be temporary, and its powers must be exercised subject to the principles and theories of the Constitution, and subject to the theory of the capacity of the people to regulate and control their domestic affairs.

Who will say that this Congress may establish a hereditary government in the Territory of Utah, and why not? Who will say that they may establish in perpetuity an aristocracy in the Territory of Utah, and why not? Where is the constitutional inhibition against putting the exercise of political power in the hands of one, two, three, four, or five persons? It is not to be found in the Constitution. It is to be found in the spirit and principles of the Constitution, which says the capacity of the majority of a people rendered eligible to the exercise of political suffrage by themselves and the principles of the Constitution shall control and determine all their domestic relations, and that the National Government shall operate and exercise power in a totally different sphere and for entirely different objects. That is the power that says that Congress shall not establish an aristocratic government or any form of hierarchal government in a Territory, but that the people alone shall determine this question and all questions of that class.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator now, inasmuch as he and I want to understand each other, yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the argument of the Senator to establish in his mind the proposition. I do not concede the proposition at all that these people have the rights which belong to States and not to Territories. But take it for granted, for the argument, they have the right to regulate the domestic relations, as he calls them, does he claim that even if they have that right they have a right under the religious idea or claim to practice polygamy without subjecting themselves to punishment?

Mr. CALL. Do you want to know my individual opinion on that subject?

Mr. LOGAN. No, but I want to know your legal opinion. You are discussing this from a constitutional standpoint.

Mr. CALL. I think that whoever constitute a majority of the State of Illinois, whether they are Mormons or Catholics or Protestants or polygamous people, have got the right to say whether polygamy or monogamy—I mean the political right or political power, not the moral, but the political power and right under our form of government, as contradistinguished from the religious right—to say whether it shall be lawful or unlawful.

Mr. LOGAN. We are not talking about Illinois. I do not want to go into that discussion. I am talking about Utah.

Mr. CALL. Then I say that in Utah, under our Constitution, the National Government has national powers. The people in the different States have the right and in spirit in the Territories to control their own affairs, and the power given to Congress to legislate in the Territories does not authorize them to violate the fundamental principles of the Constitution in other respects.

Mr. LOGAN. That does not answer the question at all. It is mere theory.

Mr. CALL. What do you want to know?

Mr. LOGAN. Do you believe under your theory that if the people of Utah establish polygamy we have no right to punish it as a crime, because they believe under their form of religion that that is a part of their religion or Christianity, that it is no offense, no crime in their ideas, and that therefore they are exempt from punishment because that is their religious belief? Does the Senator say that?

Mr. CALL. I have not said anything of that kind. I say as a matter of fact, as asserted in the different forms of State government, that polygamy is a crime, and almost all improper relations with more than one woman have been asserted by the legislation of this country, by the States that had the authority to do it, to be criminal.

Now, I assert that the Congress of the United States has for temporary and necessary government in the Territories power to say what shall constitute crime, and would be justified in saying that whatever public opinion in the different States had prescribed to be crime should be crime in the Territories; but as to the question of power, there is an absence of power on that subject, except as derived from the necessity for temporary government. The Senator is aware of the long, able, and full debate respecting the power of Congress over the Territories which has exhausted that subject. I will say to him that the right of Congress to make a law that if a man lives in polygamy, upon conviction of crime, he shall be punished is a totally different thing from the right of Congress to declare by law that he shall be deprived of his right to vote and his political power, because he so lives or so thinks, without conviction and trial. The propositions on which our government is based and on which our system of society rests are a declaration by law of what acts shall constitute crime, hearing, trial and conviction by judicial power: Freedom of speech and thought and action, except when punished on conviction as crime; political power adjusted to the ends of protection of life and property and personal rights; the extirpation of error of opinion by free thought, argument, and discussion by moral power; the restraint of immoral or criminal action by penal law applied by judicial power under the restraints of the Constitution to such acts when committed, and not by a political or religious hierarchy proscribing opinion.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator is getting into a constitutional disquisition now. The Senator has repeatedly insisted that the Catholic religion could be destroyed, the Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church, or any other church destroyed by legislation if this principle was enacted into a law. That was the principle that was enunciated—that polygamy while a religious belief was at the same time a crime. The question I want the Senator to answer is whether or not he believes that any religious belief, no matter what it may be, excuses a man for committing that offense which is a violation of law?

Mr. CALL. I answer that the law does not recognize any excuse or reason for disobedience. The question of the Senator is whether there is any obligation higher than the law, and this is a question as old as time and for which many men have suffered martyrdom. In the eye of the law there can be no excuse; in the eye of religion and morality there may be. "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

For myself I do not think polygamy is right, law or no law. That would be my opinion. As to the degree of wrong, whether it is as bad as murder or false witness or the malum in se of the decalogue, that is the question for the Old Testament and the New Testament to decide. I think that our Christian religion has developed into a much more beautiful system than existed in the days of David and Solomon in respect to marriage; but I do not think they were necessarily great criminals or bad men because in their day under their circumstances they had different relations from ours. The question between the Senator from Illinois and myself is not that; the question is whether a commissioner in Illinois can go to a man or woman and say, "You are a polygamous man" or "You are a polygamous woman;" "you shall have no political power here;" and then he says to him, "I have never been tried, I have never been convicted; there is no evidence of it." You have no right under this Government to attach conditions to the exercise of political power for the purpose or having the effect of excluding from the Government or the body politic or the social system theories of belief or modes of individual life or action. Your theory and your declaration of organic law is equality of all men before the law, good and bad, religious and sacrilegious, Christian and infidel, atheist and theist—manhood suffrage is your boast.

The Senator from Illinois says that in the name of Congress, in the name of the Christian religion, speaking for the people of this country and this Government, we can say, You are a polygamous man or woman, and you shall have no part in the control of this country; your property shall be governed and taken by men I appoint; you shall not vote. That is the question, whether the Senator from Illinois is right under our form of government in saying to those men or women, without trial, without conviction, you shall be deprived of your part and parcel in the government of this country because you believe that polygamy is right and because you have practiced it?

Mr. LOGAN. Then I should like to ask the Senator if his theory is correct what would he think of a law passed by Congress applicable to a Territory which declared that no persons except white men should be voters in that Territory?

Mr. CALL. I will tell him what I think about it. I think that in the days of slavery, for which the Senator and his fathers were quite as much responsible as I, in a Territory where a majority of the people held that kind of property and maintained that kind of institution, it was a very proper thing to do as the people in the States did. I think now, when all men have become free, it would be a very wrong thing to do.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of it as a constitutional question, not a question whether it is right now morally or was wrong then morally, but as to the power of Congress. If they had the power then to declare that no person should vote in a Territory except a white man, that certainly did not include white women. I should like to know where Congress has lost this power to-day to declare that women shall not vote.

Mr. CALL. I have not said that Congress has lost the power to do it. Congress exercises ex necessitate the power of government in the Territories. Upon principle, upon argument, it has no right to do it after they become sufficiently numerous under the principle of self-government to direct their own affairs, and whatever power Congress exercises in the Territories must be exercised in conformity to the principles of our Constitution and our forms of civil liberty. Its power is not absolute, but qualified and restrained by the political principles on which our Government is based and by the constitutional limitations on all its grants of power.

In regard to the institution of slavery, that was held to be property; therefore as property under the protection of the Constitution they had a right to demand that such laws should be passed. I have never acquiesced myself in that theory entirely. I have always believed that the right of the people to local self-government should control this question whenever they were sufficiently numerous to exercise powers of government in the Territories. I admit that for great public considerations it might be advisable, and in this case would probably control my judgment to some extent, to create Territorial government in denial even of the right of the people to self-government in that locality; but I would never extend that so far as to say that the constitutional limitations intended for their personal protection, their immunity against punishment without judicial trial and judicial conviction, without a fair and not a suborned and perjured jury, without jurors fairly selected; I could never consent that they should be deprived of political power without those processes applied to them. If you want to do it, let it be done in a constitutional way, by declaring by law that it is a crime, and by indictment, trial, and conviction before an impartial court and jury—not by organizing a political hierarchy for the proscription of these opinions and practices and overcoming the Mormon religious hierarchy by a political hierarchy.

The government in the Territory must be temporary, but its powers must be exercised subject to the theory of the Constitution, subject to the theory of the capacity of the people to regulate and control their domestic affairs.

Again, the Constitution says:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

What is religion in the sense of the Constitution? Long and bloody wars have been maintained to prove that one religion was not a true religion and that another was. The history of mankind is replete with instances of this kind. What is religion? The Catholics and the Protestants have each denied that the beliefs and principles of the other were religion; the Trinitarians and Unitarians contest and have always contested with each other's claim to the title.

Is it or is it not one of the "immunities or privileges" of a citizen under the Constitution to believe what his own mind, judgment, and conscience prescribe to him in regard to obligations and to religious belief, and can Congress "prohibit the free exercise" of this belief, and say what shall be and what shall not be religion to him except when it becomes a crime, except when with the power of government it has prescribed a certain act (as having two wives) to be criminal, and indicted, tried, and convicted of it? Can Congress say what shall be and what shall not be religion or religious belief?

The assault which the Senator from Vermont and his bill makes on the Christian religion, and the disparagement and reflection which the measure makes on the Christian ministers and the agencies and instrumentalities of the church, the great organized body of the disciples and followers of Christ of every form, is quite as serious as that which it makes on the Constitution and popular government. Can any man deny that the Christian religion claims and gives the right of judgment and proclaims its power to influence and control the judgments and opinions and conscience of men by the weight and power of the church, of the pulpit, of argument and reason of the ministry of the Christian church in all its different forms by the agency of good men where its power is moral suasion, and where it does not seek to attack forms of religious belief as such, but to prove their error and convince the judgment and conscience of a better way and a better life?

They do not ask Congress to make any law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof according to each man's judgment and conscience. They do not ask the Congress of the United States to make this political assault upon the polygamous condition of the people of Utah as a matter of Christian faith and Christian principle. They know that the instrumentalities of the gospel and the Christian religion are ample and abundant for that purpose. They know that if it is to be prescribed as crime it must be treated as crime and not by saying that all the principles of our Government as to capacity of a people for self-government shall be set aside, not by saying that three commissioners shall arbitrarily disfranchise or deny political power to a majority of a large, populous, and industrious community, and say that the minority shall have the power to control it. These are questions separated from its criminal aspects. If it be a crime, prescribe it as such by the proper political power; try it as such; punish it as such; but where is the power in this Government to give three men or women the power to deny self-government to a large majority, three-fourths of an entire people? Where, sir, is the plausible pretense of a reason for it? No, sir, it is arbitrary government; it is monarchical government; it is unconstitutional government. It is the power of a minority to disfranchise and control a majority. Three men, without trial, without process of law, without evidence, are authorized to deprive and to deny to a whole people, a vast majority of a whole people, the entire right of self-government. That is the proposition.

Mr. President, polygamy is impossible in our time and under the economic conditions which belong to our industrial system. It is certainly inconsistent with the activities and the energies and the completeness of character of the active, capable, and energetic women of our day, informed on public affairs, learned in the literature of the age, accomplished in the industrial arts and pursuits, an equal factor with man in all the sciences, arts, and pursuits of our life.

Give her but a chance, give her power, and she will take care of herself, and contribute much toward taking care of the state. Polygamy will extinguish itself by the development of a more perfect and complete civilization, by the industrial arts and their cultivation and distribution under the attacks of the Christian religion and the Christian minister, under the influences of our civilization and our economic laws, under provisions of law for the education and maintenance of the polygamous women and children who may leave their present condition, under laws that will give them immediate protection through a military force whenever they desire to escape from or to leave their present condition, make it easy for them to leave their condition, and give them support and maintenance, and leave it to education, to moral suasion, to the power of religious teachers, to the great activities of the pulpit and the eminent and philanthropic men that control its wonderful power.

Let the Government be, if you choose, a military one, and while it upholds with a firm hand and instant and immediate protection and support the absolute freedom of the woman and her children, let the pressure and power of law and public policy in all things be directed against polygamy and for its extinguishment and its discouragement, and I have no fear that as the woman becomes enlightened under the powers of the Christian religion and civilization, as the industrial pursuits are opened to her and her children, as the influences of the Christian religion and the fuller life and activity of the monogamous woman are felt and seen, with full power at any and all times to abandon the polygamous life, with protection immediate and certain for herself and her children at all times at her command, with maintenance assured, that she will prefer polygamy I would regard it as a reproach to the Christian religion and the great influences of our civilization to believe that it was not adequate to reclaim these unfortunate women brought from the destitution of Europe and carried into a community of considerable industrial development and success. I would consider it a slander upon the good agencies that have made and are making the civilization of this Government so wonderful to say that we must deny the vital principles of our own political institutions, deny fair trial, deny evidence, deny fair and impartial juries, deny upright and impartial judges, and that we must subject a whole community to a denial of the principle of our Constitution of the capacity of the people for self-government, that we should require that a majority of the people of any Territory for any reason should be denied the right and power to control their own political institutions in order to accomplish an object which under our form of government is the subject exclusively of penal law and of judicial power.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, is the section that is proposed to be stricken out now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). The section can be perfected before the motion to strike out is put.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out, in line 2, the word "the" and insert "any," and to strike out the word "Utah," in the same line, and insert "The United States;" so as to read:

That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in any Territory of the United States for any public purpose whatever, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be done, because I do not wish, in charge of this bill, nor do the committee wish to open the general question of female suffrage, but to apply this provision to the necessity of the case in hand, to emancipate these poor females from the slavery in which they now exist about voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. INGALLS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am opposed to female suffrage, and if the question were submitted to the voters of Georgia, while I have a right to vote I should vote against it; but I believe in the doctrine of local self-government; and I believe that either State or Territory that desires female suffrage has a right to have it. While, therefore, I would vote against it in my own State, I will not vote to deprive any other State or Territory of the right to have female suffrage or to prevent its exercise in that State or Territory if the laws of the State or Territory justify or establsh it there. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as I would not prohibit it by law in any Territory.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I do not know that we can reach a vote on this bill to-night, but, after all, the question under this bill is what it was at the last session. Some of the details of it I do not entirely approve of. It raises the great question as to the supreme authority that has the right to control the Territories of the United States. It is not a new question at all; it has been here time and again, and I am on record, so far as this question is concerned, in support of the authority of the Union to control in the exercise of its wisdom the Territories of the United States. I do not say, and I have never said that those inchoate communities that are lying out are in the condition of States and that they have the same rights and privileges that the people of the States possess, notwithstanding I put myself in a position of antagonism to some able legal reasoners on that subject.

I said when I was on my feet last session that there was no Territory in the Union that was controlled in a more arbitrary way than the Territory of Florida under one of the wisest administrations that ever existed in this country, and I had occasion to refer to one of the early acts of Congress making provision for the government of that Territory, not for the purpose of showing the wisdom of it but for the purpose of vindicating the power which upon all hands was admitted to reside in Congress over the Territories. Take for instance the act of Congress approved March 30, 1822, making provision for the government of the Territory of Florida when Mr. Monroe was President, when in the Senate of the United States were found the ablest men who were ever here, Calhoun, and all the great minds we are in the habit of following in matters of this kind.

What did that act say? It says this, as I cited it before, to show the claim of power put forth at that early day by this Government with respect to the Territories:

That the legislative power shall be vested in the governor and in thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons of the Territory, to be called the legislative council; who shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the citizens of the United States residing there.

I will read no more. There was not a thoughtful man in this country at that time who denied to Congress the power to do that thing. Congress gave the entire legislative power over that Territory to thirteen discreet citizens, not elected by the people of Florida, for the Territory had been annexed to the United States but a little while before, but to thirteen citizens appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and they exercised full and complete legislative authority over that Territory for years without question; and who ever said that the exercise of that power was an infringement of the right of suffrage on the part of Congress?

I say that all this reasoning with respect to the Territories and to the District of Columbia which undertakes to put the people who are in those Territories and this District in the condition of the people of States is entirely wrong. There must be a supreme legislative power somewhere, and while I might quarrel with my friend from Vermont with respect to some of the details of his bill, and there are provisions in it that I may not assent to, still I assert here that there can not be any question in the mind of any sound constitutional thinker with regard to the power of Congress to legislate for the Territories without limitation or restraint beyond what the Constitution of the United States imposes.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Florida assert that this power exists without limitation or restraint? He asserted that before on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When I speak of that, of course I speak with reasonable restraint.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator now the plain question, Does he believe the restrictions upon the power of Congress in the Federal Constitution do not apply to the Territories? That is the question.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say in reply to the Senator from Missouri that the Congress of the United States possesses the same power of legislation over the Territories that the State governments of the Union possess within their limits.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from Florida if the Congress of the United States could pass a bill of attainder or ex post facto as to the people of a Territory?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say that it could not.

Mr. VEST. Then that is a limitation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, well, the Senator understood what I meant when I spoke in general terms as speaking of the Government of the Union as exercising the authority of a general legislative power over the Teritories in contradistinction to that power which every constitutional lawyer recognizes as belonging to the States; but when any man stands on this floor and undertakes to say that the people of a Territory have a right to legislate for themselves with respect to their affairs the same as the people of a State, he is saying that for which there is no warrant or authority under our organic law. I will not say that we could legislate against the principles of the Constitution respecting the establishment of a religion or other rights secured by the Constitution in the Territories, or deprive a man of his property without due process of law. I admit that those limitations upon legislative power prevail there as they do in the District of Columbia, but I say that we possess the same power over the Territories as we do over this District, and these early acts of Congress show it.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to ask can we prohibit female suffrage in Utah and allow it in Wyoming?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is a different thing; there are two questions in that. There is a question of power and a question of expediency.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Florida, with his permission, before he leaves that branch of the subject. Concurring in everything that he has said, in all its length and breadth and depth, I wish to call his attention to the fact that may have escaped his mind, that in reference to that earliest legislation in regard to the Territory of Florida, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the American Insurance Company et al. vs. Canter (in 1 Peters) held it to be within the constitutional limit of the exercise of Congressional power.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I remember that case very well. The Supreme Court held that it was clearly within the power of Congress to make such rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States as its wisdom dictated, and it exercised it. Can you imagine a greater exercise of power than to give to thirteen citizens appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate legislative authority over a whole people? Suppose that was attempted here by the Senator from Vermont with respect to Utah; there would be a great hue and cry against it. A great deal more could be said against the proposition that this bill or any attempted exercise of authority brought forth here than against the provision that was incorporated into the act making provision for the government of the Territory of Florida, and still the Congress of the United States without question gave the full legislative power in that Territory to thirteen men appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate without regard to the people of that Territory at all. It is true Congress modified that afterward, and permitted the people to elect their representatives to a regular legislative assembly; but in those acts they provided that no law of that Territory should be effectual or operative until it received the sanction of Congress, thus affirming in every possible way the supreme authority of the Government of the Union as a sovereign legislative power over the Territories of the United States.

Now, I say, when it comes to a question of detail and expediency we may differ; but so far as the question of power is concerned, in my judgment there can be no question. I will not say the Constitution of the United States does not operate there to protect the rights of property and of opinion in matters of religion; far from it; I say that it does; but all that I assert here is the authority of the Government of the Union as a general legislative authority extending over every Territory of the Union beyond the States.

Why, sir, we abolished in this District representative government, and to-day beneath the shadow of this Capitol there exists a form of government which does not command my approbation. Who questions the power? Three men appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate rule the destinies of every inhabitant within this District and make laws for their government. It is unrepublican in my opinion, it is undemocratic, and it is unwise, and if I had an opportunity I would record my vote against it; but no man questions the power of Congress to do it.

Mr. MAXEY. I would call the attention of the Senator from Florida on the question of power to the fact that Congress, after having granted the people of this District suffrage and authority to elect a legislature, as a matter of discretion, subsequently took that away, thus asserting the power beyond all possible question, and nobody has ever disputed it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Nobody ever questioned or ever will question the power. I question the expediency, the justice, and the wisdom of it, and if I had my way I would leave the government of Washington city and the District of Columbia to the free inhabitants thereof, and I would not undertake to administer this government through three commissioners appointed by the representatives of the States and the President here. But no man questions the power to do this thing. It is unrepublican, it is undemocratic; in my opinion it is unwise, unjust to these people; but still the Constitution gives the power.

So with regard to the Territories I have not any question in my mind to-day but that we have power to designate five men to rule out and to prescribe any code of laws which in their judgment they might deem proper for the good government of that Territory. If the commissioners here violate rights of property, rights of conscience, they can be made amenable under our judicial system and their action can be controlled by the supreme judicial power of the Union. So in the Territories; but I say so far as the power is concerned nobody questions it. With respect to the expediency of it that may be another thing. I want it understood that so far as I am concerned I have no doubt in my mind about the authority of this Government to do everything that it may deem wise and proper to be done in the Territories for the good government of them, as a general legislature, independent of all these claims of the people for local rights, of which we have heard so much. Every argument that may be made here in behalf of the privileges of suffrage and the rights of the people is one of expediency and can not be directed against our power to control the Territories of the Union.

I say there are some provisions in this bill which I might be disposed to question the wisdom of, which, with due deference to the Senator from Vermont, are open to question, because he asks us to alter the common law on a very important question of evidence. When he seeks to array the husband against the wife and the wife against the husband, I might hesitate for a little while before voting for that provision of his bill, but with regard to the power to do it I have not any question at all.

I can not see why in the case of polygamy we ought to deviate from the common law any more than in the case of murder or other hideous offenses that pervade society, and it would require a very strong argument to convince my mind that we should break up the marital relations of husband and wife in the case of polygamy without doing it in respect to other offenses.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Florida, with his permission, because we are all trying to get at the real gist of this matter, and I should like to see him make up his mind upon the proposition contained in the second section of the bill, because I think I shall be able to show him before we get through with this transaction that this is the only thing left to be done if the power is conceded, and the Supreme Court has said so in so many words. I will take occasion to argue this matter hereafter.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I confess that I have not arrived at any settled conclusion about it, but I want to say this much before I take my seat, that I can not be led to believe that polygamy in any form can be converted into a system of religion any more than a combination of men to commit crimes against the common consent of society, the world over, could claim to be religion. By the settled opinion of mankind there are some things known as malum in se, which require, according to the old Latin phrase, no legislative prohibition or denunciation to fix their character. And why is this? It is because the common consent of the world has stamped them, the Christian world all over denounces this crime just as it does piracy, murder, and other forms of crime which are known to be in antagonism with established social order. There are other acts so indifferent in their nature that the human mind can not fix their quality without a legislative declaration; but there is not a Christian nation on earth to-day that does not brand the character of this offense and prescribe it to be in antagonism with social order.

It is not necessary, therefore, to resort to any law on the subject. There is not a State in the Union to-day that tolerates it, or wherein it would not be a crime if committed. Now, then, where resides the great legislative power to repress it in the Territories, if it exists to-day? Precisely what would be done here in the District of Columbia, or in Vermont, or in Florida, or in any other State, if any set of people undertook to set themselves up there in opposition to the established Christian sense of the word? There must be a power somewhere to repress it. I say that that power resides so far as the Territories are concerned in the Congress of the United States; and however much I might be disposed to differ with my friend from Vermont in regard to the details of the bill having for its purpose this end, I will never quarrel with him so far as the power itself is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. BECK'S name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If I were not paired, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. HARRIS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG]. Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. VAN WYCK'S name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS]. I announce this for the evening. If he were here, I should vote "yea." [A pause.] I am told that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS]. If the colleague of the Senator from Nebraska can tell me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; under the circumstances I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. My colleague is sick and unable to be here. I make that announcement for the future.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Barrow,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vest,
Bayard,	Jonas,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,

NAYS—20.

Allison,	Blair,	Call,	Edmunds,
Anthony,	Brown,	Conger,	Harrison,

Jackson,	McDill,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Jones of Nev.,	McMillan,	Rollins,	Voorhees,
Logan,	Mahone,	Sawyer,	Windom.

ABSENT—45.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Ingalls,	Ransom,
Beck,	Frye,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	George,	Kellogg,	Saunders,

Davis of W. Va.,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker.
Dawes,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Fair,	Hill,	Platt,
Farley,	Hoar,	Plumb,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate adjourn. The Senator from Vermont calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. I voted inadvertently.

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] unless it is necessary for me to vote to make a quorum. I withdraw my vote if there is a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. BROWN. Then let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Barrow,	Cockrell,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Bayard,	Hampton,	Pendleton,
Brown,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Call,	Jones of Florida,	Vest,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Garland,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Conger,	Logan,	Mitchell,	Windom.

ABSENT—47.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Jackson,	Plumb,
Beck,	Frye,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Butler,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Coke,	Hale,	McDill,	Slater,
Davis of Ill.,	Harris,	McPherson,	Vance,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Hill,	Morgan,	Walker,
Fair,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams.
Farley,	Ingalls,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn. The Secretary will call the roll of Senators.

The Acting Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators responded to their names:

Allison,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,
Anthony,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Pendleton,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Garland,	McDill,	Rollins,
Blair,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Slater,
Brown,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Tabor,
Call,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jackson,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Mitchell,	Windom.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. WALKER] is confined to his bed by sickness, and has been for the last few days.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] is detained from the Senate by very severe illness; he is not able to be here. That is his excuse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators are present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the immediate attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to say, while I am aware that by the rules of the Senate no debate is in order, I think I ought to be allowed to make this contribution of fact: There are seven Senators on the Democratic side answering to their names who tell me that they are paired and the persons with whom they are paired have gone away. I mention that to the Senator to show that even if they remain here they can not vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SAWYER. Is it too late for me to answer to the roll-call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the motion of the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate do now adjourn, on which the Senator from Vermont calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], or I would vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but I have transferred it to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] who is absent, and I vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. HARRIS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and I make that announcement for the rest of the evening.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. TABOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Barrow,	Call,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vest.
Brown,	Hampton,	Pendleton,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Garland,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Logan,	Mitchell,	Windom.

ABSENT—49.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Butler,	George,	Kellogg,	Sewell,
Camden,	Groome,	Lamar,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Lapham,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	McDill,	Tabor,
Cockrell,	Harris,	McPherson,	Vance,
Coke,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Fair,	Jackson,	Plumb,
Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TABOR. I announce that I am paired for the evening with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Garland,	McDill,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Ingalls,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell,	Windom.
Edmunds,	Logan,	Morgan,

NAYS—11.

Barrow,	Call,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vest.
Brown,	Hampton,	Pendleton,

ABSENT—46.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Ferry,	Jonas,	Saunders,
Butler,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Sewell,
Camden,	George,	Lamar,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Lapham,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Coke,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Platt,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Fair,	Jackson,	Ransom,

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.). The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Unless some Senator objects, I should like to submit an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

Mr. VEST. I supposed the Senator from Vermont would object.

Mr. BLAIR (at 6 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.). Can I be permitted to offer an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No business is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have this business proceed.

Mr. VEST. I object to anything now.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill needs a great deal to be done to it, and I should be glad to have something done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No business is in order. The Sergeant-at-Arms is proceeding to execute the order of the Senate.

After the lapse of one hour,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order. The Chair will lay before the Senate the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms, which the Secretary will read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To the President of the Senate:

In the execution of the order of the Senate to request the attendance of absent Senators, the Secretary reported the following as absent:

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Butler,	George,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Camden,	Groome,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Vance,
Davis of Ill.,	Hale,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Harris,	Morrill,	Walker,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,	Williams.
Fair,	Hill,	Plumb,
Farley,	Hoar,	Ransom,

Of these, Senators Cameron of Pennsylvania, Fair, Ferry, Lamar, McPherson, and Sewell are absent from the city.

Sick and unable to attend: Senators Farley, George, Lapham, Saunders, and Walker.

A number of Senators are reported to be at a dinner party, where the host refuses admission to the officers sent to notify them.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Who is he?

Mr. LOGAN. Let the Sergeant-at-Arms report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not let us have any shying about this business.

The Secretary continued the reading as follows:

A number of Senators are reported to be at a dinner party at Secretary Chandler's, where the host refuses admission to the officers sent to notify them.

Senators Groome, Kellogg, and Saulsbury could not be found.

Officers are in search of the remainder.

Very respectfully,

R. J. BRIGHT, Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the roll be again called to see whether a quorum is now present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask if a quorum has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. ALLISON. I am authorized to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. Especially as the Senator with whom the gentleman is paired is present.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon; I did not see my friend here before. I vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I vote "nay" too.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Barrow,	Gorman,	Slater,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Jonas,	Vest,
Call,	Pugh,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Garland,	Maxey,	Windom.
Blair,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,
Conger,	Logan,	Rollins,

ABSENT—50.

Aldrich,	Cameron of Wis.,	Farley,	Hale,
Bayard,	Coke,	Ferry,	Hampton,
Beck,	Davis of Ill.,	Frye,	Harris,
Butler,	Davis of W. Va.,	George,	Hawley,
Camden,	Dawes,	Groome,	Hill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Fair,	Grover,	Hoar,
Jackson,	McDill,	Platt,	Tabor,
Johnston,	McPherson,	Plumb,	Vance,
Jones of Florida,	Mahone,	Ransom,	Van Wyck,
Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Saulsbury,	Walker,
Kellogg,	Morgan,	Saunders,	Williams.
Lamar,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Lapham,	Pendleton,	Sherman,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Call the roll as I have moved.

The Acting Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators responded to their names:

Allison,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,
Anthony,	Conger,	Logan,	Rollins,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Garland,	McMillan,	Slater,
Brown,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Tabor,
Call,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Morgan,	Windom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators are present; no quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer this order:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms bring into the Senate forthwith the following-named Senators now absent from this sitting of the Senate without its leave, namely:

I will give the names in a moment.

Mr. COKE (at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) If it is in order I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. I voted inadvertently.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Brown,	Gorman,	Slater,	Voorhees.
Call,	Jonas,	Vest,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Windom.

ABSENT—53.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Anthony,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Ransom,
Bayard,	George,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Groome,	Lapham,	Saunders,
Butler,	Grover,	McDill,	Sewell,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Tabor,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Coke,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Fair,	Jackson,	Platt,
Farley,	Johnston,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. JONAS. I ask for a call of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order now. We have just had a call, and it has disclosed no quorum. The process now is to get them in. The pending question is on the resolution that I was offering.

Mr. JONAS. I make the point that nothing is in order but a call of the Senate, the vote having disclosed no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not necessary on a question of adjournment. Therefore no legislative action has been taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had offered this order before the motion was put.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I have the floor just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. JONAS. I appeal from the decision, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that a call of the Senate is not now in order, from which ruling the Senator from Louisiana appeals.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We can not hear the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the demand for a call of the Senate is not now in order. From that ruling the Senator from Louisiana takes an appeal to the Senate. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Conger,	Logan,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Barrow,	Garland,	McMillan,	Vest,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Windom.

NAYS—5.

Brown,	Jonas,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Call,

ABSENT—55.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,
Beck,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Slater,
Coke,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Walker,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I ask a vote on the order which I have submitted and desire to have read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms bring into the Senate forthwith the following-named Senators now absent from this sitting of the Senate and without its leave, namely: Senators Aldrich, Bayard, Beck, Butler, Camden, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Frye, Groome, Grover, Hale, Hampton, Harris, Hawley, Hill, Hoar, Jackson, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kellogg, McPherson, Mahone, Miller of New York, Morrill, Pendleton, Platt, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sewell, Sherman, Vance, Van Wyck, and Williams.

Mr. VEST (at 8 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 7, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Brown,	Gorman,	Slater,	Voorhees.
Call,	Jonas,	Vest,

NAYS—19.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Maxey,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Barrow,	Garland,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Harrison,	McDill,	Windom.
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	McMillan,

ABSENT—50.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Frye,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	Lapham,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Groome,	McPherson,	Saunders,
Camden,	Grover,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Tabor,
Coke,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Vance,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morrill,	Walker,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Fair,	Jackson,	Platt,
Farley,	Johnston,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I modify the order that I offered by leaving out the name of Mr. JONES of Nevada, who is here present I see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as modified is before the Senate.

Mr. JONAS. I rise to a point of order. I call attention to the fact that no quorum is present, and I ask the Presiding Officer under the second standing rule of the Senate to direct the Secretary to call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That point of order has just been decided adversely to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That point of order has been decided by the Senate.

Mr. JONAS. I ask to have the rule read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule for the information of the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

2. If either at the commencement of any daily session of the Senate, or at any time during its daily sessions, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the Presiding Officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll of Senators, and shall announce the result to the Senate; and these proceedings shall be without debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has already been done.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a right to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will ask the Senator from Vermont also, if I have the right; and if I have not I ask the Chair whether that rule extends any further than its own language. Its language is that the roll shall be called, and there is the termination of that order. Now, there is something else proposed here, and that is an order to arrest Senators and bring them here. That is not within that rule, and debate is not prohibited by the terms of that rule on the matter that is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that that question is presented by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JONAS. I raised the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Louisiana state his point of order?

Mr. JONAS. My point of order is that, in my opinion, there is no quorum present; the vote just taken discloses the presence of no quorum; and I ask the Chair to direct the Secretary to call the roll of the Senate in accordance with Rule 2 of the standing rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote was taken by the Senate more than an hour since which disclosed the absence of a quorum. Thereupon the roll was called in obedience to the rules of the Senate, and a quorum of Senators was found not to be present. Thereupon the Senate proceeded to execute Rule 3, requiring the attendance of Senators, and directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to request their presence. The Sergeant-at-Arms has now made his report. No business is in order under the third rule, except a motion to adjourn, pending the execution by the Senate of its order that Senators shall be invited to attend. Now the Senator from Vermont presents a further order requiring their presence, compelling their presence, and the Chair rules that that is in further execution of the order of the Senate, under Rule 3, and that nothing else is in order except a motion to adjourn. A motion to adjourn has just been passed upon. The next business in order is the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Chair hold that that is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. JONAS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JONAS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Is it debatable?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule seems to be express and peremptory that there shall be no debate pending the execution of this order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know this very question was elaborately debated less than two years ago. I participated in the debate myself and so did many Senators on the floor. It is within the recollection of the whole Senate. It was elaborately debated on that side as well as on this.

Mr. ALLISON. It must have been by unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. I never heard of an appeal from a decision of the Chair that was not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read the rule on which his decision is founded:

Whenever it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] appeals from the decision of the Chair ruling that debate is not in order upon the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Chair decide that the appeal is not debatable also?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. VEST. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can not try more than one appeal at once.

Mr. VOORHEES. If I can get a chance I should like to introduce some speeches of the Senator from Vermont about a couple of years ago on this very question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the call for the yeas and nays sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY (after having voted in the affirmative). I again voted inadvertently. I withdraw my vote; I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. BECK. I am paired on all questions connected with this bill with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. So I can not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman.
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,

NAYS—7.

Brown,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Call,	Jonas,	Vest,

ABSENT—50.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	George,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Beck,	Groome,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Butler,	Grover,	McDill,	Slater,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Vance,
Coke,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morrill,	Williams,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pendleton,	Windom.
Fair,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Farley,	Jackson,	Plumb,

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. VEST. Is there not an appeal pending? The Chair ruled that debate was not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so ruled, and the Senate has sustained the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. VEST. I appealed on another question than that just voted on. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] proposed to discuss that appeal, and the Chair ruled that it was not debatable. From that decision I appealed. The appeal of the Senator from Louisiana has been disposed of, but the other appeal is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] had made a point of order.

Mr. VEST. He made it, and I appealed from the decision that debate was not in order. The appeal is entitled to be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri states his point of order to be that the resolution of the Senator from Vermont is debatable, if the Chair understands him.

Mr. VEST. No, but I appeal from the decision of the Chair that the appeal made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] was not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put the question on that appeal and the Senate sustained the Chair. The subject has passed beyond the reach of the Senate, and debate of course is not in order. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. If the Chair will permit me, the Senator from Louisiana appealed from the decision of the Chair, the Senator from Indiana proposed to discuss that appeal, and the Chair ruled that it was not debatable. I appealed from that decision of the Chair, and called for the yeas and nays on that appeal of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not advised that the Senator from Missouri had appealed from the decision of the Chair that the Senator from Indiana could not be allowed to debate. That question can not now be got back to, because the Senate has already decided that the appeal taken by the Senator from Louisiana was not well taken and the decision of the Chair has been sustained.

Mr. VEST. I appealed at the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While one appeal is pending there can not be another appeal.

Mr. CALL (at 8 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.). Pending the appeal, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS 10.

Beck,	Gorman,	Sherman,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Jonas,	Slater,
Call,	Pugh,	Vest,

NAYS 16.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Windom.

ABSENT 50.

Aldrich,	Butler,	Cameron of Wis.,	Davis of W. Va.,
Anthony,	Camden,	Coke,	Dawes,
Bayard,	Cameron of Pa.,	Davis of Ill.,	Fair,
Farley,	Hill,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Ferry,	Hoar,	Mahone,	Saunders,
Frye,	Ingalls,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
George,	Jackson,	Miller of N. Y.,	Tabor,
Groome,	Johnston,	Morgan,	Vance,
Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Hale,	Kellogg,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Hampton,	Lamar,	Platt,	Williams.
Harris,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Hawley,	McDill,	Ransom,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MAXEY. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. An order was issued by the Senate directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absent members. That order is in process of execution. The Sergeant-at-Arms has made no return. We do not know whether or not they will comply with the request. Pending that, and before any return by the Sergeant-at-Arms, that is superseded by the motion of the Senator from Vermont instructing the Sergeant-at-Arms forthwith to bring in absent Senators. I make the point that that is in violation of Rule 3, which first requires that a request to the absent Senators to attend shall be made, and in case of necessity that direction shall be given to bring them in. That necessity can not possibly be known until first a disobedience of the request is made known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). The Chair thinks the point of order made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] is not well taken. The Sergeant-at-Arms reported to the Senate, and after the report was made the Senator from Vermont offered the resolution which is now before the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Sergeant-at-Arms has made a report I have not heard it, and I think he has not made any.

Mr. VOORHEES. The report says the order is in process of execution. The Senator from Texas is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana, the Chair understands, is raising a point of order.

Mr. VOORHEES. The report states that the order is yet in process of execution by the officers of the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. That is the exact wording.

Mr. VOORHEES. If there is any question about that, let that portion of the report be read again.

Mr. MAXEY. There is no return. There is simply a statement that the order is in process of execution.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand the Sergeant-at-Arms has made a return to the order of the Senate requesting the presence of absent Senators. I ask that his return be read.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that that is in the nature of argument and not in order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks a Senator has a right to call for the reading of the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then he can call all night.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have a right to know why they are absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To the President of the Senate:

In the execution of the order of the Senate to request the attendance of absent Senators, the Secretary reported the following as absent:

Messrs. Aldrich, Beck, Butler, Camden, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Fair, Farley, Ferry, Frye, George, Groome, Grover, Hale, Hawley, Hill, Hoar, Johnston, Kellogg, Lamar, Lapham, McPherson, Miller of New York, Morrill, Platt, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sewell, Sherman, Vance, Van Wyck, Walker, and Williams.

Mr. MAXEY. He does not say that he requested those members to be present.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what the order of the Senate was, whether it was an arrest or a request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is not in order. The Secretary will proceed.

The Acting Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

Of these, Senators Cameron of Pennsylvania, Fair, Ferry, Lamar, McPherson and Sewell, are absent from the city.

Sick and unable to attend, Senators Farley, George, Lapham, Saunders, and Walker.

A number of Senators are reported to be at a dinner at Secretary Chandler's, where the host refused admission to the officers sent to notify them.

Senators Groome, Kellogg, and Saulsbury could not be found.

Officers are in search of the remainder.

Very respectfully,

R. J. BRIGHT, Sergeant-at-Arms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That return has been made by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Taking the matter into consideration, the Chair thinks the resolution is in order, and must be determined without debate. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MAXEY. I make the point that that is not in order, because——

Mr. BECK. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry—I thought it was a parliamentary inquiry—whether I had the right to have this order of the Senate read under which we were sent for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at this moment.

Mr. BECK. If the Chair says it is not in order, very well. Is it in order now to have it read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. BECK. I merely desired to know whether I was ordered to be arrested or requested to come here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not in order now. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. I make the point of order——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. MAXEY. I make the point of order that the order of the Senate requesting the attendance of absent members has not been complied with; that there is no official report that it has been executed, and until the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms showing its execution or the reasons why it has not been executed, a motion to compel absent Senators to attend is not in order. I make that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the point of order is not well taken for the reason——

Mr. MAXEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the reason it could only be made at the time of offering the resolution by the Senator from Vermont. The Chair understands that an appeal is taken.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is it debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to ask the Chair a question of fact. I heard my name read as among the list of absentees. I have responded here twice since I returned to the Senate Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator was absent at the time of the roll-calls referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Texas was permitted to make debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONAS and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SLATER. I beg pardon.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceed to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded,

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Conger,	McDill,	Sherman,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Slater,
Beck,	Garland,	Mitchell,	Windom.
Blair,	Harrison,	Pugh,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,
Cockrell,	Logan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—6.

Brown,	Jonas,	Vest,	Voorhees.
Call,	Maxey,

ABSENT—49.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Johnston,	Plumb,
Anthony,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Camden,	Grover,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Coke,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Vance,
Davis of Ill.,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker,
Dawes,	Hill,	Morgan,	Williams.
Fair,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Farley,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Ferry,	Jackson,	Platt,

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is——

Mr. JONAS (at 8 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COKE. I move to amend that motion by adding "until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS], that the Senate do now adjourn. It is not amendable.

Mr. COKE. I move an amendment to the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is not amendable.

Mr. COKE. I move a substitute, if it is in order, that we adjourn till 11 o'clock to-morrow

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to adjourn is not amendable.

Mr. JONAS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. ANTHONY (when Mr. PENDLETON'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Beck,	Gorman,	Sherman,	Vest,
Brown,	Pugh,	Slater,	Voorhees.
Call,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Barrow,	Garland,	McDill,	Windom.
Blair,	Harrison,	McMillan,
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Maxey,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,

ABSENT—50.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Platt,
Anthony,	Frye,	Jonas,	Plumb,

Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Williams.
Fair,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Farley,	Jackson,	Pendleton,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. SLATER. I move that the resolution lie on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 9, nays 17; as follows:

Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. COKE (at 9 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Beck,	Gorman,	Sherman,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Jonas,	Slater,
Call,	Pugh,	Vest,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Rollins,
Barrow,	Garland,	McDill,	Windom
Blair,	Harrison,	McMillan,
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Maxey,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell,

ABSENT—49.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	George,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Butler,	Groome,	Lapham,	Sawyer,

Davis of West Va.,	Hill,	Morrill,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pendleton,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Farley,	Jackson,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. JONAS. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that that motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. JONAS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JONAS. On that appeal I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The Secretary will call the roll on sustaining the decision of the Chair.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I desire to announce that I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and I shall not vote except to adjourn, when I can.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Barrow,	Conger,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Windom.

Fair,	Hoar,	Pendleton,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. JONAS (at 9 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS], that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JONAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Beck,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Vest,
Brown,	Jonas,	Sherman,	Voorhees.
Call,	Maxey,	Slater,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Blair,	Garland,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Windom.

ABSENT—49.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Plumb,

Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In order to give a reasonable time for the execution of the order of the Senate to bring in absent Senators, I move that we take a recess for half an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is contrary to the Constitution.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. To what provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order at this time. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. SLATER. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that no motion either to amend the resolution or to postpone it or lay it on the table is in order. It is the simple question whether this order shall be made to get a quorum here to do business. There is no question for debate under the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is not well taken; that a motion to lay the resolution on the table or to postpone it indefinitely is equivalent to a vote against the resolution and a final disposition of it. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER], that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SLATER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONAS. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). That motion is not in order. The yeas and nays are being taken.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Brown,	Jonas,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Call,	Jones of Florida,	Vest,

NAYS—15.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Barrow,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Windom.
Conger,	Logan,	Rollins,

ABSENT—54.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Jackson,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Butler,	Groome,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Camden,	Grover,	McPherson,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Tabor,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Coke,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morrill,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pendleton,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Platt,

So the motion for indefinite postponement was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. JONAS (at 9 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that no motion can be received except a motion simply to adjourn. The motion of the Senator from Louisiana is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Chair entertained a motion to suspend the execution——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A motion to suspend the execution of the resolution being executed——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONAS. I am compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock. The Chair decides that that motion is not in order. Thereupon the Senator from Louisiana appeals. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sherman,
Barrow,	Garland,	McMillan,	Windom.
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,

Farley,	Ingalls,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. VEST (at 9 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last business transacted, the Chair is informed, was a motion to adjourn, which was negatived.

Mr. JONAS. The last business transacted was a vote on an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled that that motion was out of order. There was therefore nothing done, and a motion for an adjournment is not now in order, because no business has intervened since the last motion to adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a repetition of the same appeal on the same question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so rules, but the Chair will submit the appeal nevertheless to the Senate. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Garland,	McDill,	Sherman,

Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN (at 9 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn until half past 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has been already decided not to be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order. The Chair begs leave to state that when a quorum is not present it is impossible for the Senate to change the rule establishing the hour of meeting, which is 10 o'clock to-morrow. So nothing is in order on that subject but a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask for the yeas and nays on the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] appeals from the decision of the Chair, the Chair ruling that a motion to adjourn to half past 10 o'clock to-morrow is not in order. The yeas and nays are demanded upon this question. Is the call seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Logan,	Sherman,
Barrow,	Conger,	McDill,	Slater.
Beck,	Edmunds,	McMillan,

Farley,	Jackson,	Pendleton,	Windom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. VEST (at 9 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that motion in order? Let me call attention to the fact that there are no more Senators answering to their names now than when the proceedings were commenced under the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are in favor of the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to adjourn, will say "aye;" contrary, "no." [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Fair,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Farley,	Jackson,	Pendleton,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. JONAS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the motion is not in order. The Senate has passed upon it.

Mr. JONAS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit that an appeal can not be taken. The Senate has decided that very question.

Mr. JONAS. The Senate has not decided the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the action taken on the previous motion to lay the resolution on the table is conclusive, and the subject can not now, except upon a motion to reconsider, be dealt with.

Mr. JONAS. I ask the Chair whether I am not entitled to take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair, not being satisfied with it?

Mr. LOGAN. How long would it take the Senator to get satisfied? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware that the question of the right of a Senator to take an appeal, where the record stands confronted with the action which he proposes to take, has ever been decided.

Mr. LOGAN. It is about time that it should be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will therefore submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. JONAS. Is it a debatable question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it does not arise out of a question that is open to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No debate is in order upon any proposition. The question now submitted to the Senate is whether the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] has a right to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The decision made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision just made.

Mr. JONAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are of the opinion that the Senator from Louisiana has the right of appeal will make it known by saying "yea," those opposed will say "nay," as your names are called. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 9, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Jonas,	Maxey,
Brown,	Gorman,	Jones of Florida,	Voorhees.
Call,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,

Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,	Williams.
Ferry,	Johnston,	Plumb,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate decides that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] has not the right of appeal from the decision of the Chair in this case.

Mr. MAXEY (at 9 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No business has intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that having submitted the question of order to the Senate for its decision, business has intervened. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered:

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the call.

Mr. MAXEY. I make the demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Beck,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Jonas,	Sherman,
Call,	Maxey,	Slater,

NAYS—15.

Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Walker,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Windom.
Farley,	Jackson,	Platt,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms bring into the Senate forthwith the following-named Senators now absent from this sitting of the Senate without its leave, namely, Senators Aldrich, Bayard, Beck, Butler, Camden, Davis, of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Frye, Groome, Grover, Hale, Hampton, Harris, Hawley, Hill, Hoar, Jackson, Johnston, Kellogg, McPherson, Mahone, Miller of New York, Morrill, Pendleton, Platt, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sewell, Sherman, Vance, Van Wyck, and Williams.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say——

Mr. GORMAN. As the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is present now, I move to amend the resolution by striking out his name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No amendment is in order. I make the point of order against the Senator from Maryland. If Senators do not like the resolution, they can vote it down.

Mr. BECK. Does the resolution order the arrest of those who are here?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

Mr. BECK. I propose to inquire whether the resolution now offered proposes to arrest those of us who are here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senator from Kentucky.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BECK. That is not true upon its face. I am in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BECK. But the truth ought to be told. If the Senator from Vermont thinks it is in order to have the record state what is not true, I have the right to tell the truth.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask whether it is in order for the Senate to put upon its record a self-evident falsehood? Senators are named in the resolution as absent when as a fact they are here present and answering to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not feel called upon to decide a question of that description, no point of order having been raised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will modify the resolution by striking out the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. SLATER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the resolution, and it can not be modified without unanimous consent. I object.

Mr. BECK. I went home, having been paired, and my family being sick, and I came back as soon as I was notified. So did the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that the resolution is not amendable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; but I have modified it.

Mr. BROWN. If it is not amendable what right has the Senator from Vermont to modify it without the consent of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because we are not acting—I can not make the argument, as debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that this resolution, as all other resolutions before the Senate, is amendable, but that it must be done without debate.

Mr. BARROW. Then I move to strike out the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW] to strike out the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. COKE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understood that the resolution was modified before the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW] was submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a question whether the resolution being in the possession of the Senate, the Senator from Vermont had the right to modify it without leave.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit that immediately after the resolution was read I moved to amend it by striking out the name of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood, before the proposition to modify had been made. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW].

Mr. JONAS. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW] to strike out the names of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. JONAS. I ask for a division of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to a division of the question. The Chair is not in possession of the precise form of the amendment, whether the name of the Senator from Kentucky or of the Senator from Ohio occurs first.

Mr. BARROW. The name of the Senator from Ohio was stated first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question would be therefore taken, first, on striking out the name of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a mistake of fact. The names are in alphabetical order.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President, I should like to ask what question is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW] to strike out the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] by way of amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. CONGER. Does that mean to strike them from the rolls of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is to strike them from the order which is proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. GROOME. I should like to ask what the order is, having been out for a short period. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAXEY. I submit that the Senator from Maryland is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will not entertain any question of order until the Senate is in order.

Mr. GROOME. Exactly what I am endeavoring to ascertain is what the business is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It being perfectly obvious under the rulings of the Chair and the votes on the other side that it is impossible even to send for absent Senators, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not make that motion until we get those Senators from that residence where the host refused admission to the messengers of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCK, Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. UPSON. I call for the regular order.

FRANCIS A. BAIRD.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the resolution which I send to the desk, and to move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, directed to pay to Francis A. Baird, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum equal to the difference between the compensation received by him as a laborer and that of electrician from the 24th day of February, 1882, to the 24th day of February, 1883.

The resolution, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. ROBESON. I call up for consideration at this time the resolution reported by me yesterday from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session of Congress it shall be in order, immediately after the approval of the Journal, to proceed in the House as in Committee of the Whole to the consideration, for the period of one hour, of bills and resolutions which shall have been previously reported by standing committees of the House, and such reports printed, and Senate bills and resolutions on the Speaker's table, which, or substantially similar measures, shall have received favorable action of appropriate House committees, in the following manner, to wit:

The Speaker shall call the standing committees in their order, whereupon, by direction of committees so called, not more than one measure may be called up for final consideration; if not more than four members object such consideration shall proceed, provided that debate on each bill or resolution shall be limited to ten minutes, exclusive of five minutes which may be occupied in reading reports of committees, the latter upon request of a member to be allowed prior to submitting the call for objections; this hour not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this proposed rule is the same as the rule known as the "Pound rule," which prevailed for a short time before the close of the last session of Congress, there being a change in only one particular, that by the "Pound rule" of last session objection by four members prevented the consideration of a measure, while this requires objection by five. I will state the substance of this proposed rule. It is that the standing committees shall be called in their order; that one measure recommended by a committee may be called up for immediate action; that five minutes may be consumed in the reading of the report or in explanation in lieu of it; and if after the report is read or the explanation in lieu of it is had five members object to the consideration of the bill, it is not considered. That is the whole of it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The expression "or explanation in lieu thereof" is not in this proposed rule. It might be an advantage to insert it.

Mr. ROBESON. If that language is not in, I accept the gentleman's suggestion and put it in.

Mr. BEACH. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey whether the call of committees under this resolution will embrace select committees appointed under special resolutions of the House, or simply the standing committees. If it does not, I desire to have the resolution amended in that respect.

Mr. ROBESON. The words of the resolution are "standing committees."

Mr. BEACH. Will the gentleman accept the amendment I suggest?

Mr. ROBESON. I am not authorized by the committee to accept an amendment on so material a point. In reporting this proposed rule I am merely the organ of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. As one member of the committee, I have no objection to that modification.

The SPEAKER. If the word "standing" be struck out, the Chair would interpret the rule to include select as well as standing committees.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well; if there is no objection I will omit the word "standing."

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to inquire whether under this rule one hour is to be assigned to a committee, or whether a committee is to have just one call?

Mr. ROBESON. One hour each day is assigned to the execution of this order, and during that hour as many committees will be called as can get through with their business.

Mr. ATKINS. Calling each committee once?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The debate upon each bill is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. URNER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey whether when a committee is called a member of the committee can, by its direction, call from the Calendar any bill, whether reported by that committee or not.

Mr. ROBESON. My recollection is that last session it was ruled that a bill called up by the direction of the committee must be one of which the committee had charge.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROBESON. I will yield to the gentleman. How much time does he wish?

Mr. ANDERSON. Only a few minutes.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to my friend from Kansas for five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two suggestions in regard to this resolution. First, during all of next week, being the last six days of the session, motions to suspend the rules will be in order at any time. This resolution will have no effect except when the House can not suspend the rules. But it will enable certain measures, if brought before the House without objection from five members, to be passed by a majority vote instead of a two-thirds vote. This will not expedite business to any very great extent. And but few committees will be reached, not more than four in any one hour if each committee presents something.

But the strongest objection in my mind is that this proposed rule sets apart an hour each day when the House must go on with this business. We may need that hour for many other things. It can be applied to other purposes under the present rules of the House, and I am frank to say that back of all my opposition to this is a gentle suspicion on my part that some bills may be forced through the House that in my judgment ought not to be passed, and at a time when the four or five gentlemen who would otherwise object may not happen to be present.

Mr. RANDALL. It is their duty to be here.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is all very true; but they are sometimes necessarily absent, and the rules of the House for the present transaction of business are ample in my judgment for the remainder of this session. There are certain bills that I should certainly object to seeing go through under any such modification of the rules, or in any other way. I do not want to see the Pacific railroad bills, the whisky bills, and a good many other bills put through. We have all of next week in which motions to suspend the rules can be made, and there is no necessity now for taking this step. If this had been proposed for adoption two or three or four weeks ago there might have been some reason for it; but there certainly can be none now at this late date in the session.

Mr. ROBESON. For the information of the gentleman from Kansas, let me say this rule expressly provides that in its operation it is not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills; so that there is no difficulty about the right of way for such measures. The rule is amply guarded in this, that the objection of any five members will stop the consideration of any bill that may be brought up for consideration under its operation.

I move the previous question upon the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey, that we must leave something to the discretion of the Chair; and I want to remark further that a bill which is not objected to by five members of this House is likely to be right, and one that will commend itself to the judgment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey whether it is understood that the word "standing" is to be stricken out?

Mr. ROBESON. I have accepted that amendment, and have also agreed to insert after the words "reading reports of committees," the words "or explanation in lieu thereof."

Mr. REAGAN. How will it read then?

Mr. ROBESON. The effect of the change will be that all committees of the House will be called in their order, both select and standing committees.

The SPEAKER. That change will make the rule applicable to all of the committees.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to ask whether the rule provides that the bill shall be read before objections are called for?

The SPEAKER. That has always been held to be the right of the House.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. So that we will have some knowledge of the bill itself before being called upon to make objection to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. And besides that, this rule goes further and allows a member to have the report read for a length of time not exceeding five minutes before objections are asked for.

Mr. ROBESON. Or five minutes for explanation in lieu of the reading of the report.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand a division on the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 11.

So (no further count being demanded) the previous question was ordered; and under the operation of which the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE AND RECORD.

Mr. VAN HORN. I wish to call up now for present consideration the concurrent resolutions which were laid over on the day before yesterday at the request of gentlemen who wished to examine it. I understand that after having looked into it there is no objection to its immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The concurrent resolutions reported from the Committee on Printing will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver, in bound form, to the Secretary of the Interior the volumes of the Congressional Globe purchased from Messrs. Rives.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, from the volumes thus delivered to him, supply to the library of each of the Executive Departments, to the State library of each State, to the Territorial library of each Territory, and to the library of each depository of public documents in the several States designated or to be designated in accordance with provisions of law such volumes as are required to complete the sets of Congressional Globes in said libraries.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the volumes of the Globe remaining after the distribution hereinafter directed has been made to such libraries in the several States as in his discretion he may select to receive them.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress the name and location of the libraries supplied with documents under the provisions of this resolution and the number of volumes supplied to each.

SEC. 5. That hereafter the Public Printer shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a sufficient number of bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to enable that officer to supply one copy to each library named in section 2 of this resolution.

Mr. VAN HORN. I desire to make a correction in the resolutions by substituting "be it further resolved" in place of the present arrangement of sections "two," "three," &c. Being a concurrent resolution it should not have been divided into sections. That was an error in making it up.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the modification suggested by the gentleman from Missouri will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri whether that last clause of the resolution does not involve the reprinting of more copies of these documents after the numbers on hand shall have been exhausted?

Mr. VAN HORN. That was not the intention of the committee. It is not designed to reprint them, but only to distribute the numbers of copies already on hand.

Mr. HOLMAN. I fear it will be reprinted or taken as authority for ordering a reprint unless there is a limitation put upon it. I ask that the last clause be again read.

The last clause of the resolution was again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. The words, "but this shall not authorize the reprinting of any back numbers of the Globe or RECORD," should be inserted there.

Mr. VAN HORN. The object of this is simply to keep up the files——

Mr. REAGAN. But if you do not put in some such restriction as the gentleman from Indiana has suggested they will reprint these documents when they are exhausted.

Mr. VAN HORN. I have no objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move to insert at the end of the last clause of the resolution the words:

But this shall not authorize the reprinting of any back numbers of the Globe or RECORD.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri what is to be done with the copies that are not used or not distributed among the State libraries?

Mr. VAN HORN. The Public Printer can sell them and turn the proceeds into the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No provision is made for their distribution?

Mr. VAN HORN. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and to move that they be non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that vote is taken I hope the gentleman from Ohio will explain briefly the nature of these amendments of the Senate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly I will, if that be desired.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will run over each amendment, unless the gentleman desires to call attention to some particular item.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; we have not had time to examine them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The first item is one increasing the appropriation for the office of the General of the Army from $1,500 to $2,000. That the committee non-concurred in.

The next reduces the appropriation for the recruiting service from $25,000 to $10,000. The committee fully investigated that originally. If recruiting is to go on at all to fill the ranks of the Army that amendment of the Senate is unwise and approaches, if it be not disrespectful to say so, the absurd.

The next is a new item appropriating $105,000 for the payment of the civil employés of the Army at the several departmental headquarters. We also non-concurred in that. I will say to my friend from Indiana that enlisted men are now employed. The proposition is to send them to the ranks and employ civilians. That we have non-concurred in.

The Senate strike out the item which the House inserted to reduce the number of aids. We non-concurred in that amendment.

The next amendment is in reference to an item inserted by the House which provided for the deposit by the soldier of a sum not exceeding $10, I believe it was, and that he should draw interest at 4 per cent. so long as he left it in the hands of the Paymaster-General. This, as my friend will remember, tended to prevent desertions and was very valuable to the Government as well as to the soldier in keeping his heart where his treasure was. We non-concurred in that.

The other four or five amendments simply increase amounts. They also strike out the provision of our bill which reduces the number of contract surgeons, and while they do not restore them to the original number they nevertheless greatly increase them. We non-concurred in that.

They strike out the provision in the bill which requires disbursing officers to give bond in such sum as the Secretary of War shall prescribe. They did that because they had previously struck out the provision of the House reducing the number of paymasters. We also non-concurred in that.

I will say the Senate also struck out the doing away with the paymasters' corps. We non-concurred in that. The Senate also struck out the clause in regard to compensation to certain Pacific railroads for transportation of the mails. We non-concurred in that.

All the other items are inconsiderable, some increasing where we think there ought not to be any increase, and others decreasing where our investigation satisfied us there ought not to be any decrease.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be glad to have a vote on the second and the thirty-fourth amendments.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, to go more into detail as to the second amendment, and so far as the recruiting service is concerned, it is a simple matter of mathematical calculation or computation. If it is the purpose of the House and Senate to stop recruiting under the law, then it can be done by withholding the amount necessary to pay the expense of the recruiting service.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate only reduces it $15,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It reduced it more than one-half and we had previously reduced it to the minimum. The number of soldiers to be recruited can be exactly ascertained or nearly so. The expense is well known and beyond question, the amount required is $21,000 and something more. The Senate reduces that to $10,000. Whether it was for the purpose of reducing the Army or not I do not know, but it seems not to be the proper way to do it. If we wish to reduce the Army we had better do it at once by providing that the Army hereafter shall consist of ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand men, or as you will. But to take down the house by taking away the prop which sustains it is not, in my judgment, the proper way to accomplish a result. Hence we non-concurred. No one will argue, unless the purpose is to reduce the strength of the Army, that this amendment ought to be concurred in. If that is the purpose it ought to be accomplished in a plain, direct way, and not by a species of indirection.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I now move, Mr. Speaker, the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. BUTTERWORTH, Mr. BURROWS of Michigan, and Mr. ELLIS.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. FORNEY. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee of conference on the part of the House Mr. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. RYAN of Kansas.

TREATMENT OF JEWS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public service, communicate to this House all the correspondence in relation to the treatment of Jews in Russia which has taken place since the last communication on that subject to this House between the Government of the United States and that of Russia.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to submit a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move to dispense with private business for to-day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York propose to include in his motion the dispensing with the special order for this evening for pension claims?

Mr. HISCOCK. That will depend entirely, so far as I am concerned, on whether we conclude this bill before that time.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me make this suggestion: There are perhaps two or three undisposed-of pension cases on the Private Calendar. I will be willing that if we meet this evening we shall first take up those cases (they will certainly not consume more than thirty minutes' time), and then the balance of the evening can be devoted to the current business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York can except the special order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with private business for this day with the exception indicated.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and give notice it is for the purpose of the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. KASSON in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1394 insert the following:

"That the modification of the treaty and the agreement made with the Sioux Indians under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 7, 1882, is hereby approved, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enter upon the execution of said treaty: Provided, That the title to lands for railroad purposes heretofore surveyed and paid for under agreement with said Indians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, is confirmed in said companies."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] offered an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from North Carolina is not in his seat. I suggest that this be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the proposed amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina is to the next paragraph. The only amendment pending is that of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has offered this amendment, if he does not think it would be better to increase the amount? If we are to make any appropriation at all, we should appropriate at least half the amount necessary to carry out this agreement.

Mr. CASWELL. I could not hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ATKINS. I simply said to the gentleman I thought it would be the practical way to appropriate at least half the amount that is necessary to carry out this agreement. Or does the gentleman propose to appropriate only $100,000 a year for four or five or six years?

Mr. CASWELL. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee it will take more than $100,000 to carry out this agreement. It will take probably $500,000. But the Secretary could not well purchase and deliver more than $100,000 worth next year.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman think that only about $100,000 worth could be delivered every year?

Mr. CASWELL. Perhaps in another year $200,000 worth might be delivered, or the whole of it.

Mr. ATKINS. Why can not $200,000 worth or $300,000 worth be delivered in the coming year as well as in the subsequent year?

Mr. HISCOCK. They have to get the Indians located first.

Mr. CASWELL. It will take some time. This matter is still in its infancy, and the Indians must be colonized and settled.

Mr. ATKINS. Perhaps it may be well enough to make no appropriation this year and wait till next year to make it.

Mr. CASWELL. That would hardly be keeping good faith.

Mr. ATKINS. I think if we are to make the appropriation it would be better in all fairness to appropriate half the amount this year and half the amount next, so that the matter may be wound up.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin has been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no note of any point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] reserved a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that a point of order was made upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], but not on this amendment. The Chair will examine the RECORD and ascertain.

Mr. HOLMAN. This subject is not beyond debate, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Not beyond debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard on it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have the question which I asked disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is having the RECORD examined in order to see the exact position of the amendment. In the mean time the Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as he did the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS].

Mr. HOLMAN. By the terms of the treaty with the Sioux Indians we are entitled to the possession at once of the lands ceded to us by those Indians, and we are to pay them for the cession of this land 25,000 head of cows and 1,000 head of bulls as a preliminary payment on our part.

I desire now to call the attention of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] to the fact that yesterday we passed a bill organizing two land districts within the limits of the territory so ceded to us by this treaty.

Mr. CARLISLE. I hope that order will be preserved, so that we can hear what the gentleman is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please cease conversation, so that order may be restored in the committee. The Chair will state that he finds by reference to the RECORD that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] did make a point of order on this amendment, which point of order is not yet disposed of. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad to conclude what I have to say on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed if there is no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I was saying, we passed a bill yesterday morning organizing two land districts within the limits of the land so ceded to the Sioux under this treaty. It is manifest from the treaty that it was intended that two things should be concurrent; the cession of the land and our taking possession of it on the one hand, and the payment of this preliminary installment, which indeed constitutes the great bulk of the payment to be made, 25,000 head of cows and 1,000 head of bulls.

Now, I submit that when my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] proposes to appropriate only a hundred thousand dollars for this purpose he does not act in that good faith which I think his own judgment would dictate toward the weaker party to this treaty. We take from them property of great value, take possession of it at once, and agree to pay them at once. There is no remote period indicated in the treaty when the payment shall be made. On the contrary the two acts are to be concurrent acts.

We have passed legislation to take possession of the land which we received from these Indians. I therefore submit that it is not fair and just to appropriate only $100,000, when, by the terms of the treaty, we should make the full preliminary payment immediately upon taking possession of the land.

Now, I submit that it will cost the Government to furnish these 25,000 head of cows and 1,000 head of bulls, or, if it were our policy to give the money to the Indians to buy the stock and allow them to expend it, it would cost them at least $500,000; that is a moderate estimate. Now, certainly, if the whole amount is not to be appropriated at once the larger portion of it should be.

How can we with any propriety and justice say to these fragments of that once powerful tribe of Indians that we will take possession of the land under this treaty, organize our land districts to dispose of it to our people, take possession of it instantly, and yet pay them for a year or a year and a half to come only one-fifth of the amount required for the preliminary payment, when by the terms of the treaty the two things were meant to be concurrent? That is not just.

There might be some argument in favor of a proposition to pay them less than the full amount, from the fact that these Indians are not yet fully settled on their reservation; and it would perhaps be reasonable, fair, and just to make an appropriation of, say, one-half of the amount; and I think that no less sum than that ought to be named.

I suggest, therefore, that if it shall be held that this proposition is in order, at least one-half of the amount, say, $250,000, shall be now appropriated. Gentlemen must understand that in carrying out this treaty to its fullest extent, first giving these Indians 25,000 head of cows and 1,000 head of bulls, and a yoke of oxen and a cow to each one of the families, independent of educational and other facilities which we are to furnish gratuitously, the whole sum involved in the payment for this land will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $900,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. A single suggestion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like now to say a word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the point of order I desire to say a word. The act of the last session of Congress authorized a treaty with the Sioux Indians for the acquisition of a portion of their lands. The terms of that act are not very definite; it provided nothing more than simply the negotiation of a treaty with the Indians for the modification of treaties heretofore made with them. The terms of the act were exceedingly indefinite. Yet I presume that gentlemen in this House and in the other branch at the other end of the Capitol understood exactly what it meant.

Here is a proposition to appropriate money to carry that treaty into effect and to ratify it; and also a proposition to save the rights of a railroad corporation which prior to this cession of land by these Indians had obtained a right of way through these lands.

That last proposition is clearly not within the scope of the rules of the House; it is clearly and palpably independent legislation, for it has nothing whatever to do with the original treaty.

My own opinion is that we must sooner or later acquire these lands, and I believe the amount proposed to be paid is not extravagant. I think the policy of giving patents to the Indians and thus leading them on gradually to the higher branches of agriculture is a good one. I do not see, therefore, any good reason why this treaty should not be ratified, and I scarcely know why it should not be ratified upon an appropriation bill, as some of our most valuable legislation has been adopted upon such bills. But I believe I shall have to insist in any event on the point of order with reference to the proviso. I have not been able to find the act of Congress by which the cession made by the Indians has been ratified; but that is an independent matter which has no relation to the ratification of the treaty. I will not press the point of order except as to the proviso. As to the main proposition I should be very glad to withdraw the point with the understanding, however, that a reasonable portion of this appropriation shall be made. If we were dealing with any powerful government under such a treaty we would be expected to take possession on the one hand and to pay the money on the other, these being concurrent acts. But inasmuch as this Government occupies toward the Indian tribes a rather anomalous relation, I would acquiesce in an appropriation of one-half the amount. I do not think this Congress should consent to the appropriation of a smaller sum, because this amount at least can be expended to advantage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that he has no trouble about the first clause of the amendment, but would like to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] explain under what provision of the rule the proposed proviso is in order.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, this is an important point and one which ought to be carefully considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the gentleman to direct his attention to the proviso.

Mr. CASWELL. Going back to the sundry civil appropriation bill of last August, I find the authority for making this agreement——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear no argument on that point.

Mr. CASWELL. I so understand, but there is coupled with that authority a clause which necessarily involves the interests that the railroad companies have in this land. There are three parties interested: the Government of the United States, the Sioux Indians, and two or three railroad companies, which in 1880 made contracts for the right of way across the reservation, with the concurrence and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and pursuant to that agreement and the selection of the rights of way, these companies had paid into the Treasury $17,110. If they had waited until the ratification of this treaty and until these lands had all become part of the public domain, under the act of 1875 the railroad companies would have had the right to build their road through this tract of country without paying anything. But this being an Indian reservation the companies were obliged to contract with the Indians, under the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and made such contracts for obtaining the right of way and such parcels of land as they desired for the erection of shops, depots, &c. In some cases one-half the amount was paid down, and another half, amounting to over $9,000, is still due the Indian fund, provided this treaty be ratified and the rights of the companies under the contracts preserved.

At the last session, on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, a clause was added to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing that all lands ceded to the Government of the United States under this treaty should be subject to homestead entry only. The railroad companies feel, in view of this provision, that unless their rights are preserved at the same time this treaty is confirmed, they will not be able to take possession of and use these parcels of land which they have selected for railroad purposes (not exceeding altogether two sections); that these lands will be subject to homestead entry and the companies will not be permitted to take possession of them and use them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not before him the agreement or treaty which is proposed to be ratified. Is there anything in that treaty touching the subject of the proviso?

Mr. CASWELL. There is nothing in the treaty touching the railroad companies at all; but it is felt to be proper and just that if the Government should ratify this treaty and accept the cession of lands which the Indians, cum onere, attempt to make to the United States the rights of the companies should be preserved in the acceptance of the grant.

The agreements of the Indians are on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. The companies have paid their money and have receipts for it, as certified by the Secretary of the Interior. All that is sought now is that in consenting to a ratification of this treaty we preserve to these railroad companies the rights vested in them by virtue of the contracts they have made with the Indians and for which they have paid very dearly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the difficulty to his mind is in the fact that this seems to be independent legislation which tends to establish a title which the Chair has no evidence is now in existence. If the provision read, "without prejudice to any title to lands for railroad purposes heretofore certified and paid for under agreement with said Indians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior," there would be no new legislation; and the Chair under such circumstances would feel bound to rule the provision in order. But he is not satisfied that there is any existing law which would justify him in ruling in order a proviso which actually confirms a title.

Mr. CASWELL. Let me say to the Chair that I think such a provision as he suggests would be ample, were it not for the positive enactment of last August which forbids the taking up of any of these lands except for homestead purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. But that remark of the gentleman assumes that the Chair is right in calling this new legislation.

Mr. CASWELL. It seems not. I think it is an addendum to the confirmation of the treaty in accordance with the appropriation made last session of Congress. If it is proper to confirm the treaty in furtherance of the appropriation made last year it is equally proper to preserve any vested rights which the United States Government may deem necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. If it were limited to that the Chair would rule it to be in order, for that would leave it where it stands. But if the effect is to change the legislation of last session the Chair would be obliged to rule it out of order. The first part of the amendment is undoubtedly in continuation of a public work now in progress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think something might be done in reference to this clause; that is, the insertion of a provision that this should not take more land than these railroad companies are entitled to under the general statute. That is to say, the homestead clause of last year is repealed, and these railroad companies are allowed to take this land as provided by the general statute for railroads running across the public domain. I think a provision of that kind might be put on the bill and be satisfactory to everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can so modify his amendment. The first clause is in order, as it is the continuation of a work now in progress. The other part, however, is not in order, and as a part is out of order the whole amendment is subject to the point of order and must be ruled out.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest there be added a provision which will obviate the point of order, in my judgment, and that is these railroad companies shall not receive more land than they are now entitled to receive across the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to submit a proposition which I think will be satisfactory, providing for the right of way and depots, not to exceed in extent the rights granted to railroad companies through the public lands as established by the general law.

Mr. CASWELL. If my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will include bridges and shops I will be satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. That might be added if the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. CASWELL. I suggest this be temporarily passed until an amendment can be prepared satisfactory to both sides.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VANCE. I believe my amendment now comes up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 1400:

"That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause to be sold all the lands now belonging to the North Carolina Eastern Band of Cherokees outside of the boundary known as the 'Qualla Boundary,' situate in the State of North Carolina. And that the proceeds of such sale shall constitute a fund in the hands of said Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be devoted to the use of said Eastern Band for educational and such other purposes as their situation, necessities, and expenditures may require."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on his point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. My point of order is that this is new legislation and does not come within the rule in the three ways provided for the introduction of new legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in 1868 it was provided by law that the affairs of the Eastern Band of Cherokees should be transferred to the Department of the Interior and the Secretary was charged with the supervision of the affairs of those Indians as of other Indians. In the line of that authority the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was directed to sell this land in the interest of those North Carolina Cherokees. My amendment I do not think changes the spirit of the law. It merely directs the Commissioner of Indian Affairs what to do. By strict construction the Commissioner would now have that authority, but he prefers Congress should direct whether these lands should or should not be sold. I could give good reasons, Mr. Chairman, why the lands should be sold, but I will let the Chair decide the point of order if the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] insists upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. VANCE. I do not see why the gentleman from New York should insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is no appropriation?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And is not reported by any committee having jurisdiction?

Mr. VANCE. It was really agreed to by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has the unanimous sanction of that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. However, as the amendment is not reported by that committee it therefore comes under the clause respecting reduction of expenditures in one of two ways, the only one of which would be the reduction of the amount covered by this bill.

Mr. VANCE. If the gentleman from New York will allow me to make a brief statement, occupying only a moment, before he insists upon the point of order, I think it likely that he will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection that he be permitted to make a brief statement in reference to the proposed amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. VANCE. I only ask to be permitted to make a statement before the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can not waive the point of order; but I have no objection to hearing the gentleman's statement.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, I will state that these lands to which reference is made in this amendment are mountain lands belonging to the Cherokee Indians in the State of North Carolina. The Cherokees in that part of the State have a boundary of land of about 73,000 acres, called the Qualla boundary, and the people are settled within it. The lands sought to be sold under this amendment were received by authority of law, in behalf of the North Carolina Cherokees, by the Secretary of the Interior, in payment of a debt or judgment. The Indian fund is all in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. This band is now in debt. There are certain judgments pressing the band. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House have agreed that it was necessary and essential to sell the lands. The only parties interested are the Cherokee Indians themselves. They desire to sell the lands with a view to paying their debts, to discharge the taxes on the lands, and that the remainder shall be turned in for educational purposes. It is therefore very essential for the benefit of the tribe that the lands should be put on the market in order that the taxes may be paid and these judgment liens of which I speak satisfied, and that the residue of the fund may be applied for the education of their children. They ask, therefore, that the lands may be sold; and, as I stated, the authorities agree to their request and recommend the adoption of such a provision as this.

Now, why the point of order should be raised against the amendment, when it does not take a dollar of money out of the Treasury and does not affect anybody but the Indians themselves, and when the amendment is strictly in accordance with the wishes and the best interests of the Indians, I am unable to understand. If, however, the gentleman from New York insists upon the point of order I presume the Chair will adhere to his ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

Mr. VANCE. I know the Chair has so ruled, but I am in hope that the gentleman from New York will not insist upon making the point of order against it in view of the statement I have made.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is, perhaps, due to myself that I should make some little reply to what has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina. The Committee on Appropriations have been extremely liberal in allowing amendments to this bill wherever they have come from a committee or have been recommended by a committee and presented in time to enable the Committee on Appropriations also to consider the question and arrive at a proper conclusion as to whether the proposed legislation should be acceded to or not. This is the first I have heard of this matter. The Committee on Appropriations have not heard of it; and I have no authority to accept an amendment which is entirely out of order without the consent of the committee. I must therefore insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. Before that let me suggest to the gentleman from New York that as this is a matter relating to the Indians entirely, with regard to the sale of their own property, and since it has been recommended on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Indian Committee of this House, I think he may safely waive the point of order and permit the committee to vote upon the proposed amendment. It does not involve a dollar of expense.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I can only say for myself, in response to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I have always been accustomed to consider the Indians as the wards of the nation. I believe them to be; and the fact that they ask to have a certain proposition enacted into a law is no reason why it should be adopted. It is for the Government, that occupies the position of guardian to them, to consider whether such legislation is for their benefit or not, without reference to the request of the Indians.

Mr. VANCE. That is exactly what we ask in this case. We ask the Government, as the guardian of this band of Indians, to do what seems to be for their best interests. They ask to have this land sold, and we know that it is necessary for reasons which I have stated to comply with that demand.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is entirely out of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Howard University:
For maintenance of the Howard University: To be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, and teachers, and other regular employés of the university, a portion of which will be paid from donations and other sources, $15,000.

Mr. WAIT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1490 insert:
"For meeting and liquidating the indebtedness already incurred for necessary repairs commenced under a former appropriation, $4,250."

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know that the point of order will lie against the amendment, but I will reserve it until I hear an explanation from the gentleman who offers it.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Chairman, at a former session of Congress an appropriation was made for carrying out certain repairs at the Howard University. When scientific men examined those parts of the building which required the repairs they found that there was necessity for much greater repairing than they at first supposed. On examination of the boilers they found it to be necessary to remove the old ones and supply new ones, which required an entire change, and also the employment of new furnishings for the boiler-room. On examination the sanitary condition of the building also required many modifications to be made for the health of the students in that institution, which added to the expense. There was no alternative. They had to go forward with these repairs and incur indebtedness beyond the appropriation, for the amount appropriated by Congress did not cover the expenditures that were absolutely required by the amount I have named in the amendment which I have offered.

There are now nearly four hundred young men in that institution who are being qualified as instructors. And every consideration with regard to the carrying on of this institution successfully and educating these men, and with regard to the proper conditions for their health, and also for their table accommodations, &c., imperatively demanded that these improvements should be made. Absolute necessity compelled the making of these several improvements. And there is now this small deficit of a little over $4,000, for which Congress should not hesitate to provide. I think as it is a mere continuance of an improvement which had been ordered before, and it is shown the appropriation was not sufficient, the gentleman's point of order should not lie.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut inform the Chair that this object has been already appropriated for by Congress?

Mr. WAIT. Yes, sir; at a prior time.

Mr. HISCOCK. The sum carried by the amendment would be germane to a deficiency bill, doubtless. The amendment provides for a deficiency; and if it is in order at any point it should be really to a deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut can reserve the amendment for a deficiency bill.

Mr. WAIT. I think that the amendment can be appended to this section of the bill now under consideration, and the gentleman from New York I trust will not object to the amendment being now offered.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes; I do. I say, and I may as well say it now as at any time, that so far as these institutions in the city of Washington are concerned, having once appropriated for them I will under no circumstances consent to vote a dollar of deficiency to one of them. I am in favor of the strictest possible rule that when Congress has said you may spend so much money, when that money is expended their power is exhausted. When I know how many there are of them and the disposition to crowd in demands of this character, with the experience I have had for the last four or five years, I believe there is no other safe policy for the Government either with reference to itself or with reference to them.

Mr. WAIT. When this amount was appropriated to meet these repairs an examination had taken place which was not a perfect examination, and the embarrassments which were subsequently discovered on a more thorough examination were not at that time found, and the parties making the examination were not at first aware of them. When the intelligent mechanics commenced making the repairs they found the boilers were in such a condition that they could not be operated with safety, and that with a view to the safety of the building and the safety of its occupants those boilers had to be removed and new ones put in their place. The lives of the occupants of the building would have been put in peril had the old boilers been continued. The introduction of new boilers necessitated the changing of the furnaces connected with them. Then, as to the sanitary condition of the premises and to effect proper drainage, there had to be an entirely new arrangement of the pipes and sewers connected with the building. The necessity for this could not be discovered till the mechanics commenced removing the old material and fixtures and supplying the new. When they did that they found they had to go further than the first examination led them to suppose they would have to go.

Now, I say when we have an institution at the capital of the nation which is training men to go down into the Southern States and educate the colored population I think the House should do everything in its power for the thorough training of the teachers who are to educate the colored people in the South. When a patriotic and large-hearted gentleman in my own district is willing to generously bestow a million dollars to educate the colored people of the South I must say that Congress should not for one moment hesitate to give the pitiful sum of $4,000 to put the building in proper repair in which the teachers are instructed who are to be sent down South to educate the masses by means of the magnificent gift given by a citizen of my State.

Those of us who were instrumental in bestowing the rights of citizenship upon these people should certainly be desirous to give them the advantages of education and so enable them to fully appreciate and enjoy and to properly exercise these rights; and our friends who are Representatives from States of which the masses of our colored citizens are residents ought also to fully realize the great advantage which will result to their States from the education and elevation of this class of citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair unquestionably regards the object of the proposed appropriation as the continuation of a work in progress where there is no limitation, and regards the amendment as being in order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. Let it be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1490 insert the following:
"For meeting and liquidating an indebtedness already incurred for necessary repairs commenced under a former appropriation, $4,250."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark this is an appropriation of last year. It is not so specifically named in the amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 16, noes 48.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 1512 to 1514, as follows:

For the Reform School, District of Columbia: For one new barn, of stone basement and frame superstructure, $7,500.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and to which I think there will be no objection made by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1514, after the word "superstructure," insert the words "and one outbuilding for farm purposes, with cellars for root crops."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1514 insert the following:
"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the official recommendation of the fire commissioners of the District of Columbia and the chief engineer of the fire department advising the erection of fire-escapes on the Providence Hospital, the Children's Hospital, the Freedman's Hospital, the building of the Little Sisters of the Poor, the Washington and Georgetown almshouses, the St. Ann's Orphan Asylum, the Reform School, and the public schools of the District of Columbia, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARRISON] on the point of order.

Mr. GARRISON. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not insist on the point of order. This measure has been recommended by the fire department of the District, by the engineer of the District, by the medical officer of the District, and by a committee appointed by this House at the last session. This has for years been a necessity in the public-school buildings of this city.

Mr. HISCOCK. The matter has been fully considered in connection with the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations declined to insert the item in that bill, and I therefore feel I am instructed to make the point of order.

Mr. GARRISON. Well, sir, the point I suppose is well taken if insisted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the following:

For the protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For every purpose and object necessary for the protection, preservation, and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, including compensation of superintendent and employés, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant leases for terms not exceeding ten years of small parcels of ground within said park, but no more ground shall be so leased than is necessary for the hotels and storehouses necessary to the accommodation of visitors, and necessary outhouses, bath and ice houses, and for gardening or grazing land in connection with said hotels; but no exclusive privileges or monopoly of any kind shall be granted to any person or company or corporation for any purpose within said park; nor shall any lease or contract be made which in any degree or manner interferes with or prevents the free and unrestricted access of the public to all portions of the park.

Mr. McCOOK. I move to strike out the proviso of the paragraph just read and to insert that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COBB. I desire to make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read that which is proposed to be inserted in place of the proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby prohibited from leasing any portion of the Yellowstone National Park to any person, company, or corporation for any purpose whatever; and all leases, agreements, exclusive privileges, or monopolies granted or entered into are hereby declared to be of no force and effect. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make necessary details of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders entering the park with the object of destroying the game therein or for any other purpose prohibited by law.

Mr. McCOOK. I hope the gentleman who has charge of the bill will accept that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say for myself individually that I am in favor of the most stringent legislation in the direction of preserving this park. The provision which this bill carries is the Senate bill upon this subject.

Mr. McCOOK. Only a very small portion of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, it is a portion of the Senate bill. We put it upon this bill as being in the direction of preserving this park. I am in favor of any legislation looking in that direction, and I have that great confidence in the judgment of my colleague [Mr. McCOOK] that I certainly would have no objection to his amendment going into this bill. The result of that would doubtless be that the matter would be considered by the Senate and more stringent legislation than that contained in this bill would be adopted if considered desirable.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] is a very proper one, and it does not make any difference if the provision in this bill is a bill which has passed the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not objecting to the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the House ought to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York in preference to the provision now in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as I am concerned I will make no objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. McCOOK. I have not concluded yet.

Mr. VALENTINE. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. ROBESON. I will yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish to say that while the provision reported from the Committee on Appropriations is an improvement upon the present law, I think the amendment I have offered is an improvement upon that provision. Under the law as it now stands a lease or agreement was made with certain parties which included about 4,000 acres of land in the heart of the reservation. In the language of a report made by Senator VEST, "It is evident from this contract and proposed lease that a monopoly or exclusive privilege to erect hotels and run stages, &c., is created for the term of ten years, the parties having this monopoly to pay a nominal rent not exceeding $2 per acre." [Here the hammer fell.] I beg the pardon of the Chair; the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] yielded his time to me. Under the circumstances it seems to me we ought to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior or any one else from leasing any portion of this park for any purpose whatever until the very admirable bill prepared by Senator VEST, of Missouri, can be acted upon by Congress.

This amendment which I have offered will protect the park, keep out intruders and trespassers who last year went there and killed four or five thousand elk for their skins only, and who if allowed to continue the destruction of game will finally drive it out of the park. We should protect this park in some way until Congress can pass a bill of a general character, and that can only be done by prohibiting all leases, and giving power to the Secretary of War to employ force if necessary to expel trespassers.

I would also call the attention of the committee to a letter written by General Sheridan, who has lately returned from there, in which he refers to the destruction of game and the injury to the natural features of the park, and claims that it is necessary that some action should be taken by Congress to give the military authorities power to expel trespassers and intruders. The men engaged in this indiscriminate slaughter of game as a rule care but little for the civil authorities, but they have a profound respect for the power of the General Government as represented by the officers and men of the Army. In addition I would call attention to the letters of John Schuyler Crosby, governor of Montana, and Inspector-General D. B. Sacket, in which decided grounds are taken in favor of enlarging the area of the park and taking positive steps to protect it. They, with other interesting matters in connection with this whole subject, can be found in Senate Report No. 911, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, prepared by Senator VEST, of Missouri.

Mr. COBB. I rise more for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] a question in regard to his amendment. As I understand it, the amendment provides that no lease shall be granted to any one. Am I right?

Mr. McCOOK. It prohibits absolutely the granting of any lease to any person, company, or corporation.

Mr. COBB. I think that amendment should be adopted. This is very valuable public property, on account of its scenery and the character of the game which is there, and it should be preserved for the benefit of future generations. We should take steps at once to preserve it intact.

As I understand the present provision in the bill, it gives authority to the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain small portions of the park for the purpose of erecting hotels and out-houses, and for making gardens and for pasturage. I object to that; I think it is entirely wrong. It gives the Secretary of the Interior too great a discretionary power.

I understand that there are only four or five of the more important points of natural beauty and scenery in the park. If the Secretary of the Interior shall be given the discretion to lease those points, he will be able to lease to individuals the very portions of the park which are most interesting to the public and which should be preserved for the public use, and will deprive the public of the privilege of entering at pleasure upon those portions of the park, as they should have the right to do.

Again this bill does not guard the timber and the game as it should. I submit that no one ought to be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior any exclusive privileges in regard to the occupancy of this park. Properly managed it may be made a blessing to the country. It is a place of great resort and will be still more so. I undertake to say that if power is granted to the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the management of this park, that power, whatever it may be, will be extended to the utmost limit, for the reason that private parties and great corporations are seeking to gobble up this property; and the Secretary of the Interior will be pressed by the parties who are urging him to-day and have been for years past to go to the utmost limit of his power.

I think the amendment of the gentleman from New York is right. We should not lease any portion of this park to any individual, but keep it at all times open for the enjoyment of the public. It is not necessary, as has been said, that great hotels should be erected there for the accommodation of the public. People can go there and camp out; they delight in doing so; it is the very thing that visitors would enjoy, in preference to being quartered at expensive hotels, to be charged heavily for the privilege of enjoying this great national park.

Mr. McCOOK. As I did not consume all my time, I would like to have read a few words on this subject from the report of Lieutenant-General Sheridan to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

On arriving at the railroad I regretted exceedingly to learn that the National Park had been rented to private parties. The place is worthy of being a national park, the geyser phenomena and the Yellowstone Cañon having no parallel in any nation. The improvements in the park should be national, the control of it in the hands of an officer of the Government, and small appropriations be made and expended each year for the improvement of roads and trails. It has been now placed in the hands of private parties for money-making purposes, from which claims and conditions will arise that may be hard for the Government and the courts to shake off. The game in the park is being killed off rapidly, especially in the winter. I have been credibly informed that since its discovery as many as 4,000 elk were killed by skin-hunters in one winter, and that even last winter, in and around the edges of the park, there were as many as 2,000 of these grand animals killed, to say nothing of the mountain sheep, antelope, deer, and other game slaughtered in great numbers.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I hope that the proposition offered by the gentleman from New York will be adopted in lieu of the language in the bill, because it seems to me altogether more comprehensive and efficient. It is perhaps well known to members of the House that certain parties during the last year have attempted to obtain a monopoly in that park, which should be reserved as a pleasure ground for the people. Certain persons have formed a corporation in the State of New Jersey, with a capital of $2,000,000, and have obtained some sort of an agreement under which they claim rights in that park. I think we should avail ourselves of the earliest opportunity to declare any such agreement null and void and to remove such parties from the park. If the question is understood I believe this House will act unanimously in the direction of this proposed amendment. The corporation to which I have referred claims to have secured at a merely nominal rental the most valuable and attractive portion of the park. For instance, the great geyser spring, which every one would wish to visit, they claim a monopoly of, and may undertake to fix any charge they please to be paid by visitors.

Mr. PAGE. Does the gentleman say that any contract has been made with any company by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. No contract has been made; but if the gentleman will examine the report——

Mr. VALENTINE. The lease has not yet been executed; but a contract was entered into last summer.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Something called a contract has been made, which this Congress may now, I think, with full authority declare not binding. We should give an unequivocal expression of our opinion as to this matter, so as to end it, and I think the Secretary of the Interior is in entire harmony with action of this kind. If gentlemen will refer to Senate Report No. 911 of the present session—a report from the Committee on Territories—they will find full information in regard to this matter. The report is very lengthy, giving all particulars. I hope that action in the line of this proposed amendment will be had.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York. Statements already made here show that while the Government has reserved that park—whether wisely or unwisely the future must determine—private parties and corporations are attempting to monopolize and control it for their private gain. The amendment of the gentleman from New York will, so far as we have power, put an end to such proceedings, for the present at least.

It seems to me when we come to deal with regulations affecting that great park, if it is to be preserved as a national park, such regulations should be embraced in a separate law which can be carefully discussed. The action which the Government shall take with reference to this park can not be properly settled in a clause of an appropriation bill. It is these legislative clauses in appropriation bills which have often led the Government into trouble and great loss. By undertaking to deal in this way with great subjects we have sometimes—perhaps without the knowledge or intent of those who favored such clauses—brought about the worst possible results.

Unless the amendment be adopted, the provision of the bill is equivalent to an appropriation of $15,000 for facilitating in the accumulation of private gain certain persons to whom leases of choice places in the reservation shall be made. This it seems to me ought to be avoided. While I have nothing to say now as to the amount proposed to be appropriated——

Mr. ATKINS. I think the gentleman misinterprets the object of the appropriation.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that it is for taking care of the park.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir. There is a superintendent of the park; and he is required to do certain work—to cut out bridle-paths and make other improvements.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand what my friend says; yet it does not induce me to qualify what I have said. Whenever you lease out these places for hotels, for gardens, or for grazing lands and put men there with private interests to subserve, the money will be spent in forwarding such interests. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be adopted.

Mr. FLOWER. There will not be many gardens, as there is frost there every night.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message from the Senate announced the passage without amendment of the bill (H. R. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes.

It further announced the adoption of the conference reports on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner;

A bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway; and

A bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

It further announced the passage of the following bill; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 2445) to amend section 2603 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing the boundary of the collection district of Sandusky.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. Pro forma amendments, by unanimous consent, are withdrawn, and the question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK].

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last word, and before submitting any remarks on the subject I desire that the amendment of the gentleman from New York may be again read.

Mr. MCCOOK'S amendment was again read.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and my reason for so doing is simply this: The provision offered by the Committee on Appropriations fully protects this Yellowstone Park in the interest of the public. I think there should be some accommodation provided for the traveling public. This is a great national park and hundreds of people visit it every year, and in my judgment some provision should be made by which parties may be able to build hotels and provide other accommodations for the public.

Nor, Mr. Chairman, do I see anything in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations looking to giving franchises in this Yellowstone Park to anybody. It simply provides—

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant leases, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground within said park; but no more ground shall be so leased than is necessary for the hotels and storehouses necessary to the accommodation of visitors, and necessary outhouses, bath and ice houses, and for gardening or grazing land in connection with said hotels; but no exclusive privileges or monopoly of any kind shall be granted to any person or company or corporation for any purpose within said park, nor shall any lease or contract be made which in any degree or manner interferes with or prevents the free and unrestricted access of the public to all portions of the park.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, it strikes me, is a peculiar one in its character. It prevents the Secretary of the Interior from allowing any person or persons going into the Yellowstone Park for the purpose of erecting any hotel with a view to the accommodation of the traveling public. If I may be permitted to say so, it is a sort of dog-in-the-manger policy. The Government erects no buildings for the accommodation of the public, and this amendment would prevent the Secretary of the Interior from making any arrangement with other parties by which such accommodation could be provided. I therefore believe the amendment ought not to be agreed to. And when I say this, Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking in the interest of any persons who have made application for leases of portions of this Yellowstone Park for the purpose of erecting hotels. I am speaking, on the contrary, in the interest of the traveling public who desire to go there, and who perhaps do not wish to camp out, but prefer hotel accommodations. With the restrictions thrown around the amendment of the committee, it seems to me the Secretary of the Interior should be allowed to lease small portions of this land for the erection of hotels and other buildings as may be necessary for the accommodation of travelers.

I can not see why this House should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, prohibiting absolutely, until some future Congress may come in, any provision for suitable hotel accommodations by refusing to lease any portion of this land to any person for that purpose. The paragraph in the bill absolutely prohibits the granting of any exclusive franchise, which is proper, and I do hope the paragraph as reported will be retained and the amendment of the gentleman from New York voted down.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is pending and the gentleman can be heard in opposition.

Mr. KING. I rise, sir, to support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York. This reservation was set apart by the Government as we understand for the whole people of this country, to establish a great national park. Evidence has come in authentic form that private parties are already absorbing this domain and destroying evidently the purposes for which the park was established. It seems to me that before undertaking the further leasing of any portion of this park, it should be placed under some Government head or proper control which by a careful investigation of all the facts could determine what should be done in the premises, and would be able to make adequate recommendations to Congress for the inauguration of such measures as may be advisable for its protection and care. If this system of private leases is continued it had better be put under the hammer at once, for it will be absorbed by monopolists and men having no interest in the purposes for which the park was established.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is proper that I should be heard for a moment in this connection. There seems to be an idea that the provision as it is contained in the pending proposition is a provision put into the bill in the interest of people who want to control this natural scenery, and to derive a revenue from what belongs to the public and should be free to all. Now, I wish this committee to understand that we have modified the existing law to a certain extent and, as we believe, in the interest of the preservation of the park. That law was construed to permit the leasing of this property not in parcels but only to one concern. But we have amended the law in that respect so as to compel it to be leased, if at all, in parcels, and thus prevent the very thing of which complaint is made here, that is to say, to prevent a monopoly of the property. We have changed the existing law in the direction of prohibiting anything of that kind.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from New York allow me also to suggest that as the law at present exists it allows the very mischief complained of to be perpetrated.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir, undoubtedly; as the gentleman from Massachusetts has aptly said, the law as it now exists allows this mischief to be done; and it is with the view of correcting this mischief that the committee has thought proper to bring in this provision. Now, they believe that this will have that effect.

Mr. COBB. But I think the gentleman is mistaken; it will not effect that object.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, it does; if the gentleman will examine the purport of the amendment in connection with the existing law he will see that it does. It does this, Mr. Chairman: if the purpose is to allow any part of this property to be leased for the erection of hotels for the use of travelers, this provision is so drawn that an honest execution of it, while accomplishing that object, will absolutely preserve the property and prevent impositions and monopolies.

Mr. COBB. I think not.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This will lock the door a little while at least, until the time comes when we want to open it.

Mr. PAGE. Why do you want to lock it a little while? This is a national park; why not have it open to the public?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman certainly does not understand me. I do not want to lock the park; but I want to so frame our legislation as to protect the people of the United States in their rights to it against trespassers and against monopoly.

Mr. PAGE. Then why not do that without preventing visitors from going there?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. We do not prevent them.

Mr. McCOOK. It is not locked up against the people.

Mr. PAGE. You do not want visitors who go there to be compelled to carry their blankets.

Mr. McCOOK. Every person who goes there now goes that way.

Mr. PAGE. They do not want to go there in that way. You ought to give them an opportunity to avoid that necessity.

Mr. COBB. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York to this provision "for grazing purposes" which the committee seeks to incorporate in this bill. That will cover in each one of these leases some three hundred acres of ground or more.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana calls my attention to the words "grazing purposes" in connection with it——

Mr. PAGE. Well, strike that out.

Mr. HISCOCK. The idea was that we would leave a little plot of land for the proprietor of the hotel to afford grazing land for a few cows. But I have no objection to striking it out.

Now, the difference between this bill and the proposition of my colleague is this: That his is a proposition to turn it over to the War Department, and we propose it shall remain under the Interior Department, with the right to make the leases in this way. For myself I am entirely indifferent to what action the committee takes upon the subject; all I desire is that our legislation shall be such as to prevent as far as possible all of the abuses which are contemplated, and which have been nearly perfected under the general statute.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt of the purpose of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill, and that his object is to protect this property from improper leases. It is, I think, very nearly the same thing as the present law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very nearly the same.

Mr. BLOUNT. The language of the present law is—

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground at such places in said park as shall require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors, &c.

Now, it would seem that that would guard against all trouble of this property getting into the possession of one single person or company.

And yet the leases have been so made that—I quote from the report made by Mr. VEST to the Senate—

The virtual and real effect of the contract and lease is to put the entire park, containing 3,300 square miles, under the control of the lessees for a term of ten years at a nominal yearly rent of a few thousand dollars.

Under the terms of their lease they are not bound to build but one hotel. Therefore by the operation of this law, which seems to guard so carefully against it, the company has got control of 4,000 acres and the exclusive control of all the property about these buildings.

I submit therefore the gentleman from New York is in the right line when he proposes to declare these leases void, and that the park shall be put temporarily under the control of the War Department. I do not understand the gentleman from New York to have any purpose of placing this permanently under the control of the War Department. But at this time this monopoly ought to be ousted, these depredations ought to be stopped; and the only way to accomplish that is to put it in the hands of the War Department, which has control of the troops and can thereby protect it. I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will assent to that proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make no objection. I am indifferent in the matter.

The question being taken on Mr. McCOOK's amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 1533 to 1537, as follows:

Botanic Garden: For procuring manure, tools, fuel, purchasing trees and shrubs, and for labor and materials in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Garden, under the direction of the Joint Library Committee, $10,000.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I move to strike out the paragraph which has just been read.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the appropriation which is made in the legislative appropriation bill for this precise object. The legislative appropriation bill appropriates for the support of this garden—for the same object—the sum of $11,700, which makes altogether $21,700. Now, I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, why it is that these appropriations should be made in different bills; why it is that the Committee of the Whole are not allowed the opportunity of having all appropriations for the same object brought in such juxtaposition that they can understand what the amount is that is to be appropriated for any one particular object. I would be obliged to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he will explain why it is an appropriation for this object is made in this bill and why it is a part of the appropriation for the same object is made in a different bill.

We know, sir, that so far as this House is concerned legislation is virtually transferred to our committees; and we know how difficult it is, when a recommendation is made by a committee, to defeat the appropriation it recommends; for the committee, with that pride of opinion which is natural, fight for their recommendations with all the tenacity and ability which usually distinguishes the members of our Appropriations Committees.

I insist, therefore, that when appropriations are made for a specific object all those appropriations should be put together, so that the House can understand what it is doing.

In addition to that I see, Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation in this same bill of $2,500 for a "house for the storage and protection of palms and other tropical and sub-tropical plants." We see this Botanic Garden, which has been in existence not a half a century, this one garden alone, has cost this Government more than half a million of dollars. The space that is occupied by the garden does not exceed, I think, seven acres, most of which is devoted to lawns and trees. And yet, sir, we see that every year by some means this appropriation is increased; and it is placed in the hands of a man who, I may say, is under no supervision whatever. These appropriations are under the direction of the Library Committee. What is the Library Committee? Why, sir, it goes out of existence and expires in a few days; and we have no supervision of the expenditures of this large amount of money for this bouquet garden at the foot of the hill, except it is the will of one man who has it under control.

I know the difficulty that we encounter in attempting to control the legislation in regard to this subject. We know the force and the power of flowers. The author of Lothair is content when he brings his hero and heroine together to allow the heroine to present the hero with a rose; and there the curtain drops, and all is left to imagination. And so it is with regard to these bouquets which are presented to members of the House. Some gentlemen insist, "Why, the President has a garden, and Congress should have one." I can not see it. Sir, Æsop tells us the frog, on one occasion, thought he should be allowed to drink as much water as the ox—the sequel is well known. We have but one President, and there may be an exception in his favor. We have no necessity, so far as this body is concerned, for any such expenditures.

Now, sir, in regard to bouquets and their distribution. A member of this House told me yesterday he was opposed to lessening the expenditures, because he had received a bouquet the night before from Mr. Smith; that he was a very clever man. I asked him what disposition he had made of it, supposing as a matter of course he had presented it to his wife. But no; he said he had given it to the daughter of his landlady because she was sick. [Laughter.] I do not know that it would contribute to the peace of members' families if it were known where all these bouquets go. [Laughter.]

But these esthetic bouquets have one enduring feature: these little flowers that "scent the morn" and regale the senses are mounted on tooth-picks, and when they wither and fade away their improvised stems may be converted to practical purposes. [Laughter.]

But seriously, Mr. Chairman, it was stated the other night and not denied that the appropriations for purposes of this character have amounted annually to about $100,000.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] said that a spirit of economy should not be exercised in regard to flowers; that when we exercised economy we became too gross and too material. I must confess that I do not belong to that esthetic school which discovers great beauties in the sunflower, with its repulsive odor and glaring petals, because it is fashionable. There are, however, gentlemen who do, and they sometimes come to grief, as the history of their great exemplar will show. Rather let us faithfully represent the interests of those who sent us here, whether we pursue this wayward goddess of fashion or otherwise. Whatever may be the infatuation of some members for flowers, no one can ignore their influence. The sweet poet, Felicia Hemans, sings, "Bring flowers, fresh flowers, to the festive board;" but we should bring them with due consideration for economy, when demanded by the public needs, and at our own expense when required for private festivities.

Now, as this gentleman has no supervision over him, I think that the appropriation which has heretofore been made of $11,700 is an ample sum to be placed in his hands by this Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is anything in the world which the Committee on Appropriations is not guilty of it is that which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] has charged against us, that we have a pride of opinion about any matter or that we have a desire to secure the adoption of provisions which we have placed in appropriation bills. We certainly can not be charged with being guilty of that.

Let me explain in regard to this matter to the gentleman from North Carolina, and I think he will see that we have cured in this bill just the evil which he has been complaining of. The legislative appropriation bill is a bill which carries the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employés of the Government here in Washington; it is intended that it shall carry nothing else. That is done with a view of having spread before Congress a full statement of the salaries which are paid to the officers and employés of the Government.

Appropriations for the support of institutions and gardens and things of that kind are not carried on that bill; that is, it has not been the intention to carry them on the bill.

Heretofore the legislative appropriation bill has carried an item precisely like the one here in this bill; it did so last year; and the sundry civil appropriation bill also carried a similar item; that is an item making an appropriation for the purpose of procuring manure, tools, &c. We have combined the two items in this bill, and dropped out of the legislative bill all except the provision carrying the salaries.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HISCOCK. We have combined the two items in this bill, and reduced the aggregate from $12,000 to $10,000. Instead of increasing the appropriation we have decreased it; and instead of carrying it upon different bills we have put it all in this bill.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I see an appropriation in the legislative bill for this Botanic Garden, and I find a similar appropriation in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the appropriation in the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. It is $11,700.

Mr. HISCOCK. For what?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. For precisely the same objects embraced in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg your pardon.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I will read it. This is in the legislative appropriation bill: "For Botanic Garden: For superintendent, $1,800."

Mr. HISCOCK. Ah! exactly.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. But wait; that is only one item.

For assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee, $11,700.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly; it carries the salaries for those persons.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to call attention to a fact that shows my friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] is very much mistaken, and I am sure that he will see that he is mistaken as soon as his attention is called to it.

The legislative appropriation bill is passed so far as the House is concerned, and it carried an appropriation of between eleven and twelve thousand dollars for the maintenance of this garden. This bill now under consideration proposes an appropriation of $10,000, but not one dollar of it for any common purpose of the two bills.

The legislative appropriation bill carries the appropriation for the salaries of the officers and employés. If the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] should prevail, to strike this clause out of the bill, you will have all the expense of the machinery of the garden provided for but not a dollar with which to run it or maintain it.

I am sure the gentleman from North Carolina can have and does have better ideas as to the character of favors received from this garden than I have. I do not know anything about the distribution of flowers from the Botanic Garden to the members of the House. I am certain I speak within the mark when I say that for years I have never had one sent to me from that garden.

But in my judgment it would be as clearly suicidal and unwise to strike this appropriation out of this bill, and thereby turn that western front of the Capitol out to commons, as it would be to plant a crop of potatoes on the ground that lies on the east front of the Capitol. I do not care whether the superintendent of that garden ever furnished a flower to anybody or not. It does not matter whether he ever furnished a plant or a shrub to any one. You can not dispense with it for the purpose of the ornamentation of your Capitol. Now, if you allow this motion to strike out to prevail, you will simply turn that west front out into commons.

I am surprised at the gentleman from North Carolina. Of all the men in this House I should sooner have suspected any other of opening a merciless war on flowers and florists, when he of all others should appreciate them the most, because to-day he has scarcely passed from under that floral marriage bell which I hope and believe marks the happiest epoch of his life. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The time for men to reform is directly after they have married. No occasion is better suited to commence all proper reforms. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I sincerely trust that this amendment will not prevail; for in all seriousness I call the attention of the committee to the fact that it will leave in existence all the expensive machinery of this institution as provided by law, without a dollar with which to buy materials for its maintenance.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, the practical question before us is just this: we have a botanic garden; we have hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of trees, shrubs, and plants; we have a place where the trees are selected; we have machinery through which they are purchased for the adornment of this city and its parks. We have already made appropriations for the salaries of officers. This appropriation is for procuring manure, tools, and fuel, for purchasing trees and shrubs for that botanic garden; and what else? And for labor and materials in connection with repairs and improvements. This has nothing to do with salaries. We must either maintain the valuable property which we have, or we must make an appropriation to take care of it. For myself, I would be perfectly willing to consolidate all the Government gardens about the city if they were placed under some practical head; but I do not want the adornment of this city, in the way of selection of its trees, to go under a bureau which is too large and too magnificent to take care of so small a matter, so that it would be left to some ignorant subordinate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COX, of North Carolina, to strike out the paragraph, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the work of construction of the new pension building in Judiciary Square, $150,000; for heating apparatus for the building, $40,000.

Mr. SMALLS. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase a site for a coaling dock and naval storehouse at Port Royal, South Carolina, located by the board of naval officers in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved August 7, 1883; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress the sum of $20,000 was appropriated for establishing a naval storehouse and coaling dock at Port Royal. A board of naval officers, appointed for the purpose of selecting a location, has made the selection and submitted its report. But it is found that under a provision of the Revised Statutes the Department can not purchase the land out of the appropriation which has been made. This amendment if adopted will simply enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the site selected by this naval board. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not object to this amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

TENTH CENSUS.

For the work of taking the Tenth Census and closing the bureau, including the salary of the Superintendent and of all clerks and other employés, $100,000.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 1345, after the word "employés," insert:
"And additional compensation to the supervisors of census, as provided for by H. R. 6097, referred to the Committee on Appropriations May 3, 1882."

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve a point of order on that amendment until the gentleman offering it has made his explanation.

Mr. PRESCOTT. On the 3d day of last May a bill was reported in this House by the Committee on Census providing for the payment of $500 additional to each of the supervisors of the Tenth Census, one hundred and fifty in number, so the appropriation would amount to $75,000. The reading of the paragraph now under consideration—"for work of taking the Tenth Census"—convinces me that the Committee on Appropriations, to which the bill I have mentioned was referred, intended by the appropriation of $100,000 to cover the amount recommended to be appropriated in that bill. But to make the provision clear, in order that there may be no doubt about the matter, I think it would be well to adopt this amendment, which will make this additional compensation payable, as undoubtedly the Committee on Appropriations intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] to the fact that this amendment in its terms refers by number to a bill of the House. Does the gentleman wish the provision, if adopted, to remain in that form?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will strike out that language if the Chair thinks it objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter for the gentleman to determine.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now insist upon my point of order. I can assure the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations in inserting this item for $100,000 had not the least intention in the world of allowing any additional compensation to the supervisors of the census.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to understand whether any law has been passed providing for this additional compensation.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Oh, no; I do not assert that. I only assert that a bill making this provision was reported to the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Then this does not rest upon existing law?

Mr. PRESCOTT. It does not rest upon existing law. If the reference in the amendment to the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations is objectionable I ask that that language be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. That would make no difference as to the question of order. If there is no existing law for this expenditure the amendment would not be in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. My point of order is that the amendment proposes an increase of compensation, and is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is of course subject to a point of order if there is no existing law on the subject.

Mr. CALKINS. It is always competent for the House to give direction as to the expenditure of any particular money which may be appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Not for an object not authorized by law.

Mr. CALKINS. But the amendment offered by the gentleman is in furtherance of the same object as the appropriation of $100,000 proposed in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But sustained by existing law.

Mr. CALKINS. So is the compensation of supervisors in so far as they are a part of the census establishment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The bill we are considering says it is for work in taking the Tenth Census, and that was taken either by these supervisors for which this provision is made or by the enumerators, the least paid of the organized system for taking that census. If it is intended to cover the enumerators, then the amount of $100,000 would not be enough, as there were 32,000 enumerators. It would make the amount too small to be divided among them, and therefore it was presumed to cover the amount desired to be appropriated in addition to these supervisors. My amendment simply directs the way in which this amount is to be paid. It does not increase the amount, and it does not change the expenditure except in the same way with this paragraph, which provides "for the work of taking the Tenth Census and closing the bureau, including the salary of the Superintendent and of all clerks and other employés, $100,000." Now, these supervisors certainly were employés of that Department in connection with the taking of the Tenth Census.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the Chair mistaken in supposing these supervisors referred to have completed their work?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; they have already completed their work.

The CHAIRMAN. Hence there is no authority for going back and adding compensation to those who have ceased to be officers of the United States.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If the amendment is ruled out of order I should like to offer another proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer the following proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "employés," line 1545, and add:

"And to the supervisors of census such additional compensation as the Superintendent of Census shall deem just, upon the basis of labor performed by each, not in any case to exceed the sum of $500 additional compensation to any supervisor—$150,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the same point of order against that amendment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order until I can make a remark.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not wish to be understood as withdrawing my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes it as pending.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] claims in connection with the other amendment the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is intended to complete the work as provided by the Census Bureau, and for that reason he has a right to object to it, as the addition of the amendment would to such extent lessen that appropriation. But this amendment I now propose provides for the amount intended to be covered by the bill reported by the Census Committee on May 3, 1882, making an increase of $75,000. For that reason it may be subject to the point of order if the gentleman insists on it, but I trust that he will not do so in the face of the fact that this bill has been before the Committee on Appropriations ever since the 3d of May last, and the appropriation bill reported since then made no provision for carrying out its appropriations in compliance with the report of the Census Committee. That bill has never been acted on by the Committee on Appropriations, nor has any appropriation been provided in accordance with it. Certainly the Committee on Appropriations should treat the action of the Census Committee with sufficient respect to report back that bill in some form or other, so that there might be action of the House upon it. I ask therefore that the gentleman shall now withdraw his amendment and let the matter be considered in the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask to return to my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman mean the amendment about the Sioux treaty?

Mr. CASWELL. I do.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will not be done for a few minutes.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well; then I will wait.

Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print some remarks in the RECORD on the census question generally. [See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For fish transportation: For the construction of a car for the distribution of carp and other useful food-fishes to distant portions of the United States, $5,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. The paragraph is subject to a point of order, but I do not make it. I wish to say a word, however, on the proposition. The district I represent, Mr. Chairman, is remote from this capital and the ponds where these carp and other food-fishes are propagated. From my own experience in my section of the country those who wish to experiment in regard to raising these fish are willing to incur the expense of their transportation from Washington to their ponds in Indiana. Indeed, I have not heard a single instance of complaint. On the contrary, the farmers of the Ohio Valley are perfectly willing and anxious to incur any necessary expense in procuring these food-fishes.

The amount of the cost to each individual is inconsiderable, and the benefits conferred are almost exclusively personal benefits. They are for the benefit of each individual who tries the experiment, and it is a matter of interest and taste also on the part of those who have the necessary facilities for cultivating fish in their own private ponds. But that is an expense that the Government ought not to be called upon to pay. I do not see any reason why it should be done, and I object to it. I am opposed to assessing the whole people of this country to contribute to a feature which may rather be called one of private policy—a policy like this which can not inure generally to the common good. I will venture to say that one-half at least of all the fish distributed for the various fish-ponds throughout the country under the charge of Professor Baird, who has been so successful in this work of cultivating fish, are shipped abroad at the expense of persons who desire to try the experiment of raising fish so as to imitate the taste of the famous Isaak Walton.

I see no reason why this expense should be met by Congress in individual cases. Of course I do not wish to be understood as commenting on the policy of distributing these fish where the distribution is manifestly for the public good, as in cases where car-loads of these fish are taken and distributed in ponds belonging to cities or where they are distributed in streams which have been deprived of their food-fishes, by any means. But I do think that in all other cases where this is a merely experimental work on the part of individuals, or merely a matter of taste, that they should themselves be required to bear the expense; and I would like to know on what principle my friend from New York can justify this appropriation. It is not a public matter, on the contrary the distribution of these fish is a matter of private taste, and confers private benefits in, as I have said, the great majority of cases. Here and there, I admit, fish are put into the streams as a matter of public concern; but that is an unimportant feature in comparison to the distribution among private citizens. I repeat, sir, I see no good reason, therefore, why a tax should be laid upon the whole people for benefits which are necessarily personal. I believe myself that the policy of fish-culture and the interest taken by the Government in it is a national concern, broad in its purposes and scope, and should so be considered by Congress. But in the distribution of fish here and there to individual ponds for experimental purposes it can not claim the title of a national measure.

Mr. BROWNE. Will my colleague draw the distinction between raising fish for private use and distributing them to private individuals for their use?

Mr. HOLMAN. The distinction is very clear. They are prepared, as I understand, at the Government fish ponds for distribution to ponds and streams with a view to national objects, not simply to furnish individual ponds but to supply the streams, and to that extent it gives the work a national character. But what I am objecting to is that the expense of the transportation of these fish to private ponds, and manifestly for private purposes, should be met by the Government. For myself I have been always willing to incur every reasonable expense in increasing in any possible manner the food-supply of all kinds of the people of the United States, and in that respect as long as this fish-culture is a national object I am heartily in favor of its encouragement. But when it falls below that and becomes individual in its scopes and purposes then I think the Government should not be required to pay the expense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana asks me upon what principle I justify this item on this bill. I say to him that I do not justify it under the Constitution of the United States [laughter], and in fact I do not know any governmental principle which has been adopted by the Congress of the United States, unless it is in reference to the distribution of fish, that does justify it. But I recognize this fact, that the people of this country are bound to have these fish, carp and all other kinds of fish, and the Representatives here upon the floor are bound to give them the facilities for getting them. I therefore recognize it as the law of necessity on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to report this item in this bill, and I have yielded to that law of necessity, and hence it is here, and I hope will be adopted.

Mr. McLEAN, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important measures in this entire bill. The distribution of these fish by the Government gives more food to the people of this country than any other governmental work that has ever been undertaken. It can not be confined to individuals. It is a national work. The Government supplies ponds, creeks, and streams with the fish, and it has become a great necessity to the people. In our western country all the great streams have been depleted and the Government is now supplying them with fish that will grow and mature in them. No individual could hope to do it. It must be done by the Government if done at all, and I repeat that I look upon this as one of the best provisions in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk reak as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,377,650; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding may be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to this clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word dollars, in line 1685:

"Provided, That the contracts for lithographing, mapping, and engraving shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder, under the direction and supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing, in the same manner that contracts are let for paper used at the Public Printing Office; and said joint committee shall determine what lithographing, mapping, and engraving should be done at the expense of the Government.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law and is not such a change as is authorized by Rule XXI.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desire to speak further on the point of order?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will make the point of order now and will hear what the gentleman from Illinois has to say upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to speak to the point of order. I think the amendment is not subject to the point of order, from this fact, that it will retrench and does retrench expenditure. The lithographing and engraving and mapping ordered by Congress to be done at the Public Printing Office amounted, according to the report of the Public Printer for the last fiscal year, to the sum of $274,000. I desire members should look at this part of the report of the Public Printer, beginning on page 50 and ending on page 56, and they will see the enormous amount of this work that is done at the expense of this Government. The sums charged up to each item here are enough to startle the House in regard to this expenditure. Under the law as it is each one of the Departments can order and does order all this engraving, printing, and mapping that any head of a bureau may think necessary to be done by the Government. There is no limit to the amount of such order. Two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars were expended for the purpose of procuring these plates and mapping and lithographing during the last fiscal year.

The object of this amendment is to put the letting of these contracts under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing. That committee is charged with the responsibility of determining what mapping and engraving shall be done at the public expense, instead of anybody who desires anything of this kind to be done ordering it and having it done at the Government expense.

Here are some of the items: Agricultural report for 1880, $96,000, in one item. For special report of the Agricultural Department, No. 34, which I understand to be the report on the diseases of animals, $13,600. For additional engravings for the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, 1880, $6,974. And all through this report are items of every kind which one can imagine of work sent to the engravers charged up to the Government.

My object in this amendment is to prevent this loose and extravagant expenditure, and require a committee of Congress—a committee created by law—to supervise all this and determine what amount of this work shall be done. It will, in my judgment, save to the people two-thirds of this expenditure and not interfere with one single object to be desired by any gentleman who wants to promote the public service.

I do not think the amendment is subject to the point of order; but if it is I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in the interest of economy will withdraw it and let the amendment be admitted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, while examining the amendment, directs the Clerk to conclude the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read lines 1689 to 1715, as follows:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $1,279,650; for the State Department, $15,000; for the Treasury Department, $250,000; for the War Department, $170,000 (of which sum $12,000 shall be for the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office); for the Navy Department, $50,000; for the Interior Department, $380,000 (of which sum $10,000 is appropriated for rebinding tract-books for the General Land Office); for the Department of Justice, $10,000; for the Post-Office Department, $150,000; for the Agricultural Department, $20,000; for the Supreme Court of the United States, $25,000; for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $1,000; for the Court of Claims, $8,000; and for the Library of Congress, $19,000. And no more than an allotment of one-half of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended in the two first quarters of the fiscal year, and no more than one-fourth thereof may be expended in either of the two last quarters of the fiscal year, except that, in addition thereto, in either of said last quarters, the unexpended balances of allotments for preceding quarters may be expended.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he wishes to oppose the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I believe the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards the point of order as well taken, inasmuch as in reference to this work the amendment requires the introduction of a system of letting contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, which is a change of existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is already done under the direction of the Public Printer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment directs the letting of contracts to the lowest responsible bidder under a new authority.

Mr. SPRINGER. The law now provides for letting the work out by contract under the direction of the Public Printer. My amendment provides that it shall be under the direction and supervision of the Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. That changes the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendment also requires the committee to determine what items of work of this class shall be performed at the public expense.

The CHAIRMAN. Which is also new legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that reduces expenditures, because the amendment authorizes the cutting down of the expenditures almost to an unlimited extent.

The CHAIRMAN. Non constat it might also authorize the increase of the expenditure.

Mr. SPRINGER. There can not be an increase of the expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not, when this is made subject to the discretion of the joint committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. There would not be any more of this work than is now provided for by law. But by the amendment the joint committee are authorized to reject any of the matters that may be lithographed, &c., as the rule now is.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, however, fixes no limit. It provides that the committee shall determine what lithographing, mapping, and engraving shall be done at the expense of the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would the amendment be in order if I should move at the same time to strike out part of the appropriation? I am satisfied we can safely reduce this appropriation $77,650 if this amendment is adopted. I will therefore move to strike out the words "and seventy-seven thousand six hundred and fifty dollars," and insert what has been read, so that it will read "$2,300,000" instead of "$2,377,650."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remarks that that part of the amendment as an independent amendment is perfectly in order; but as he has frequently decided, the introduction of an amendment of that sort does not bring an amendment changing existing law in order. It must be apparent the proposed change of the law itself does not retrench expenditures. The Chair does not find this is plainly a retrenchment of expenditures.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it not be if I reduced the amount covered by the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That, as a separate amendment, would be in order; but it does not help the infirmity of this amendment, which changes existing law without itself diminishing expenditures.

Mr. SPRINGER. By cutting off this amount of expenditures, which would be the effect of my amendment, we reduce the amount in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That requires the Chair to rule the inevitable result of this amendment is to decrease expenditures; and the Chair can not rule that.

Mr. SPRINGER. But if we make a less appropriation and provide a different system for its expenditure then there can not be so much expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again remarks that coupling with an amendment changing existing law a clause reducing the amount in the bill does not bring the amendment itself within the rule. It must be plain on the face of the amendment which changes existing law that it reduces expenditures in one of the three modes provided by the rule, unless it is reported by a committee; and then it must be plain the absolute result is a retrenchment of expenditures. The Chair must sustain the point of order on the ground that the amendment changes existing law and does not come within the provisions of the three clauses of the rule.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For fees of clerks, $160,000: Provided, That where the same person holds the office of clerk in both the circuit and district courts of any district he shall be allowed by the Attorney-General to retain for his personal compensation of the fees received by him, after the payment of office expenses, the prescribed maximum of one office only, to wit, the sum of $3,500 per annum; and this proviso shall apply in its full extent to the clerks of courts mentioned in section 840 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall make to the Attorney-General his semi-annual report of fees and emoluments in the same manner and under the same regulations as clerks of the other courts of the United States, under and in accordance with section 833 of the Revised Statutes, the maximum of whose compensation, after the payment of office expenses and other allowances granted by the Attorney-General, shall not exceed the maximum of $3,500, and the balance of said fees and emoluments of his office shall be paid into the Treasury according to the provisions of section 844 of the Revised Statutes: And provided also, That the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall make his semi-annual report of fees and emoluments of his office to the Attorney-General in the same form and manner as clerks of other courts, to whom the Attorney-General is authorized to allow, as the maximum of his office, after the payment of necessary expenses to be approved by him, a sum not exceeding $6,000 per annum; and the balance of said fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury according to the provisions of said section 844; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with these provisions are hereby repealed.

Mr. WILLITTS. In behalf of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, I move to strike out the last proviso of the paragraph just read and insert in lieu thereof that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation, over and above his necessary clerk-hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the court, or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding —— thousand dollars a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year; and the surplus of such fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury as provided by law in cases of clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States: And provided further, That so much of section 3 of the act of February 28, 1799, as relates to the payment of said clerk for his attendance in court is hereby repealed: And provided further, That the Supreme Court is hereby authorized and empowered to prepare the table of fees to be charged by the clerk thereof, and until the same is thus prepared the fees therein charged for recording or copying any paper or record shall not exceed 14 cents per folio.

Mr. WILLITS. The clerk of the Supreme Court, according to his own statement, received in 1880 $36,120.17 and paid out $16,170.79, leaving him net the sum of $19,949.38. For the year 1881 his total receipts were $44,845.80; total expenditures, $15,368.69; balance net fees, $29,477.11.

He is the only clerk of the United States courts without a salary limited by law, and the large amount received by him warrants some legislation. The clerks of the district and circuit courts, with some exceptions provided by statute, receive $3,500 per year; when both offices are united in one person he receives the salaries of both, under the peculiar phraseology of section 839 of the Revised Statutes, as construed by Justice Story in 2 Story, page 389. The clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia receives $6,000.

The fees of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States have not been essentially changed since the organization of the court, when the business was light, and they now aggregate the large sum above stated from the growth of business before it. By the act of May 8, 1792, re-enacted February 28, 1799, the compensation was fixed "for his attendance in court $10 per day, and for his other services double the fees of the clerk of the supreme court of the State in which the Supreme Court of the United States shall be holden." This is the only law now warranting any fee at all. It is not to be found in the Revised Statutes, and only in volume 1, Statutes at Large, on pages 277 and 625, respectively. At first the court was held in the State of Pennsylvania, and the fees of the supreme court of that State controlled all of the fees of the United States Supreme Court but the per diem pay. Subsequently, when removed to the District of Columbia, it was construed to be within the State of Maryland, and the fees of that State formed the basis of the fee bill.

Some question has been raised of the authority to tax general fees at all since the court has been held in the District of Columbia, but the taxation under the Maryland law has had the acquiescence if not the approval of the court itself, and since the enacting of the Revised Statutes the Supreme Court has informally held that the omission of the clerk's fees in the Revised Statutes did not bring them within the terms of their general repealing clause. It would seem wise, however, to put the right to collect so large a sum of money annually upon some more certain basis.

The Maryland statute which governs the present fee bill is not now the same as when the present fee bill was fixed. Then it was so many pounds of tobacco at so much a pound for each item of the fee bill. The United States Supreme Court bill doubles that, or nearly so; in some instances less; as follows:

Table of fees of clerks of the court of appeals of Maryland and Supreme Court of the United States.

	Court of appeals.		Supreme Court.
	Pounds of tobacco.	Cents.
Recording, &c., per folio	8	16	$0 28
Entering judgment	47	94	1 64½
Taxing bill of costs	8	16	28
Copy of same, per folio	8	16	28
Writ of diminution	22	44	77
Writ of possession or other execution	20	40	70
Entering and motion, &c	8	16	28
Issue and rule	24	48	84
Affixing seal, &c	131	262	4 58½
Entry of appearance	6	12	21
Rule of trial	8	16	28
Continuance	4	8	14
For search	14	28	49

Under the present statute of Maryland the fees are very much less. For instance, the fee for recording or copying any paper is 10 cents a folio instead of 16. Moreover, there are many items not included in the Maryland fee bill; as a sample, the item of $4 for filing briefs seems to have no corresponding item in the Maryland bill.

These instances are given to show the apparent laxity which is found in the present system of taxing costs in the supreme judicial tribunal of the land. Under it, by a practice that has existed for fifty years, many incongruities have grown up, and some of a most grave and important character. One, perhaps the most important, is in the printing of the records. Until recently the clerk was required to furnish copies of the record for the printers, for which he charged 28 cents a folio, the regular charge for a manuscript copy. But under a practice that has existed, as the Chief-Justice recently said, for more than fifty years, the clerk has taken the original record to the printers to be set up, instead of making the copy required, and for which he has charged the full price.

When it is observed that the printed record in some cases is almost if not quite the size of the volume of the Revised Statutes, it will be seen that the fees at 28 cents a folio would be enormous and excessive, even if the work had been actually done, but as it was only constructively performed, the grievance is one that deserves abatement. The court recently, attention having been called to it, sought to rectify the wrong by changing the rule, requiring the clerk to charge only half price in such cases. The authority to do even this tardy act of justice is not apparent, but doubtless it was in the exercise of the right of the court to control the acts of its subordinate officers.

A sample case under this lax construction of the rule, is that of H. Blennerhasset et al., appellants, vs. Hoyt Sherman, assignee, October term, 1881. The charge made by the clerk for manuscript copy of the record for the printer, though no copy was made, was over $2,000. The total costs in this case were $6,148.

Of the total charges entered on the fee-books in cases decided during the October term, 1880, the amount charged for manuscript copies of the original records for the printer was over $20,000. The amount paid clerks for making such manuscript copies as were made was a little less than $3,000, leaving the clerk constructive fees about $18,000.

The charges and fees for the October term of 1880 were substantially as follows:

For fees in the cases	$32,466 86
For admissions to the bar	2,270 00
For salary, $10 per day, 105 days	1,050 00
For recording opinions of the court, October term, 1879	1,610 00
	37,396 86

There were other items and perquisites in small amounts, and some of the above amount has not been paid, but his gross receipts were for that term, as stated by the clerk, the sum of $36,120.17.

The incidental expenses of his office for the October term, 1881, as stated before, were $15,368.69, made up as follows:

Charles B. Beall, deputy clerk	$3,000 00
H. C. McKenney, assistant clerk	1,800 00
James D. Maher, assistant clerk	1,500 00
Assistant clerk (vacancy)	1,020 00
Assistant clerk (vacancy)	1,020 00
One messenger	420 00
Printing opinions of the court	2,200 00
For copyists, postage, buckets, brooms, ice, &c	4,408 69
	15,368 69

Of the last item the clerk has not furnished a bill of particulars. He says it is largely made up in copying, for which he paid at the rate of 10 cents per folio.

The same fees are taxed against the United States as against other litigants for like services, and are paid by the Treasurer of the United States from the appropriations annually made to pay clerks of courts on an account rendered by the clerk and certified by the Chief-Justice.

The amount paid them by the United States for several years past will appear by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1883.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry this morning I have to state that the fees earned from the United States by the clerks of the Supreme Court of the United States during the terms specified below have been allowed on the adjustment of their accounts at the Treasury, and the sums named have been paid:

October term, 1877–'78	$5,833 22
October term, 1878–'79	7,488 12
October term, 1879–'80	5,839 59
October term, 1880–'81	4,875 45
October term, 1881–'82	5,516 46

Very respectfully,

WM. LAWRENCE, Comptroller.

Hon. EDWIN WILLITS,
House of Representatives.

It will be seen that these several amounts have been paid out of the Treasury on the certificate of the Chief-Justice. There would seem to be no specific authority to do this. Under section 4 of the act of May 8, 1792—

The legal fees of the clerk, attorney, and marshal in criminal prosecutions shall be included in the fees of the marshal; and the same having been examined and certified by the court or one of the judges of it * * * shall be passed in the usual manner and the amounts thereof paid out of the Treasury of the United States to the marshal, &c.

The clerk states that this is the only statute governing the proceedings by which he obtains his fees, not only in criminal but civil cases in which the United States is a party; also his per diem of $10 per day for his attendance upon court. He states that the practice of the payment to him direct (instead of to the marshal), and covering not only the fees in criminal cases but all his other fees, is based upon an unpublished opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, a copy of which is on file in his office, in which Mr. Cushing in substance argues that from analogy in the cases of the circuit and district courts, and from the fact that the Supreme Court is a co-ordinate branch of the Government, it ought to control the expenses attending the same. It is submitted, however, that there ought to be more specific authority in the premises if the practice is continued.

Another alleged evil brought to the notice of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice deserves some comment and explanation. It will be noticed that among the incidental expenses reported by the clerk was the item of $2,200 for the printing of the opinions of the court. The popular apprehension has been that the clerk has made a large sum of money for certified copies of the opinions of the court. He claims that this is an error. He contracts with a printer at the rate of $2.25 per page, to be printed at his own expense. To reimburse him for this expenditure he charges the parties to a cause for a copy of the opinion at the rate allowed for a manuscript copy, 28 cents per folio. For copies ordered by other parties the charge is $1 per printed page, but no copy to exceed $5, exclusive of $2 for his certificate, with the seal of the court. He claims that his profits are small. His contract is for a full page $2.25, though the opinion may not exceed ten lines, while in such case his fee would not exceed a dollar at 28 cents a folio. Then in a large proportion of the cases he is never called upon for more than one copy, for which he receives far less than he has to pay the printer. He cites an instance in the recent case of the Arlington (Lee) property. For the printing of the opinion he paid some $60, and probably the only copy that will be ordered is the one he furnished the plaintiff, for which he was paid much less.

The practice of printing the opinions of the court as now conducted is of comparatively recent origin. The contract for printing seemed excessive at the first glance, but when it was learned what it included the price would not appear so. The writing of the opinion is first assigned to one of the justices, who furnishes to the clerk his manuscript, to be set up by the printer, who is bound to secrecy; the proofs are furnished to the justice, who corrects and revises, sometimes reconstructing whole paragraphs and even pages, which corrections and revisions are set up and recorrected till it is satisfactory to the justice. Then printed copies are furnished all the justices for consultation—all before the opinion is concurred in by the court. These corrections and revisions are charged as new matter by the printer, and amount annually to from $300 to $500.

There is no question that the practice is a good one and that it or something similar should be continued in the future, for which some provision should be made under the supervision of the court. The secrecy required in carrying it out would render it advisable that the court retain the control of the printing rather than to permit it to be done at the office of the Public Printer, and that this item still be allowed as a part of the incidental expenses of the court, with some reasonable charge in the fee bill in part at least to reimburse the expense.

All the foregoing considerations have led the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to think it advisable that the clerk be put on a fixed salary; that the per diem of $10 be repealed; that the court have specific authority to make a fee bill, and that in the mean time we reduce the expense of copying any paper or record at least one-half, so that there be some relief to litigants in the matter of one of the most expensive items charged to them; therefore it submits the amendment presented.

For the purpose of showing how the practice of the constructive charge for copies of the records grew up arose, and what considerations led the court to act, in the recent change of the rule in that regard, it is proper that the opinion of the Chief-Justice accompany this presentation of the subject. The opinion is as follows:

Supreme Court of the United States.—October term, 1882.

In the matter of amendments to rules 1 and 10.

Mr. Chief-Justice WAITE: Our attention has been called to the practice which prevails in the clerk's office of sending original records to the printer to be printed and of taxing in the bills of costs a fee for one manuscript copy of the record when no such copy is in fact made.

On investigation we find that the statute regulating the fees of the clerk was passed in 1799, and that under this statute a table of fees was prepared, many years ago, by or under the direction of the court, which has been followed by the clerk in the taxation of costs ever since. No provision was made, by rule or otherwise, for printing the records until January term, 1831. Before that time the practice was, as we are informed, for the court to use the original record, and the clerk made two manuscript copies for the use of the parties. For these copies he charged the parties according to the established table of fees.

At January term, 1831, the Attorney-General, in behalf of the United States, applied to the court for leave to take the original records in certain cases from the clerk's office to be printed, at the same time remarking that he had been informed that in such cases it had been the habit of the clerk to charge half fees. Chief-Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, stated "that the clerk of this court had certain rights and fees of office (of which a fee for a copy of the record was one), which this court was not disposed to violate; and that the party could not withdraw the records without paying for the copies, but that any arrangement which the clerk saw proper to make would be satisfactory to the court." The original records in these cases were afterward taken to the printer and printed, and the clerk charged and was paid full fees for one manuscript copy.

At the same term the first rule for printing the records was adopted, which provided for the taxation of the fees for one manuscript copy of the record in the bill of costs. When this rule was promulgated the court consisted of Chief-Justice Marshall and Associate Justices Johnson, Story, Thompson, McLean, and Baldwin. Mr. Justice Baldwin dissented on this provision of the rule, for the reason, among others, that it allowed the clerk a fee for a copy whether one was made or not.

Under the rule thus adopted the printing of records began, and from the first the original records were sent to the printer and a fee for one manuscript copy was charged in the costs, when in fact no copies were made. There is abundant evidence that at the outset this practice was directly or indirectly approved by the court. In 1839 the House of Representatives instructed the Judiciary Committee to "inquire what costs are charged against the United States for printed copies of records of suits pending in the Supreme Court which have been printed at the expense of the United States, * * * and whether any legislation is necessary in relation to costs of suits in said court." The committee reported, submitting a statement of the clerk on the subject, and were discharged. From this statement of the clerk and from other evidence on file, we are satisfied the committee or some of its members visited the office during the progress of their inquiries and possessed themselves fully of the mode of doing the business and of the compensation therefor.

In 1859 the rules were revised by Chief-Justice Taney under the direction of the court, and the provision for printing the records was put into the form in which it now appears in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, of Rule 10. We are advised that prior to the death of Chief-Justice Taney no manuscript copies of the records were ever made, and that the fee for one copy was always charged in the costs. Since the death of Chief-Justice Taney copies have in some cases been made. The present clerk has followed the practice of his predecessors.

We are entirely satisfied that the practice as it now exists is in all material respects what it has been for more than fifty years, and that at the beginning it received the approval of the court. No one now on the bench ever heard of any complaint, or of any application for a retaxation of costs, on account of what was done until late in the last term, when a motion for retaxation was made in the case of James vs. Campbell.

There is an apparent conflict between the rules and the practice under them which ought not to exist. It is also evident that what was fifty years ago no more than a reasonable compensation for the important services of the clerk is now, under the operation of the rules as then construed and the practice then inaugurated, larger than it ought to be. To prevent misunderstandings in the future, and to reduce the expenses of litigants without doing injustice to the clerk, it is ordered—

I. That the second clause of Rule 1 be amended so that it will read as follows:

The clerk shall not permit any original record or paper to be taken from the court-room, or from the office, without an order from the court; but records on appeals and writs of error, exclusive of original papers sent up therewith, may be taken to a printer to be printed, under the requirements of Rule 10.

II. That paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Rule 10 be rescinded, and the following adopted in lieu thereof:

"3. The Clerk shall take to the printer the original record in the office, except in cases prohibited by the rules. When the original can not be taken he shall furnish the printer with a manuscript copy. He shall supervise the printing and see that the printed copy is properly indexed. He shall take care of and distribute the printed copies to the judges, the reporter, and the parties from time to time as required.

"4. In cases where a manuscript copy of the record is not furnished the printer the fee of the clerk for his service under the last preceding paragraph shall be one-half the rates now allowed by law for making a manuscript copy, and that shall be charged to the party bringing the cause into court, unless the court shall otherwise direct. When a manuscript copy is required to be made full fees for a copy may be charged, but nothing in addition for the other services required.

"5. In all cases the clerk shall deliver a copy of the printed record to each party without extra charge. In cases of dismissal, reversal, or affirmance, with costs, the fee allowed in the last paragraph shall be taxed against the party against whom the costs are given. In cases of dismissal for want of jurisdiction such fees shall be taxed against the party bringing the cause into court, unless the court shall otherwise direct."

True copy.

Clerk Sup. Court U. S.

Mr. WILLITS. The clerk of the Supreme Court ought to receive more than the clerks of the circuit and district courts, and the committee authorizing me to report this amendment were in favor of a salary of $5,000 a year. We have reported the amount in blank, leaving it to be fixed by the House. The Committee on Appropriations, I perceive, has fixed the amount at $6,000.

Mr. NEAL. I suggest to the gentleman to put in $5,000.

Mr. WILLITS. Very well; I will fill the blank by inserting the word "five" before the word "thousand."

Mr. NEAL. That is what our committee agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman. I understand that the expenses of this office during the last year are stated to have been $15,000. I would like to know how this extraordinary expense was made up.

Mr. WILLITS. Eight thousand three hundred and forty dollars was for assistants, deputies, &c.; $420 for a messenger; $2,200 for printing the opinions of the court, leaving about $4,000 for incidental expenses, of which the clerk has rendered no bill of particulars, but which are made up of postage, brooms, ice, and various other things, besides the amount actually paid for copying, which the clerk claims was some thousands of dollars.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILLITS, it was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the salary of this officer ought to be fixed at $6,000. I move to strike out $5,000 and insert $6,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the proposition?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir; but I really think this ought to be done.

Mr. NEAL. I desire to say one word upon this amendment. During the last session of the present Congress the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice were so much engaged by their duties on other committees that it was impossible for them to give any attention to the duties of this committee which has heretofore been regarded as an ornamental rather than a useful committee. At the commencement of this session, however, we went to work and determined to make it as useful as the time would allow. We have done so; and the result is this amendment presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLITS] with reference to the salary of the clerk of the Supreme Court.

This office of clerk of the Supreme Court is practically a life office. There is no great pecuniary expenditure connected with it. Under this provision the clerk will have ample funds supplied him for securing all necessary clerks and assistants. A salary of $5,000 is larger than the salaries of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, larger than the salaries of the judges of the Court of Claims, larger than the salaries of judges of the United States district courts in almost every part of the country.

This is an office without much responsibility. It does not require a high order of talent, and if we allow this clerk a salary exceeding that of the judges of most of the district courts of the United States and as large as that received by members of Congress, it seems to me we ought not to be asked to do more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL]. My understanding is that in times past under the method of compensation which has prevailed this clerk has received from $12,000 to $30,000 a year.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. He is the clerk of the highest court known to the law of this country. The clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States does occupy a very important position. His relations with the court are, to say the least, semi-confidential, requiring strict integrity. By reason of his position here in Washington as clerk of this court he is obliged to incur greater or less expense. He must live in a manner corresponding with the position—must incur that measure of expense which is meet and orderly for an official of this kind. When we cut the pay of this officer from an amount ranging from $12,000 to $30,000 down to $6,000—which I want to do and which I submit is proper—it strikes me we make a sufficient reduction. While I am in harmony with the gentleman from Ohio that it ought to be reduced, I think that amount is about enough.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What duties devolve on this officer making it necessary to pay him $1,000 more than is paid to a member of this House or the Senate or to more than five-sixths of the governors of the different States?

Mr. CANNON. This officer, the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States as he is, and performing his duty as he does, has responsibilities resting upon him which in my opinion entitle him to receive a salary of $6,000 a year. I do not believe he ought to receive, as he has been receiving, a salary from $12,000 to $30,000 a year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Should not the fact that he has been receiving from $12,000 to $30,000 in the past be taken into consideration in fixing the salary he is hereafter to receive?

Mr. CANNON. I think not, because there may be a change, as there has been a change of the clerk, the old clerk having died. I do not take that into consideration. I wish to pay him a proper salary, and in my opinion $6,000 is an appropriate sum in consideration of the great responsibilities imposed on this officer.

Mr. HISCOCK's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the expenses of circuit judges in going to and returning from their courts, and while in attendance at courts at places where they do not reside, $15,000; but not exceeding $10 a day shall be paid to a judge for traveling expenses and for attendance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order there is no law authorizing that appropriation of money. The law creating the office of circuit judge fixes the salary at $6,000 a year, and no law has been passed since then providing for the payment of the expenses of circuit judges going to and returning from their courts.

Mr. HISCOCK. The provision in the bill is subject to the point of order, I concede, but on the other hand I believe it is eminently just and proper these circuit judges should have this provision for the payment of these expenses. There are certain circuit judges who are compelled to travel to that extent—I was about to say as to exhaust almost their entire salaries. This provision, therefore, is eminently just and proper, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think salaries ought to be increased in this way.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not intended to increase the salaries of these circuit judges at all, but merely to provide for the payment of the expenses of these circuit judges in going to and returning from their courts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is an objectionable method of increasing salaries. Our circuit judges, I believe, can not complain of their salaries, any of them. I think they receive ample compensation. I would be glad to withdraw my objection at the request of the gentleman from New York, but I can not do it. I believe these salaries are now as large as they should be. Even now they create discontent and dissatisfaction in our State courts on account of the magnitude of the salary in comparison with what is paid to the judges of the State courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the paragraph is ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. J. T. Updegraff, deceased, late member of the Forty-seventh Congress and member-elect to the Forty-eighth Congress, $6,000.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to strike out the last line, and I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee for a few moments to this matter. There is provided by this bill payment to the representatives of deceased members of Congress in four instances.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order is reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order was sustained and the paragraph was ruled out.

Mr. BROWNE. I will raise the point of order to know what rule if any is to be established in these cases.

In the first place there is allowed to the legal representatives of Hon. J. T. Updegraff $6,000. Not simply the balance of his salary for the unexpired term of the Forty-seventh Congress, but a sum in gross, $6,000. When we pass to the next, to pay to the widow of Mr. Shackelford, deceased, the committee simply allows so much as covers the unexpired term of his service as a member of this Congress. That is also true in the case of Hon. William M. Lowe. When we pass to the next case, that of Hon. J. Q. Smith, they simply allow the salary due up to the time of his death. First, we allow so much for the unexpired term; in another instance for the period of service up to the time of death; and in another case, not only for the unexpired term but for the term for which the member was elected and which has not yet commenced, we allow at least one year's salary of that new term.

It would be ungracious as a matter of course to raise a question on the impropriety of appropriations of this character. My own conviction is the Congress of the United States should in no case appropriate beyond the salary due at the time of death. When we have paid the funeral expenses and all that it seems to me justice or charity could not demand more.

My purpose is, Mr. Chairman, to know why it is there is this difference. My principal purpose was to inquire further in reference to the case of Mr. Orth. Godlove S. Orth died on the 15th of December, if I remember correctly, some three months before the expiration of his term, and this bill makes no appropriation in that case whatever. It makes no provision for what may be due him, and I do not know whether anything was due him at the time of his death, and it makes no appropriation for his unexpired term. Now, why are these discriminations made in this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that I rose in time when my colleague had addressed the Chair to inquire whether the point of order had been made upon this paragraph, wishing if it had not been to reserve it. The Chair replied to me that the point of order had been already disposed of, referring to a previous point of order. But I hope, inasmuch as I addressed the Chair with that intention, that the point of order will be considered as pending now.

Mr. HISCOCK. We all understand, Mr. Chairman, that a practice has grown up in this House of giving to the family or representatives of a deceased member, that is, a member-elect, one that has not been sworn in but dies before Congress convenes, or if he dies after Congress assembles, who has not been able to attend and not sworn in, I say that the practice has grown up of giving to the heirs or representatives or somebody interested in the deceased the sum of $6,000. I believe it is a custom absolutely pernicious, and I indorse every word that has been said by the gentleman from Indiana upon the subject. If I could believe that we could cure the evil for the future I would not care what was done with this provision. But I think in the last session of Congress we made provision for the heirs or representatives of two members. We gave them the same sum which is allowed here, I remember that some time ago. I think in the Forty-fifth or Forty-sixth Congress, a provision of this kind was made in favor of an eminent gentleman from the State of Texas. It is ungracious to object to a provision of this kind; and the Committee on Appropriations have reported it here because such has been the usage. And it seems to me that such having been the practice we should not in this instance at all events depart from it. If a provision could be put here into this bill for the future, serving notice on the future as it were, that this compensation will not be allowed hereafter, that, I think, would be wise. But I do not think that at this point we ought to make a discrimination. If some legislation could be ingrafted here or elsewhere that would be a declaration of what would be the policy of the Congress in future in reference to this matter I believe it would be entirely wise and proper. But in the absence of anything of that kind, and also because of the difficulty of any legislation that would bind a future Congress, I hope there will be no change made at present.

Now, in reference to the pay of Godlove S. Orth: The reason that provision is not made for that in this bill is because when the bill was reported I had not procured from the Sergeant-at-Arms the amount of pay then due to him. Where a member has been sworn in he is only entitled, by the practice prevailing, to the balance of his pay; and I now offer as an amendment, to come in after the close of line 1858, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Mary A. Orth, the widow of the late Hon. Godlove S. Orth, the amount of salary due him as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress, $1,072.03.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment in regard to this matter. It seems to me, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that we can not say to any future Congress that they shall not do this or that upon this particular subject. We can not do it for the reason that every case must be and should be governed by its own circumstances. And if we put in an amendment of the character he suggests it would be simply a notice to every member who comes here to Congress in the future that if he dies his family must not expect any gratuity from the Government, nor look for anything that has heretofore been granted in the shape of extra compensation at the hands of Congress. There are cases where this has been done without objection in the past. I recollect that in the Forty-sixth Congress we gave to the widow of a member of Congress from Texas, a distinguished member from that State, who died in the early part of the session, the amount of his salary for the whole period of his term in Congress. I have no doubt under these circumstances that it was gracious in Congress to do so, and not only gracious but right and proper. The same thing was done also with reference to the family of a gentlemen from Iowa, who died under similar circumstances. It seems to me therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we should leave that matter just as it is, and not undertake to say what the next Congress or a future Congress shall do. No matter what legislation we may enact upon the subject there will be circumstances which must govern in every case and determine what is right and proper. I hope the gentleman from New York will not propose any such change as he has suggested.

Mr. BROWNE. If this custom is so eminently proper that Congress should continue to do this thing, it seems to me to be a little singular that it did not begin somewhat earlier in the history of this Government than the Forty-fifth Congress, for I believe that the first precedent in that direction was set in that Congress.

Now, I do not pretend to be so ungracious as to move to strike out a single one of these provisions of this bill; but I do desire to give notice to every one that if I should live to be in the next Congress and this question is then raised I shall move to give only such amount of pay as may be due at the time of the death of the member.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to make a statement in reference to the point of order.

I was watching the progress of this bill as it was read by the Clerk, and have a memorandum made in reference to this particular paragraph. My colleague [Mr. BROWNE] was on the floor and had already addressed the Chair before I rose to inquire whether the point of order was reserved. The Chair then replied that the point of order had been already disposed of, the Chair evidently supposing that I had referred to a point made to the preceding paragraph instead of this one.

I can only say, sir, I rose at the earliest moment that I was conscious this paragraph was pending, and I was giving attention to the reading of the bill. And yet when I made that inquiry my colleague was on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds it his duty to recognize the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order if he says he rose before the debate began, although the other gentleman may have been on the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague had addressed the Chair before I made the inquiry. I rose instantly when he addressed the Chair to inquire if the point of order had been reserved. I was noticing the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to ask what had become of the point of order, and therefore supposed he referred to a prior paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I had reference to this paragraph, and inquired whether the point of order had been reserved or not.

The CHAIRMAN. It is for the gentleman himself to say whether he rose in time before the debate commenced. If he says so the Chair is bound to accept his statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I did. I rose to inquire if some other gentleman had made the point of order.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit the question of order, and I do it for the reason that if the point of order is made to this proposition and sustained by the Chair it will furnish the best guarantee which is possible that this will be the final disposition of this kind of legislation. I doubt the propriety of Congress appropriating money for services which have never been rendered; appropriating money to the widow of a person who has not rendered the public service for which the appropriation is proposed to be made.

I made the same point of order in the last Congress when the very first proposition of this kind came up, when I myself was present in the Committee of the Whole; but for reasons that it is not necessary to recount now, on account of the complicated condition of some questions which came before the House, and which appealed very strongly to a sense of the impropriety of pressing the point of order on one of these propositions, when another had been passed over unintentionally, that point of order was withdrawn. It was withdrawn for reasons which will be well remembered. I think it is very desirable that we should come to an understanding that the rule of the House which requires appropriations to be made in conformity to law is not to be waived by members of the House or the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH and Mr. REAGAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs gentlemen to wait one moment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not quite distinctly state whether he rose for the purpose of making the point of order before the debate had begun.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose for the purpose of making the point of order if my colleague had not made it; and the reason I did not make it was the statement of the Chair to which I have called attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair upon that statement of the gentleman from Indiana will entertain the point of order.

The Chair desires further to say as to the action in the last session of Congress, when the present occupant was also in the Chair, he declined to take a responsibility which equally belonged to every member on the floor of the House, and if the point of order is insisted on in this case he will submit it to the determination of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWNE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that clearly the question was being debated when he rose and addressed the Chair. That he would have made the point of order if he had risen in time to do it, I have no doubt. But if I am not mistaken, and if my eye-sight is not in fault, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] had addressed himself to the discussion of this question when my friend arose, probably for the purpose of making the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true; I have so stated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And that being true, it disposes of the question of order. In other words, the point can not be made after the discussion of the question has been begun. There is no doubt about that, and the gentleman from Indiana concedes that that is the case; and that being so, it must dispose of the point of order; or rather the point of order has not been made, or if made not made in time to warrant the Chair in entertaining it.

Now, I want to say one word touching the proposed appropriations. The committee follow in the wake of numerous precedents. An appropriation like to this was made, as has already been said, in the case of a gentleman from Texas, worthily and properly made. I believe another was made in the case of a gentleman from North Carolina, and in one or two other cases, and I heartily approve of the action of the House in those cases.

I trust this House will not awaken suddenly to a sense of the necessity for pinching economy and draw the line just here. It occurs to me it is quite enough to do at this time what my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] suggests; that is, to give notice—and he will be a member of the next House—that hereafter every proposition of this kind will be antagonized. That is a fair notice. But to draw the line here and now is to discriminate against cases which are in the line of precedent and thoroughly worthy, and which have been favorably considered by the committee and reported to the House.

Mr. DUNN. Is that intended to discourage members from dying?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It may or may not have that effect; but if they die they will die with notice that their estates will not be generously dealt with by their fellow-members of Congress. I submit to the House, if they vote on the point of order, although I am satisfied, as I have stated, that the point of order is not really pending, this is not the time and occasion, and these are not the cases—the case of my late colleague from Ohio and others—in which this House should draw the line and have our economy "prick the sides of our intent" in this work of unjust discrimination.

One word more. It has been said there is a difference in these cases. A line is drawn between members elected to the next Congress and those who are not.

Mr. BROWNE. Not exactly; in the case of Mr. Smith we allow so much of the salary as had been earned up to the time of his death.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know that there is any difference in the cases submitted; there was no intention to make any distinction between the cases.

Mr. BLOUNT. How about the case of Mr. Herron, of Louisiana?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If there was any omission I am willing to correct it. It was not the fault of the committee, for whenever their attention was called to the matter they were ready to do in the one case just as they would do in another.

Mr. KING. I have in my hand a proposition in relation to Mr. Herron, of Louisiana.

Mr. BROWNE. That relates to the next Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the point of order, the Chair will state that he understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to rise after the gentleman from Indiana in front of the Chair [Mr. BROWNE] had commenced to speak. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who knows better than the Chair, says that he rose before the debate had commenced to make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection of an event occurring so recently is that my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] had addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Had he done more than merely address the Chair; had he spoken in debate?

Mr. HOLMAN. My impression is somewhat fixed from the fact that I had the bill before me, following the reading of the Clerk, and had intended to make the point of order on this and some other provisions of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. One moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to complete his statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But I desire to state one thing in that connection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I want to say that when the amendment was proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] I spoke on the amendment, and General BROWNE, of Indiana, followed me, and the point was not raised until General BROWNE had spoken.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] preceded General BROWNE——

Mr. HUMPHREY. I did.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman must be mistaken in that.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] offered the amendment. I was recognized by the Chair and spoke on that amendment. Then General BROWNE followed me, and no point of order was raised until General BROWNE spoke.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] spoke twice. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] did precede him at one time, but not on the other occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana in front of the Chair [Mr. BROWNE] was the first gentleman who rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. And when my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] rose and addressed the Chair I at once rose and inquired whether he reserved the point of order on the proposition, and the Chair answered in the manner stated, and I took my seat. I rose at the usual time, in the usual manner, and with the usual promptness, to make the point of order if my colleague had not made it.

The CHAIRMAN. On that statement the Chair will regard the point of order as having been made in time. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. On the point of order I desire to say that the law as it now stands provides for the compensation and mileage of members of Congress; that is subsisting law. Whoever is elected to Congress is entitled to the compensation and mileage provided by existing law.

That being so, it seems to me that a point of order can not be taken against this proposition, unless it be that it proposes to make provision for payment of a term of service not expired. It seems to me, however, that the fact that the law provides for the compensation and mileage of members is sufficient to give us jurisdiction of the subject, so as to entitle Congress legitimately and rightly on an appropriation bill like this to make provision for payment to the estates of persons who we may believe were entitled to compensation.

That is all I have to say on the point of order, and it seems to me it is sufficient.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question on the point of order?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that Congress may appropriate for the payment of one who has never been a member of Congress, simply one who has been elected but who died before his official term began?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not answer the question in direct terms. He who is elected by the voice of the people, who is entitled to the certificate of election, and who received it, or only failed to receive it on account of his death, is a member of Congress under the Constitution and the laws. It does not become necessary that he shall take the oath of office in order to become a member. He is a member by force of his election, and draws his pay before he takes the oath of office, draws it up to the time when he takes the oath of office, as every member here has done.

Mr. BROWNE. Does the gentleman insist in the case of Hon. J. T. Updegraff, for instance, that he was ever a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, a Congress which has not yet begun and can not commence until after the 4th of March next?

Mr. REAGAN. I think the gentleman understands me to say just this: If Dr. Updegraff was elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congoess he comes under the provision of law providing for his compensation and mileage. When the time shall begin for the commencement of his service that mileage and compensation would accrue to him; and Congress may now, it seems to me, without waiting until the next session—because I take it there could be no doubt about it then—Congress may now provide for the pay which had he lived would have been awarded to him at the commencement of the session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. After the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the Chair thinks he is bound to entertain the point of order. As already intimated, the Chair thinks it his duty to submit that point of order to the committee and will not take upon himself to decide a matter which may concern each member of the House and can be decided by the members.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I propose to come about as near to it as any gentleman here has done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been rather dilatory in having the point of order stated, but it is now before the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. From the current of the debate here I suppose that the practice of the House in the past will have very much to do with the conclusion of certain gentlemen as to whether or not it is proper to put such a provision as this on an appropriation bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is incorrect when he says that it has been always the usage to provide for the payment of salaries which would have become due to members of Congress had they been sworn in, had they not died—to provide for the payment of their legal representatives in case of their death. In that the gentleman is mistaken.

The first case that ever occurred of that kind was the case of Mr. Schleicher, of Texas. I think that since then there has only been one other case of the kind; if I mistake not it was the case of Mr. Clark, from Iowa. In the last Congress an effort was made to do the same thing for Mr. Farr, of New Hampshire; but the same feeling which is now shown here, that it was wrong to do such a thing, manifested itself then. There was a concession in the case of Mr. Farr, and we did not vote the full amount of his salary for the Congress to which he had been elected. We could not refuse to pay something after the precedent we had made in other cases; but Congress refused to pay the salary for the full term.

Notwithstanding that action of the last House we find several propositions here to pay the families of gentlemen who were elected to Congress and who by reason of death were not sworn in. We find several such cases in this bill, and we are notified that a number of others are to come. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. KING] very properly says that he proposes to submit a proposition to pay the family of Mr. Herron, of Louisiana, just as is done in a number of other cases contained in the bill, and rightly so if this is to be the policy of Congress from now on.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, we shall insert in this bill a provision that hereafter it shall not be lawful to make payments to the legal representatives of deceased members of Congress under such circumstances. I know it may be said that such a provision will not bind succeeding Congresses. The same thing was said with reference to the provision limiting the compensation to be allowed the parties in contested-election cases. These allowances had grown to such an enormous sum that Congress found it necessary to put into an appropriation bill a provision that no contestant should thereafter be paid for his expenses a greater amount than $2,000. The result has been that from the time of its enactment that provision has been respected by succeeding Congresses.

It has been argued here by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that an allowance of this kind to the family of a member-elect is perfectly legal. He says that under the circumstances the person is under the Constitution a member of the next Congress; and that this allowance may legitimately be made on an appropriation bill. If the gentleman is correct, then a general provision of law in this connection will relieve us of difficulty hereafter. We may follow in the present case the precedents urged upon us; but a provision of that kind placed upon the statute-book will in future restrain any Committee on Appropriations from reporting such a provision. I think we ought now to adopt such a proposition, without waiting until the next Congress. The very same difficulties will occur again and again forever if we wait until appeals in particular cases are made to us. I desire to have read an amendment which I would like to propose in this connection.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not object to my friend's discussing the question, but of course no amendment is yet in order, as the question of order is still pending.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not expect the amendment to be acted on now; I know it is not now in order; but I ask that it may be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the proposed amendment will be read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter when any member-elect of Congress may die before qualification as a member of the Congress to which he was elected, his heirs, widow, or legal representatives shall not be entitled to or allowed the salary or any part of the salary to which he would have been entitled if he had continued in life.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is not that the present law?

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] as to the law of this case. I think that a member of Congress, under the law, is not entitled to draw his salary until after the beginning of the term for which he is elected. The law provides that he shall draw his salary monthly; he is not extitled to it until the expiration of the month. Under the law he draws his salary month by month during the whole term.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. That is the practice, too.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not only the law, but as suggested to me it is the practice. Now, as the member if alive would not be entitled to the salary, how are his legal representatives entitled to it when he is dead? How can they be entitled after his death to that which he would not be entitled to receive if living? It seems to me this ought to settle the question.

I am familiar with the manner in which legislation of this kind has been ingrafted upon the statute-books. I confess it is a delicate subject to talk about; and I do not wish to utter any words in opposition to this appropriation; but that is not the question. The gentleman from Indiana has made a point of order, and I think he has made it correctly. I do not believe there is any law for this appropriation.

I know well how the precedent which has been referred to—the case of Mr. Schleicher—originated. Mr. Schleicher died just at the close of the term. It was understood that he was without means. He was a man of great personal popularity in the House. He had a very large family, to whom the universal sympathy of members was accorded. Thus, when the proposition was made to allow to his family the entire salary for the term for which he had been chosen, the House adopted it. After the provision had gone to the Senate, the sum was in the conference committee cut down to $6,000 upon the suggestion of Senator ALLISON, a member of that committee. That precedent led immediately to a similar allowance to the family of Mr. Rush Clark, who died during the Forty-fifth Congress, having been re-elected to the Forty-sixth. As a matter of course, he having been a member on the other side, the same amount—$6,000—which had been accorded to the family of Mr. Schleicher, a Representative on this side, was allowed to the family of Mr. Clark. Then Mr. Farr, of New Hampshire, died and these precedents were urged in favor of a similar allowance to his family. Then Mr. Fernando Wood died before the term for which he had been chosen in the Forty-seventh Congress began, and $6,000 were voted to the family of Mr. Wood.

A MEMBER. And Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. ATKINS. Oh, no; the family of Mr. O'Connor drew only $4,637.13—it is not stated for what.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. They did not get anything on account of his salary for the Forty-seventh Congress. The amount which the gentleman has stated was for the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. ATKINS. I believe the fact was as the gentleman from Georgia suggests, that Mr. O'Connor's family received only the salary for the unexpired term.

Now, this allowance has been made in the case of two Democratic members and two Republican members, $6,000 having been allowed in each case. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote this amount to the family of Mr. Updegraff. But if you agree to his you must make a similar allowance in the case of Mr. Herron, who has died since being elected a Representative from Louisiana in the Forty-eighth Congress. So far as the whole appropriation is concerned there is not a particle of law for any of it. It is simply, of course, the sympathy of the House. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is where we get all of our law; from the Committee on Appropriations. There is nothing else which gets through the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to say a word to the committee on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks proper indulgence on the point of order has been granted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not been heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the proposition is correct, then the legal representatives of J. T. Updegraff are entitled to pay for the entire term of the Forty-eighth Congress. That is clear beyond question. It is clear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would not attempt to go that far. I submit Congress has no right to make appropriation of money except for service to the United States. That implied constitutional limit must be recognized by every gentleman. While there is no specific limit in that instrument it inevitably follows when you come to the question of service to the Government and compensation for it you can not appropriate money out of the public Treasury except for some benefit to be derived by the Government, but here there is no compensation for it. And here there is no pretense of any. It is proposed to pay the legal representatives of Dr. Updegraff for services which he can never render and for a Congress of which he can never be a member.

Permit me to say an additional word. This is a matter of personal concern to each member of the House. It is one of those cases which go home to our hearts and sympathies. It concerns each one of us as a member of Congress. Now, can we afford as a matter of personal sympathy, can we afford under the oath we have taken, for that is the only basis of our action, to gratify that honorable and humane action by taking money out of the public Treasury? Can we afford to do it? I do not think we can.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the House to hear me for a moment only in relation to the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana that we can not pay out of the Treasury for services not rendered. As a complete answer to his statement let me say that every member of this Congress and every one who has been a member of Congress since the present law has been in existence has been paid for services he has not rendered from the beginning of the term for which he was elected up to the day on which he took his seat and was sworn in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the member in contemplation of law represent his constituents during the term for which he was elected?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly, in contemplation of law he is a member of Congress from the day he was elected, and it is presumed he is all the time engaged in preparing himself for the discharge of his duties. He goes through the labor and expense of his election and holds himself ready to respond to any call. I have only said this, Mr. Chairman, to show that the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] could not be acceptedin its whole extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the case to the committee arising on the paragraph to pay the legal representatives of Dr. Updegraff. It is admitted a part of this is in lieu of the compensation he would be entitled to if he had entered on the term of the Forty-eighth Congress. Provision is made by law for a member-elect before he is sworn into office to draw his pay from the beginning of the term for which he is elected. The Chair would have no difficulty so far as he entered upon that term.

The Chair desires simply to say, as a member of the House and as the occupant of the chair too, as he does not desire to shirk responsibility in submitting the question to the committee, that he does distinctly believe there is no warrant of law upon which this can be paid so far as the uncommenced term of the deceased member is concerned. But there is a question upon which there has been precedents, and as it is immediately within the province of the House the Chair submits it to the committee. Those who believe the paragraph is in order will vote "ay," and those who do not believe it is in order will vote "no."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 37.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be a division.

Mr. ATHERTON. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BUTTERWORTH as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 48.

So the paragraph was decided to be in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the Clerk now read my amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter if any member-elect of Congress may die before the beginning of the term for which he is elected his heirs, widow, or legal representatives shall not be entitled or allowed any salary or part of salary to which he would have been entitled if he had continued in life.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against that proposition. I want each individual case that comes before Congress to be governed by the circumstances surrounding it; and let each Congress for itself determine what shall be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the matter is to be discussed upon its merits I am quite willing to meet the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon that point. What I want to stop is to break up, if it be possible, this practice which we all know has begun to take a permanent hold in this House, and which we can not justify, of paying out compensation in such cases as this where no service has been rendered.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I have never in any instance given a vote for such an appropriation of money as is contemplated in these paragraphs of the pending bill that I did not feel I was given an entirely proper vote, and if the opportunity was given to me to-day I would not take back any vote I have ever given in that particular. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not remember how I may have voted in the past; but I do know, sir, that there are propositions not authorized by law which come in on appropriation bills, and will continue to come, making such payments, unless it is promptly checked. And it seems to me no gentleman can fairly consider that we can properly make such provision for the families of the deceased members as we have been doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is new legislation.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that as this is a question which involves one of the perquisites of members, perhaps it had better go to the House for a vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. Just as we did previously.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to taking a vote in the House on the proposition just passed.

Mr. RYAN. This proposition is so clearly out of order that it is hardly necessary to go through the formality of a vote upon it. The committee has already decided it.

Mr. WILSON. Let every Congress control its own action in this respect.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs that gentlemen will preserve order. No business can be transacted while gentlemen are occupying the floor in this manner. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he insists upon the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I have stated that I had no objection to a vote in the House upon the proposition just passed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think we ought to have a vote on this, as it involves to some extent our compensation, or is what might be called one of the perquisites of members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide that this being new legislation, and not coming within the rule——

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he insists upon the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not withdrawn it. I said that I had no objection to a vote in the House on the last case; I referred to the Updegraff clause of the bill, and if I did not so express it I should have said so. But I did not withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That remains in the bill. This is a proposition that looks to new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is practically the existing law now.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then why do you object to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is out of order.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I desire to offer an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to inquire first of the gentleman in charge of the bill if he did not offer an amendment, which is pending, in reference to the unpaid portion of the salary of Mr. Orth?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not offer it to this bill; it belongs properly to the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. Andrew S. Herron, elected to the Forty-eighth Congress from the sixth district of Louisiana, the sum of $5,000.

Mr. ATHERTON. I make the point of order upon that. I understand he had not entered upon his duties.

Mr. WILSON. Was he a member-elect?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes; and died in three weeks after the election.

Mr. ATHERTON. I insist that under the ruling of the Chair, as he had not entered upon the duties of his office, that this amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must follow the decision already made in committee; and the point of order being again made, will submit this also to the committee.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I thought it had been already decided that it was admissible by a vote of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. That has been settled by the House, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Louisiana if this relates to a gentleman who was not a member of the present Congress, but simply elected to the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. ROBERTSON. He was elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. But not of the Forty-seventh?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In the previous clause on which the committee divided the member for whose representatives provision was made had been elected to both Congresses and died while in office. The Chair therefore submits to the Committee of the Whole that this is a new form of the question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is not the same sum. I put it here at $5,000, which would be his salary for one year.

Mr. STEELE. Let the Forty-eighth Congress take care of that.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Chairman, if I read sections 40 and 41 of the Revised Statutes aright, I think a man must die in order to get his $5,000 salary legally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must insist upon gentlemen confining themselves closely to the point of order at this late date in the session.

Mr. FLOWER. I shall do so. I desire to call attention to these two sections, which are as follows:

SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

SEC. 41. When any Member or Delegate withdraws from his seat and does not return before the adjournment of Congress, he shall, in addition to the sum deducted for each day, forfeit a sum equal to the amount which would have been allowed by law for his traveling expenses in returning home; and such sum shall be deducted from his compensation, unless the withdrawal is with the leave of the Senate or House of Representatives, respectively.

You must die, therefore, to get the salary legally, because it will be seen that unless you are present here or assign as a reason for absence the sickness of yourself or family the disbursing officers are directed by law to deduct your salary for the time you are absent. But who ever heard of their doing it? I am opposed to this kind of appropriations. The money we are called upon to vote away by this amendment is not ours, but a trust fund belonging to our constituents, some of whom are poorer and needier than those to be benefited by this proposition. I can not vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit to the committee the point made by the gentleman from New York along with the point of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I understood the Chair to state to the House that the only reason the other question was submitted to the House was because the member having died in office the case raised a question that might go to the House; but if it was a case where he had not entered upon the duties of his office at all it was clear that kind of a case was obnoxious to the rule. Now, if that were so, should not the Chair decide the question and let the House take the responsibility of determining the question upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair, that it is in order to make this appropriation in the case of a man who was simply elected to an office and who, by reason of death, had been cut off from the privilege of rendering any duty for which he could be paid? Why is it that the Chair should submit a question of that kind to the House? Is it not so clear that no lawyer ought to risk his reputation by voting on such a point of order?

Mr. KING and Mr. REAGAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question, and deems no further debate on the point of order necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to reply to the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. It is impossible for the Chair to hear any individual when so many are talking. The gentleman from Texas will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say only a word on the point of order in answer to the argument submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON], which I understand sustains in a general way the statement made by the Chair to the House.

I understand Mr. Herron was not a member of the Forty-seventh Congress while Dr. Updegraff was a member of the Forty-seventh Congress. Now, to ascertain how much virtue and merit there is in that distinction I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that though Dr. Updegraff was a member of the Forty-seventh Congress this item must have included a portion of the money that would have been due to him for the Forty-eighth Congress. For at the time of his death three-fourths of his two years of service in the Forty-seventh Congress had expired and no $6,000 could have been due him. While he is described here as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress he in fact is paid as a member of the Forty-eighth. That is all that is proposed in the case of Mr Herron. If the allowance was right in the one case it can not be wrong in the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now desires to submit to the committee the question——

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word on the point of order, and will only detain the House a moment.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet before the gentleman from Illinois. I have again and again asked the Chair to hear me on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING], it is true, claimed the floor when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] was endeavoring to get a hearing. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana when the gentleman from Illinois shall have concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it fair on so important a question to alternate in the matter of recognition between the sides.

Mr. ATHERTON. Do I understand that side to be in favor of the Herron claim?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that death pays much respect to sides, so far as that is concerned.

I did not vote on the point of order a few moments ago; and I do not know any reason why the committee should have held the clause to be in order except that some years ago, when Mr. Schleicher, of Texas, died, a man in poor circumstances and a member of Congress when he died, and also a member-elect of the incoming Congress, the precedent was set under the impulse of personal sympathy of giving his representatives $6,000 or $7,000. Perhaps that precedent has been followed. But I do not know of any case where a Congress has gone forward and made this allowance for a member of a succeeding Congress.

Gentlemen say there is no reason why they should not do so. Well, after all has been said there is no reason in law why either should have been done. And it occurs to me that it is perhaps better to stop and let the incoming Congress take the responsibility of appropriating to the representatives of its own deceased members.

Mr. ATKINS. In the very case the gentleman cites Congress did that very thing—in the case of the representatives of Mr. Schleicher.

Mr. RYAN. He was a member of the preceding Congress.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, gentlemen say, because impelled by sympathy, we should go on and establish a dozen other bad precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. KING. I wish to address my remarks to the point of order. The Chair ruled a moment ago the proposition was to combine the payment of the unpaid balance of salary of the deceased member from Ohio for the Forty-seventh Congress with the payment of salary for a year to come. This side of the House, so far as I am aware, certainly understood that to be the situation; and on that understanding I governed my action, believing that if the proposition was voted upon, and if the point of order was determined in favor of the proposition, it would cover both cases.

Now, the Chair undertakes to divide and separate the questions, and say this is a new proposition entirely, instead of treating it as one proposition, when one-half of it has been settled by the House. I say it is not fair so to do. This proposition should be considered as having been combined with the other, and as having been settled by the last vote of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question to the committee.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Before the question is taken I submit it has been already decided by the House; because it is clear that although Dr. Updegraff was a member of the Forty-seventh Congress this distinctly provides for the payment of his salary as a member-elect to the Forty-eighth Congress.

It is true that while both propositions were submitted, it was distinctly enunciated by the Chair, I think, that although there could be no question whatever raised as to the payment of the unexpired balance due Dr. Updegraff as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress, the whole question was submitted to the Committee of the Whole, including the proposition that he should be paid as a member of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. There need be no confusion at all on the two points. The gentleman confuses what the Chair said in his capacity as a member of the House, which was that he did not desire to avoid any responsibility upon whatever should be ruled in order by the Committee of the Whole. The Chair, of course, could take no notice whatever of the amount of the old salary of Mr. Updegraff which had not been drawn and the amount which was included for the new term. There was a gross sum given to a man who was a member of this Congress, with a recital of the fact that he was a member-elect of the next Congress. The Committee of the Whole decided that such a proposition was in order.

The reason why the Chair does not accept that decision of the committee as applying to this case is that the proposition is one relating wholly to the compensation of a gentleman who was elected to the next Congress and who was not a member of this Congress at all. The Chair will ask the Clerk to again read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. Andrew Herron, member-elect of the Forty-eighth Congress from the sixth district of Louisiana, the sum of $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair therefore takes the same course in this case as he took in the other, and will submit the question to the committee under the right reserved to the Chair in such cases. The question is, Will the committee receive the proposed amendment as in order on this bill?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 36, noes 39.

Mr. KING. I call for tellers.

Mr. REAGAN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BROWNE and Mr. ROBERTSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 62, noes 61.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was received.

The question was then taken upon the amendment; and it was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move as an amendment, to come in after line 1858, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Mary A. Orth, the widow of the late Hon. Godlove S. Orth, the amount of salary due him as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress, $1,072.03.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to inquire of the Chair if we are still amending the paragraph ending with line 1858?

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph has not yet been reached.

The amendment offered by Mr. HISCOCK was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I now move to strike out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order against that motion. These propositions which have been voted into the bill are all separate paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out what has been inserted and also the original paragraph in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. They are entirely distinct propositions.

Mr. REAGAN. They are distinct and separate paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair entertains the motion as in order.

Mr. REAGAN. The rule is to consider this bill by paragraphs, and these are all independent paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. But the amendments which have been adopted are amendments to the pending paragraph of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to paying the balance of the salary due any member from the time of his death until the close of the Forty-seventh Congress. But I am opposed to the principle of having the Forty-seventh Congress pay the salary of any one for any portion of the Congress to commence on the 4th day of March, 1883.

This House does not know who will be the members of the Forty-eighth Congress. This House does not know whether Jonathan T. Updegraff or Andrew Herron of Louisiana were elected members of that Congress or not. We might upon the same principle appropriate $5,000 to any person.

I want to know who can tell me that the seat of Mr. Herron, of Louisiana, may not be contested by some person in the next Congress, in the same manner as Mr. MACKEY, from South Carolina, contested the seat of Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. KING. There is no contest in this case.

Mr. MILLER. And if it should be decided that he was not elected to the Forty-eighth Congress why should we pay him any salary?

It is a matter that this House does not know anything about. The very moment we commence to make appropriations to pay persons elected to future Congresses we set a precedent that ought not to be established. And if this House does it it will have to do it by the votes of a majority of a quorum.

Mr. WILSON. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Many MEMBERS on both sides of the Hall. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard one gentleman in favor of the proposed motion to strike out, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] to speak in opposition to it.

Mr. WILSON. In reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] that this Congress has no power over this subject—and the legal question is all I desire to say anything about—I have heard to-day for the first time that this Congress can not provide for the salaries of members of the succeeding Congress.

This Congress possesses the legal authority and power to say when the salaries of members of the next Congress shall be paid, and how much they shall be paid. It is an honorable practice, a humane practice, begun years ago, to appropriate a portion if not the whole of the salary of a deceased member for the benefit of his family; and I hope that the humanity and propriety of members of this House will never lead them to depart from that practice.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. MILLER to strike out the paragraph and all amendments thereto; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 71.

Mr. MILLER. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLER and Mr. WILSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 85.

So the motion of Mr. MILLER was not agreed to.

The Committee of the Whole rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the bill (H. R. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of the late Hon. James Q. Smith his salary as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress, to the date of his death, with mileage and stationery, $6,425.18, less any sum that may have been paid on account.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph last read the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To convert the rooms adjoining the old Hall of Representatives, excepting the rooms occupied as the document and stationery rooms, together with the rooms and passages connected with them in the gallery story, including the gallery itself and the space over the entablature of the colonnade at the south end of the hall, to the use of the library of the House of Representatives, and make the same to connect with the Library of Congress through the document-room, $10,000.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, by expending of $10,000 the House library, the little room upstairs back of the clock, can be carried to the entablature and through the gallery of the old Hall into the adjoining room, thus providing space for nearly 150,000 volumes, all that we can ever want for the House library. We now have for the accommodation of the House library, as members will recollect, only the little room opening from the east side of this Hall and the small room opening upon the same floor as the gallery. The books belonging to the House library are for the most part packed away in boxes down in dark rooms. With this proposed expenditure we can, as I have said, afford space for 150,000 volumes; and we can have adjoining the stationery and document rooms at least two very nice library-rooms. There is already a communicating door between the document-room and the Congressional Library. Thus we shall have the House library in communication, through the document-room, with the Congressional Library. I believe that the amendment has the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment last adopted the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay, at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether a similar amendment has not been offered at the close of almost every Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know.

Mr. WILSON. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that question. I believe an appropriation of this kind is an honorable custom which ought to be followed by us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a proposition of this kind was presented at the last session, when the present occupant of the Chair was presiding; and he then stated that in a matter affecting so directly the officers and usages of the House, he would not take upon himself the responsibility of deciding the question of order, but would submit it to the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of those who may remember the facts whether this is the usual provision.

Mr. VALENTINE. It is.

Mr. KENNA. It has been adopted on many occasions, I know.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say this, let the provision be omitted from this bill, and if it is in accordance with custom I will see that it is placed upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOUSE. It is the usual provision.

Mr. WILSON. Let it go on this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. The custom, I believe, has been to give one month's extra pay to session employés, although last year this additional compensation was extended also to annual employés.

Mr. HISCOCK. Whatever is customary we will provide for on the deficiency bill.

Mr. KENNA. I will state to the gentleman from New York that this is the bill upon which similar provision has been heretofore made.

Mr. WILSON. This is a very proper place for the proposition, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish to understand whether the gentleman from New York stated that he would report a provision of this kind upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say that we will report upon the deficiency bill the usual provision, whatever it is. If this is the usual provision, we will report this.

Mr. KENNA. A provision exactly similar to this was adopted upon this bill at the last session.

Mr. HISCOCK. If it is customary, we will report it upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOUSE. Why not let it go on this bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. Because I desire to look into the matter.

Mr. HOUSE. I must insist on my amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that at the last session of Congress, on my motion, a proviso similar to this was put on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Precisely like this.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, precisely the same. The difference between this and the customary resolution or amendment is that this carries the annual employés of the House as well as those borne on the session rolls. This is precisely the amendment I moved to the sundry civil bill at the last session of Congress. If you will take what the Chairman suggested a moment ago as the customary amendment then you will not get what this resolution embraces, for this takes those borne on the session rolls and on the annual rolls. That precedent was established by the amendment I offered to the sundry civil bill at the last session of Congress. Here is where we put it, and here in my judgment is where it ought to be inserted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will consent to its going on the deficiency bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It does not belong to the deficiency bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to have the amendment again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to call the attention of my colleague from Tennessee to the suggestion that he include in his amendment the session employés of the Senate.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let each body take care of its own employés.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish simply to read the provision from the sundry civil bill of last session as it became law.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must confine themselves to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply ask to read the provision of the sundry civil bill for the current fiscal year:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and sessions rolls on the 15th day of June, 1882, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

That, I believe, has been copied verbatim by the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HOUSE. Precisely. It was also adopted in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I am for the amendment; but it is not germane to this bill. Its place is in the deficiency bill. This provides for the service of next year. The deficiency bill is yet to be reported, and this properly belongs in that bill. I consider, therefore, the point of order to be well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair perhaps may in view of the precedents decline to sustain the point of order. On the main question of the point of order, however, the Chair again submits it to the committee for its decision. The question is, Shall the provision be considered as in order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me remind my friend from Indiana of the fact that this same provision was put into the sundry civil apppropriation bill in the Forty-sixth Congress at the instance of the present Speaker of the House of Representatives. There is, therefore, more than one precedent for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. So far as the history of this proposed legislation is concerned, I wish to say the practice of paying a month's additional compensation is of recent origin. There is no law for it, and my recollection is it does not go beyond the Forty-fifth Congress. Furthermore, it has been confined heretofore, according to my memory, to the first session of a Congress upon the ground the session employés are employed for quite a long period and have a large amount of business to do, and therefore such a provision for the long session is not unreasonable. That is the argument heretofore used for granting such extra month's pay during the long session of Congress. When the annual employés of Congress are only employed for a period of three months, it is now proposed by this amendment, as I understand it, to give them an additional month's pay, for this applies to the annual employés as well as to the session employés.

Mr. McMILLIN. It applies to both.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I understand that it applies to both. It applies, then, to the best paid employés of the Government as all know, and to those who are employed for only a period of three months at this short session. That is the proposition to give them an extra month's pay. Point to any instance where this has been done as to the regular employés of this House for a short session. It has been done during the long session on account of the large amount of work done. It is now proposed to adopt a new rule and apply it to the short session. So far as my memory extends, Mr. Chairman, this is without precedent.

So, Mr. Chairman, there can be no pretense that there is either law or precedent for this, if I am correct. I certainly have not been able to find any, and I do not think any has been cited by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana say that there is no precedent for the payment of this extra compensation at the close of a short session of Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection is that it has been confined entirely to the Forty-fifth Congress and since, and even then to the long session instead of the short session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that there used to be an extra percentage allowed. If there has been no precedent the Chair will take the responsibility of ruling upon the question; but declines to rule where the House has set a precedent, and prefers to submit the matter to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Chairman, in the short session of the Forty-sixth Congress, if I am not entirely mistaken, a resolution in all respects similar to this was passed, and included also both classes of employés. I think that will be found to be the case on examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the committee: Shall the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee be held to be in order?

The question was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 48.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make that point now; let us get through with the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding that we can have a yea-and-nay vote on this in the House I will not insist upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. You would be entitled to a vote in the House, this being an amendment to the bill, if you have a sufficient number to call the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the motion is ruled by the committee to be in order and the Chair will submit the question to the House.

The question is now upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KLOTZ. I now wish to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "annual" add the word "semi-annual."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon that. That is certainly a change of existing law.

Mr. KLOTZ. Let it be read in connection with the amendment just agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "annual" the word "semi-annual;" so that it will read if amended:

"Borne on the annual, semi-annual, and session rolls."

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to hear the gentleman from New York make the distinction between the point of order upon this and the point of order upon the preceding proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the responsibility of ruling upon the point of order if there be no precedent. If there is the Chair desires to have it stated.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no precedent so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. There being none the Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional expenses of the folding-room to January 1, 1884, namely:

"For rent of building, $300; feed for horse, $120; salary of driver, $300; salary of night-watchman, $450; repairs, $50; in all, $1,420."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BISBEE. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Hon. JOHN R. LYNCH $2,800, the balance of his expenses incurred as contestant for a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. BISBEE. For a moment.

Mr. Chairman, the amount named in that amendment is the excess of the expenditures incurred by Mr. LYNCH over the amount allowed him in conducting his contest for a seat to a successful termination in this Congress. Now, sir, this committee have instructed the Chair that a proposition to give, if you please, by way of gratuity, a sum to the widow or legal representatives of members-elect to the next Congress is in order. There was no law for it, but the committee have instructed the Chair that such a proposition was in order. We have an act of Congress authorizing election contests. We have an act of Congress fixing the amount that shall be paid to officers taking testimony, fixing the sum that shall be paid to witnesses and for their mileage and per diem. Mr. LYNCH has incurred these expenses legitimately in prosecuting his case to obtain a seat in this House.

Mr. WILSON. What evidence have you?

Mr. BISBEE. I am aware that there was smuggled into the sundry civil bill of the Forty-fifth Congress a limitation upon the expenses of contestees to $2,000, and I am aware that strictly under that law this amendment would be subject to a point of order. But I submit this amendment hoping the committee will agree to it, for the reason that this committee has already determined that it is in order to pay a given sum of money to the widow or to the heirs of a gentleman that never was a member of Congress at all; and I submit that a gentleman who has prosecuted his case to success and obtained his seat and has expended all that he is worth to do it, is as much entitled to the sympathy of this committee as the widow or the heirs of a deceased member elected to a future Congress. I suggest, sir, that the point of order at least should be submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees nothing in the way of a precedent here to require him to submit the question of order to the committee. It does not involve the same matter as the point of order in the former cases. The Chair understands the gentleman to concede that the amendment is subject to the point of order. The Chair rules it out of order.

The Clerk read the last paragraph of the bill, lines 1875 to 1882, as follows:

To pay Frederick W. Steigelman, being the difference between his salary at $1,000, and that of a messenger at $1,200 per annum, from July 1, 1882, to June 30, 1883, $200, the same to be immediately available; but this appropriation shall not be construed as an increase of said salary.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I send up an amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BROWNE. I want to make a point of order on this before any amendment is offered or discussion begins.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Indiana on the right [Mr. HOLMAN] rose to make a point of order on the last clause of the bill. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Indian correctly?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE], whose amendment will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1882, insert the following:

"And to pay E. D. Fitch, being the difference between his salary as a folder at $720 and that of a clerk in the folding-room at $1,200 per annum, from May 4, 1882, to March 4, 1883, $400, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. BROWNE. I make the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law, increases salary, and is not in the direction of economy.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the amendment or on the clause?

Mr. BROWNE. On both.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BROWNE. I might withdraw it but for the fact that there are about one hundred and fifty similar amendments to be pressed if that is admitted.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to know if that amendment is connected with the last clause of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to make payment to another person. The Chair does not understand that the amendment rests on existing law, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. KLOTZ. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1882 add the following:

"And the members of the Capitol Police, each one month's extra pay."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. KLOTZ. This House has agreed to give a month's extra pay to the sessional employés and the annual employés. If there is any equity in giving a month's extra pay to either of those classes, and if such an appropriation is in order simply because there is one precedent for it away back, then this also is in order. This class of employés are as certainly deserving as the other class. While the others serve three months, get a month's extra pay and then go home for six months at a time, these gentlemen work day and night on Sundays and week days. Now, if the point of order can be made against those men or if equity is against them it certainly must be against the others also. I have no objection to the appropriation made for the others, but I say it is right and just when you do give money away you should give it to these deserving men as well as to the other class of employés. There is no more deserving class than these men who stand up Sundays and week days, night and day, watching the Capitol in storm, rain, and sunshine. If the extra compensation is right in the one case it is right in the other also.

The CHAIRMAN. The argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the merits. The Chair is bound to sustain the point of order in the absence of precedent.

Mr. KLOTZ. I suggest that the Chair submit the point of order to the Committee of the Whole, so as to give both an equal chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would do that if there were precedents in this case as well as in the other.

Mr. KLOTZ. I hope the Chair will submit it to the House. It is the House which makes the law. The Chair submitted the point of order in the other case of the members' pay, and if the House could make a law in that case it should do so now, for the poor as well as the rich.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not differ with the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the relative merits of his proposition.

Mr. KLOTZ. To test the sense of the Committee of the Whole I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment is not in order, from which decision the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ] appeals. The Chair submits the question: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask consent to recur to a previous part of the bill, that I may move an amendment, to come in after line 1036, on page 43.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After line 1036 insert:

"For building the sea-wall on the west side and southeastern portion of Governor's Island, New York Harbor, $15,000, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. KLOTZ. Point of order! No precedent. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the point of order, I ask the gentleman from New York to state the facts.

Mr. HISCOCK. The facts are these: In the last appropriation act we provided a certain sum of money for this work. My associates on the committee will remember the earnest appeal made for it by General Hancock who took the trouble to come to Washington to see us.

Mr. ATKINS. Will this sum complete it?

Mr. HISCOCK. It will.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the continuation of a work in progress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I also ask to recur to a previous part of the bill and to offer an amendment to come in after line 315 on page 14.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board to apply the money herein appropriated other than for surveys as far as can be without detriment to the interests of the Goverment by contract. Where work can not be done or materials purchased by contract without injury to the public interest it may be prosecuted by hired labor and materials purchased in open market.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the question of order until I hear the first part of the proposition read again.

The first portion of the amendment was again read.
